Mr. Barry Field: I am obliged to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), because I have sat here for almost five hours listening to the arguments on the International Westminster Bank Bill and this Bill. The hon. Gentleman has come close to making two points with which I agree. The first is that the private Bill procedure of this House is clearly in considerable need of overhaul and modernisation: I align myself with his comments. The second is that he informed the House that he had received a letter from the Isle of Wight Labour party. I am obliged to him for that remark, because the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) rather gave the impression that, when I make a statement in the House, its veracity might be called into question.

As the hon. Member for Bolsover pointed out, no member of the Liberal party is present tonight, despite the fact that the Isle of Wight is the only county council that the Liberal party controls. It is remarkable that the Liberals are not here tonight to lend their weight and support to what is essentially a county council Bill.

The House passed the original Isle of Wight County Council Act in 1971. As the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) said, the original Act is intended to control open-air events such as pop festivals. It could be said that the Isle of Wight had one of the first acid house parties in the early 1960s. We have sought our own private Act because of our difficulties in controlling such large-scale open-air events. We wanted to ensure that those events were properly regulated, with proper hygiene arrangements on site and proper controls. As a result of an amendment to the Act, a prosecution was brought last year, but it was found in the magistrates to be defective.

The Lords amendments to this Bill are entirely drafting amendments. They were intended to bring the Bill into line and hopefully ensure that, when it is enacted, it will be possible to prosecute those who do not comply with the Act's requirements.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

12.15 am

Mr. Field: I will give way when I have finished my point.

Since I was elected, I have witnessed many bizarre occasions. However, if someone had told me that I would stand here tonight and witness the Labour party supporting the actions of the National Front, I would have been staggered. The failed prosecution to which I have referred, came about as a result of events at the last scooter rally held by the National Front on the Isle of Wight. It is remarkable that the Labour party should support the National Front tonight.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that the problem with defending civil liberties is that sometimes we have to defend them for people whom we find totally objectionable? It is very difficult to confer civil rights on people we detest. Will the hon. Gentleman explain how the 1971 Act got into a mess in the first place? The original Act passed through the private Bill procedure, but because that scrutiny was unsatisfactory, the prosecution to which the hon. Gentleman referred collapsed in the magistrates court. Would it not be better to have Government legislation on the issue, as that would be much more likely to stand up in a magistrates court?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the House that the question before us is that the Lords amendments be now considered. We are discussing drafting amendments to a Bill that was given an unopposed Second Reading. It is not appropriate this evening to discuss the merits of the Bill. They have already been decided.

Mr. Field: Thank you very much, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for your very helpful comments.

We are discussing the Lords amendments, which are intended to guard the civil liberties of the people of the Isle of Wight against the actions of the National Front. It is extraordinary that the Labour party should be seeking to support the National Front tonight.

Mr. Martin Redmond (Don Valley): I have sat here for several hours. I also listened to the proceedings on the Isle of Wight Bill in Committee Upstairs. We listened to the arguments, and at no time did anyone mention that the Bill was intended to stop National Front gatherings on the Isle of Wight. If the Bill is intended to specifically stop the National Front, the Bill should say so. It does not. Tonight is the first time that I have heard it said that National Front members are the only people who organise large-scale gatherings on the Isle of Wight.

It is true that the Bill received an unopposed Second Reading. Tonight, however, I had expected the hon. Member for Isle of Wight to tell us why we should consider the amendments. There is no doubt that the amendments leave a lot to be desired.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not want to inhibit the hon. Gentleman from discussing the amendments, but I wonder whether this is the appropriate time to do so. We are discussing whether the Lords amendments should be considered. When we have resolved that matter, the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) and other hon. Members can discuss the substance or the merit of the amendments.

Mr. Redmond: I accept your guidance at all times in such matters—[HON. MEMBERS: "Sit down, then."] I certainly shall not sit down, until I have made the points I want to make. Perhaps you should inform one or two hon. Members, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that, if they are unwell, they should go home.

In Committee, one listens to the barristers and to the petitioners as they make their points about the Bill. One also has the opportunity to ask questions, but, unfortunately, once one has spoken, one is not allowed a second chance to do so. Unfortunately, I was unable to ask the questions I wanted answered because the hon. Member for Isle of Wight did not get off his backside to tell us why the amendments had been made. As soon as he had spoken, however, someone moved the closure. If we are to consider amendments properly, they should be referred back to the Committee that originally considered them.

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): Will the hon. Gentleman be able to give exactly the same attention to all the Lords amendments to the South Yorkshire Light Rail Transit Bill when we come to discuss it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: One Bill at a time. We can worry about that Bill when we come to it.

Mr. Redmond: I will not respond to threats. I consider that I am well paid to spend my time here, but many hon. Members might sooner be home in bed—I do not know whose.

Mr. Harry Barnes: The hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) claimed that it was strange that we were opposing the Bill, given that it had the support of the Isle of Wight Labour party and the political connotations attached to it. No Opposition Member has spoken against the Bill. We are discussing whether the amendments should be considered and procedural matters. We are also discussing whether it is right to go ahead with the Bill in its present form without being given an explanation for its present state.

Mr. Redmond: My hon. Friend makes that point admirably.

I went along to the Vote Office to collect the private Bill and the amendments to it. Unfortunately, I was unable to obtain them, and you will recollect, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I raised a point of order about Lords amendments being unavailable. I went back to the Vote Office and managed to obtain a copy of the amendments that someone had managed to find somewhere. Originally, I asked to be given all the Lords amendments, so that I could consider them properly to ensure that they were technical, substantive and worthy of discussion. Fifteen minutes ago, we went back and managed to get hold of the Lords amendments to the Isle of Wight Bill.

Mr. Skinner: My hon. Friend has little alternative but to look at the 19 different amendments and go through them. We can try to help one another by starting at the beginning and seeing which ones are important, which are less important and which should be opposed. Perhaps they should all be opposed—who knows? In the absence of any, or very little, consideration being given to the matter by the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) and the fact that the Liberals who control the council are not here to provide us with information, there is only one alternative left. My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davies) touched on it: we must go through the amendments.

We do not have a verbatim report from the House of Lords so we shall have to start the process. There are about three pages, and we should quietly go through the amendments——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The rule of the House in these matters is that Members speak only once unless they have the unanimous consent of the House. Repeated interventions that are of the duration of speeches transgress that rule. The other convention of the House is that interventions should be brief.

Mr. Redmond: It is quite obvious that we cannot possibly give the amendments due consideration unless we have time to do so. It may be that they are all acceptable, but they may not be. Unless one is a lawyer—I am not, thank God—one needs more time to consider exactly what a particular amendment means. The Bill may have been there an hour or so later, but it certainly was not there this morning when I went to pick up all the Bills. Therefore, I could not spend a day or so giving due consideration to what, if anything, I should say.

It appears that Conservative Members are not interested in passing good legislation. I do not know what would happen if a bad private Bill left this House. Who would rectify it if it proved to be a bad piece of legislation? Would the Secretary of State for the Environment go charging into the courts to secure an amendment? I am not quite sure. Therefore, it is important to give due consideration to the Lords amendments to the Isle of Wight Bill to see whether we should debate them.

When we give them due consideration, the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) might say what the amendments would do.

Mr. Cryer rose——

Mr. Redmond: Let me make this point. It would certainly be helpful to me to be able to say that an amendment was correct.

It is untrue to say, as the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight did, that I support the National Front. Perhaps some Conservative Members have closer links with the National Front than I do, because I do not support it.

Mr. Hind: Does the hon. Gentleman not agree that, if we analyse the arguments of him and his hon. Friends this evening about the Isle of Wight Bill, the availability of the Lords' debates material, the unsatisfactory nature of those debates, the failure of schedules of details on the amendments, the fact that we should debate this in the context of a miscellaneous provisions Bill, they can be seen to be equally valid for every other Bill on the Order Paper? Those Bills include one in which I am sure the hon. Gentleman has an interest: the South Yorkshire Light Rail Transit Bill. Will the right hon. Gentleman accept that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander? What he is arguing could equally be said of a Bill that he supports.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Let us stick to whether we should or should not consider the Lords amendments.

12.30 am

Mr. Redmond: I accept your guidance, Sir. I hope that hon. Members will confine their remarks to these Lords amendments, and not hint at what might happen to future private Bills on the agenda.

[Mr. Redmond]

I agree that we need a different system, but we need one that is accountable. Many Bills going through the House should be considered by local councillors. In this case, the Lords have submitted amendments, and we cannot challenge the reasons for them. We cannot ask the Clerks to explain what the promoters or the parliamentary agents may or may not want. Parliamentary agents may have ulterior reasons for their suggestions. If we had been able to discuss them in a proper Committee, we might not have had to spend the night deciding whether to consider the Lords amendments. I will not allow the matter to pass without comment.

My hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, North (Mr. Welsh) said that he was suspicious by nature. I am not—I like to trust people—but over the past two years my trust has been misplaced and taken advantage of. I come from Yorkshire, and I am a little naive about how the City sharks operate——

Question accordingly agreed to.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House doth agree with the Lords in the said amendments.—[The Chairman of Ways and Means.]

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Could you tell us how you intend to deal with this? Is there to be a debate on the first amendment, followed by our proceeding to a vote if we wish; or do you intend us to debate several amendments together, followed by votes on each?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): It would be more convenient for the House and in accordance with our normal custom if we had a general debate on all the Lords amendments. We could consider later how to reach a decision on the amendments.

Mr. Bennett: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. When I look at the amendments I have difficulty understanding whether all the amendments hang together and deal with one issue or whether they cover a wide range of issues. Can you give guidance on whether they all hang together? Unfortunately, I could not find a selection list in the Noes Lobby.

Mr. Deputy Speaker I think that it would be for the convenience of the House if we proceeded in the way that I have suggested rather than tried to split them up artificially.

1 am

Mr. Skinner: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have the list of 19 amendments and it is more than a little difficult to find out where one ends and the other begins. I discussed the matter with the Clerk who was in the Chamber earlier. He had a list, and I suppose that he left it for the next Clerk. He marked the precise amendments. The amendments are different in terms of the part of the Bill to which they relate, so we should discuss them separately. The first amendment reads:

> '(2) By the Isle of Wight Act 1980 it was provided that the said section 5 should continue to have effect notwithstanding the provisions of section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972:'"

The other amendments are completely different.

We managed to deal with two or three amendments at the same time when we considered the International Westminster Bank Bill. That was a comparatively minor Bill compared with this one, which covers a whole range of powers for the local authority. For the life of me, I do not see how we can have a general debate on the granting of powers relating to acid house parties, rallies and so on without hearing from the hon. Member for Isle of Wight. It is like considering together 15 schedules to a Government Bill. Each amendment should be considered separately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is customary to debate the amendments together, and a number of them hang together. I am sure that with its usual ingenuity, the House will find no difficulty covering all the points that need to be covered. It would be better to debate the amendments that are now before us.

Mr. Nellist: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I agree with my hon. Friends the Members for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) and for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) that it is difficult to decipher all these pages of amendments. My point of order is very practical. You will note that the first amendment says:

and then it says:

> "Section 5 should continue to have effect notwithstanding the provisions of section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972:'"

I know that this is not a Committee stage, but were it the Committee stage of a normal Bill, it would be incumbent on the responsible Department to provide for hon. Members who intended to take part in the debate an explanatory memorandum so that we could understand what other legislation is being referred to.

Can you explain to me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, whose responsibility it is to provide us with sufficient copies—for the 150 or so hon. Members who obviously want to take part in the debate, or they would not be listening to me so patiently—of extracts from legislation such as section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972 as would enable us to see precisely how the Lords amendments affect existing legislation?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think it is quite clear that it is not for the Chair to explain what the hon. Gentleman asks, but, if we get on with the debate, he might get answers to the questions that he is asking. We shall now continue with the debate on the Lords amendments.

Mr. Nellist: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am not trying to be difficult. There are about 100 hon. Members in the Chamber, and I do not think that one has a copy of section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972. Those of us who want to take part in the debate want to know whose responsibility it is to supply copies of it. None is available in the Vote Office. I have been there, and the only thing I can get hold of is a copy of the Lords amendments. Whose responsibility is it to provide other bits of information so that we can get on with the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a matter for hon. Members. If we get on with the debate, we may get answers to such questions.

Mr. Redmond: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I had hoped that the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) would have got up and explained the Lords amendments and how they affect the Bill that was discussed in Committee.

It emerged in Committee that the desire to control crowds and facilities for them was the main reason for the Bill. Since then, Conservative Members have said that that was not said. The Vote Office was unable to give me a copy of the Lords amendments until quite recently. If we had had copies this morning, when we asked for them, we could have examined the amendments and decided whether to support them. We have not had much time to consider the amendments, so I ask the hon. Member for Isle of Wight, once again, to give us the benefit of the knowledge that he should have gained as the Member of Parliament for the Isle of Wight.

The House should not pass any measure that would be detrimental to the people of the Isle of Wight. Hon. Members should consider the amendments more carefully.

Mr. Harry Barnes: My hon. Friend said that the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) should explain the amendments. Some of the amendments appear to be technical and only alter words here and there. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight should take us through—I have had to number he amendments myself—amendments Nos. 10, 5 and 12, which make major changes.

Mr. Redmond: I accept what my hon. Friend says. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight had an opportunity briefly to explain the Bill on Second Reading. He failed to do so; it was moved formally and accepted. We cannot allow things to continue in that way.

I remember that the Local Government Act 1972 was huge. One needs it to hand to understand the implications of the first amendment. It is all very well for hon. Members to say that I should have checked it in the Library, but to have done so I would have needed the Lords amendments in my hand this morning. I have grave reservations about whether the amendments should be made because I am not sure of their implications. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight should explain the implication of the amendments.

Mr. Barnes: Section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972 is several pages long. The Bill amends provisions of the Isle of Wight County Council Act 1971. The Isle of Wight Act 1980 waived the provisions in section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972. It is beyond me to understand which part of those Acts is changed by the amendment. I believe that it is beyond hon. Members, because no one has sorted it out.

Mr. Redmond: I am extremely grateful to my hon. Friend for explaining that.

Everything is as clear as mud, and fully to understand the Bill one should have the relevant documents. Given the substantial changes that the amendments would make, the Bill should return to Committee.

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for the hon. Gentleman to continue speaking after he has clearly fallen asleep?

Mr. Redmond: I am sure that, just before I fall asleep, hon. Members will hear me cough. When they hear that, they will think, "He is heading for noddy land." Interruptions tend to disrupt the flow of one's speech.

Does the hon. Member for Isle of Wight intend to explain? If he will do his job efficiently and thoroughly, I am willing to sit down to let him explain. However, I am convinced that there will be silence from him.

1.15 am

Mr. Michael Welsh: The first Lords amendment deals with a point only four lines into the Bill, which is nearly unbelievable. I cannot get to the bottom of the matter. The local authorities want the power to control large overnight assemblies in the open. Does that mean that if there is a boy scouts' jamboree, they can control it, but if there is an acid house party, they may have no desire to control it? I should be grateful if my hon. Friend could explain the meaning of the first Lords amendment, which applies so early in the Bill.

Mr. Redmond: In the debate on the International Westminster Bank Bill, my hon. Friend questioned the judgment of the people who had produced the legislation. I should love to be able to say that everything is crystal clear so that the House can make a decision. Unfortunately, I cannot do that. I was not with their Lordships when they produced these amendments. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight should intervene to allay our fears. In wanting to control large assemblies, do the local authorities want to control acid house parties, Nazi or National Front gatherings—to which reference was made earlier—or boy scouts' jamborees? The latter are also large organised gatherings, and many lads and girl guides enjoy them.

I am not a suspicious man, but what has transpired over the past few months has turned my trusting nature into one of suspicion. I now question everything. People can put over things quite nicely. We know that everyone wants to say, "We had a good day," and go home to bed and have a good night's kip.

Mr. Nellist rose——

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I draw your attention to "Erskine May", which states:

> "The Speaker has also stated that it is the custom for Members to wear jackets and ties."

I have raised this matter several times with Mr. Speaker. He has ruled that he will not call Members who are not properly attired for the Chamber.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) is wearing a jacket and tie. Mr. Redmond.

Mr. Nellist: Can my hon. Friend assist——

Mr. Jeremy Hanley (Richmond and Barnes): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I clearly heard you call the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist). It is the third time in the past half hour that you have called him. We are in danger of a precedent being set as not only is he not wearing a jacket when you have called him, but he has his shirt sleeves rolled up. Will you please ask him to withdraw from the Chamber until he is properly dressed, or not call him again?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know that Mr. Speaker has dealt with this matter on a number of occasions. He has requested normal dress in the Chamber, but he has never said that it is an absolute condition for an hon. Member being called. He has merely deprecated abnormal dress. I call Mr. Nellist.

Mr. Nellist: Can my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) assist me? I am having difficulty with the first amendment. My hon. Friend will see that on his Amendment Paper it says that the amendment seeks to insert at the end of line 4 on page 1:

> "By the Isle of Wight Act 1980 it was provided that the said section 5 should continue to have effect notwithstanding the provisions of section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972."

The Bill says:

> "By the Isle of Wight Act 1980 it was provided that the said section 5 should continue to have effect notwithstanding the provisions of section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972."

I have read those words four times in the past two minutes and, to me, they are indentical. I cannot understand why we are being asked to discuss an amendment that is worded exactly the same as a provision of the Bill when it emerged from Committee. Can my hon. Friend explain that, or will he ask other hon. Members to explain it? If not, it is a waste of time.

Mr. Redmond: I shall do my best, but I am quite willing to give way to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight if he wants to explain what the Isle of Wight Act 1980 says. A lawyer would understand. Like most legal documents, one would need to be a Philadelphia lawyer to understand the amendments. Many Members are in the legal profession and will no doubt jump up to clarify the position.

As I understand it, when a Bill is presented to the Clerks' Office, they have a natter and a discussion. If everything is in order, the Bill is clarified, the proper procedures and notifications take place and the Bill then goes into Committee where those who support or oppose it can discuss it. They can listen to a barrister or a Queen's counsel—I am not sure which but, by God, they can talk. The Bill is then presented. After that, the Bill comes to this House and, if it is not amended, it goes to the other place. It then arrives back here duly amended.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: Does my hon. Friend accept that I may have misled the House earlier when I complained that the Bill that we received from the Vote Office needed to have these amendments incorporated? The Bill should come from the Vote Office as it came out of Committee. Our problem is that we do not have the original Bill as it went into Committee. For my hon. Friend to see what has happened, we have to read the schedule, which sets out the provisions as amended. The difficulty is that we do not have before us the Bill in the form in which it went into Committee, which would have been helpful. However, it is not available at the Vote Office.

Mr. Nellist: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. In all seriousness, will you consider having the Bill withdrawn from debate, by whatever technical means may be necessary? If the Vote Office cannot supply us with the necessary paper work for us to consider the Bill properly, it is an injustice to all concerned with the Bill for the debate to continue. Will you consider having the Bill withdrawn from debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not prepared to do that. If we get on with the debate, we may get the answers.

Mr Redmond: I am sure that the answers will not be forthcoming from the people who should give them. I am sorry, but——

Mr. Hind: The South Yorkshire Light Rail Transit Bill is not looking very good now.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We have had threats from Conservative Members. They are saying that if they do not make progress on this Bill, they will take it out on another Bill. That is not the way for the House to proceed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Matters are complicated enough. Let us deal with one Bill at a time.

Mr. Redmond: The more threats that are made, the more stubborn I become—sticks and stones.

I was elected to this place to try to do the best for the people of Don Valley. Rightly or wrongly, I will try to do that. It may displease Conservative Members if I want to represent my constituents; that may be a little foreign to their natures. However, I will represent them to the best of my ability, whether or not that pleases Tory Members.

Mr. Richard Alexander (Newark): Does the hon. Gentleman accept that although he and I are here to represent our constituencies, we are not here to scupper whatever they want to do in the Isle of Wight? Can we not get on with the Isle of Wight business?

Mr. Redmond: I hope that we are not scuppering the Isle of Wight Bill. I hope that the residents of the Isle of Wight get their Bill. However, we hope that that Bill will be good and will be beneficial to the Isle of Wight and to the people who live there so that they can enjoy the benefits of the Bill for centuries—unless another private Bill is introduced. I am not against the Bill. I just want to ensure that the people of the Isle of Wight, their children and their children's children can enjoy the benefits of a good Bill.

I am not sure whether the Lords amendments will meet that end. That is why I want clarification from the hon. Member for Isle of Wight. However, it appears that he is more in the dark than I am.

Mr. Michael Welsh: I thought that we were discussing amendments to the Isle of Wight Bill. That is quite simple. However, we are not. We are discussing a Bill that has been amended in Committee. We are not discussing Lords amendments to the Bill because no one has a copy of the Bill. We have only the amended version. The Bill is another piece of paper. Is this the procedure that we should follow? My hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) is more knowledgeable than I on these issues and I hope that he can answer my points.

Mr. Redmond: Perhaps my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, North should sit in on these Committees and he would be able to say whether we should be discussing Lords amendments now. After the Bill has passed from the Private Bill Office and has been explained and discussed, my hon. Friend may understand what is happening. Unlike my hon. Friend, who is suspicious, I am trusting. Unfortunately, that trust has turned sour.

Whether hon. Members like it or not, I want to search for the information so that I can say whether an amendment is okay. It is different to reach such a decision because of the lack of information. Lawyers, and there are plenty of them in here, have stacks of books containing case history after case history to help them make decisions. If a private Bill is bad and we decide to kick it out, who rectifies that mistake? Is it left to the judicial procedure or is the approval of the House required to make the necessary amendments? The Bill and the Local Government Act 1972 are no mean documents, but reference is also made to other documents, and so it goes on.

1.30 am

If hon. Members want to intervene or make sedentary interventions I shall gladly give way, as I did a moment ago. I should be happy if they clarified the position about the amendments.

The amendment on page 2, line 6 talks about four months. I should have thought that it would have been in the interests of the Isle of Wight authorities to be flexible about the time scale. To organise an event properly may take two years, two months, two days, 24 hours or even an hour. The Government usually work to the shortest possible time scale when considering private Bills.

It is important that consideration is given to the Lords amendments. I will sit down happily if the hon. Member for Isle of Wight explains the amendments. I am not sure that he will do so. By my probing I hope to provoke some comment which will enlighten our proceedings. I shall not vote against the amendments if it is proved that they are good for the people of the Isle of Wight. The hon. Member for Isle of Wight has said that they are beneficial to those people, but he should get up and prove that. I will happily accept the Bill if people tell me what certain things mean, why it must be altered and why there is such a rush to get it through on the nod. I do not like to be criticised for trying to find out those answers.

I am opposed to acid house parties. That youngsters want to attend such parties is a terrible indictment of our nation. We should provide better means to keep those youngsters away from such parties. We are concerned, however, to ensure that we do not take steps to stop all large gatherings as that would would be an infringement of civil liberties.

We must consider the amendments carefully and I hope that the hon. Member for Isle of Wight will get up to explain them.

Mr. Barry Field indicated assent.

Mr. Redmond: I shall sit down in good faith and in the hope that the hon. Gentleman will explain away my fears.

Mr. Field: The original Bill was passed by the House in 1971 as a result of between 80,000 and 100,000 young people attending a pop festival on the Isle of Wight. My predecessor Mark Woodnutt sought the support of the House in endeavouring to obtain legislation to regulate and control such a large gathering on the island. That was partially effective, and the pop festivals have subsequently been replaced by scooter rallies in which 5,000, 6,000 or 7,000 individuals arrive on the island for a bank holiday weekend. They congregate on one particular site—usually a rented field.

As I have already said, the Bill's purpose is to ensure that proper notice is given by the organisers of such an event, to ensure that sanitation, fire engines, police and St. John Ambulance are present to ensure that the young people enjoy themselves in an orderly and safe way. After amendments had been passed in the House, an event took place which 6,500 young people attended on their scooters. There is some evidence to lead us to believe that the organiser pocketed a considerable amount of money. The beer tent charged a high price for a can of lager. Various elements on the site—which the local police have said were definitely National Front supporters—stoned the fire engines, burned down the beer tent and generally ran riot.

I am sure that the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) will know that the Isle of Wight has the highest percentage of any county council in the country of over 75-year-olds who live independently in their homes. They were clearly terrified. The behaviour of the individuals was appalling. A small caucus of the youngsters, not the majority, came from the National Front to disrupt what would otherwise have been a perfectly reasonable weekend for the other young people.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett rose——

Mr. Field: No, I shall not give way.

Unfortunately, when charges were brought against the organisers in the local magistrates courts, the magistrates had to conclude that they could not proceed with the charges because the original Act was defective. I hope that, tonight, the amendments will win the support of all hon. Members.

As the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) has already mentioned, the local Labour party on the Isle of Wight supports the Bill, as does the Social and Liberal Democrat party despite the fact that its members are absent tonight. That is an appalling indictment of the party when we consider that that is the only county council in the country which it controls.

I hope that we may yet obtain the support of Opposition Members for these reasonable amendments, so that next time a charlatan organises an event on the Isle of Wight, overcharges young people and does not abide by the proper regulations which ensure that such events are reasonably organised so that young people can enjoy themselves in a proper way and undesirables are kept out, we shall be able to bring a prosecution. The fines would be quite substantial.

'HMSOSTANDARDNobody would say that this is an unreasonable piece of legislation. I am sad that Opposition Members, whom I have got to know quite well, seek to hold up this perfectly reasonable legislation. Therefore, I beg to move, That the Question be now put.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not prepared to accept that motion at the moment.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: For a long time, I have contended in the House that private legislation is not appropriate to deal with matters such as this. The point made by the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) well illustrates that. The private Act was put on the statute book with every good intention of dealing with a problem that had arisen on the island, but its drafting turned out to be defective. It is clearly the responsibility of the House to ensure that we do not produce an Act this time which is equally defective. We do not want an organiser of one of these events to be able to drive a coach and horses through the measure.

It would be much more appropriate to bring forward a Government Bill which could be carefully scrutinised and amended. That would result in a better chance—although not a certainty—that the legislation could deal with the problem

I wonder whether the hon. Member for Isle of Wight would take us through some of the problems with these amendments. First, this Bill will apply only if the organiser believes that more than 5,000 people will turn up at an event. What would happen if two people organised two separate events in two separate fields in fairly close proximity? If 3,000 people turned up at each event——

Mr. Barry Field: That is exactly what happened when the Hell's Angels arrived on one site and the scooterists on another. The situation was fraught with danger, and we wanted to keep the two groups, apart for obvious reasons.

Mr. Bennett: How would this Bill keep them apart? Perhaps I have misread the Bill, but as long as each group can reasonably assume that not more than 5,000 people will show up, the Bill will not deal with the problem. I do not see how it will be possible to adjudicate——

Mr. Field: If the hon. Gentleman comes to the Isle of Wight, I shall be happy to show him how.

Mr. Bennett: The point of scrutinising the legislation in this House is to make sure that it will work. I would be happy to go to the Isle of Wight, but we must ensure that the problem does not arise again.

Back in 1971, a problem arose in the island, and all this time later it appears that the legislation of the time did not solve——

Mr. Field: The hon. Gentleman is wrong. The original legislation helped with solving the problem, but subsequent amendments have since been shown to be defective when it came to prosecuting the organisers.

Mr. Bennett: That is the point. We need to be certain that we have got it right this time, so that the legislation catches someone who tries to get around the law next time——

Mr. Field: The hon. Gentleman is a perceptive Member and aware that trends in society change. We cannot freeze human nature or activities, so the Isle of Wight might have to come back for more legislation in future if confronted by acid house parties, for instance.

Mr. Bennett: I accept that, but we must be careful to make the legislation as nearly correct as possible——

Mr. Skinner: Page 5 of the Bill states:

"An assembly to which this section applies is an assembly in the county in the open air at which there are reasonable grounds for believing that there are more than 5,000 people present at any time not being an assembly held—".

It is an offence if the defence cannot show that the organisers have "reasonable grounds for believing that there would be more than 5,000 people present".

Who is to decide? Someone may say, "I am sorry, judge, but I thought only about 4,000 people were going to turn up. I am sorry that there were 6,000 or 20,000." That is the effect of the Bill. I am certain that the Bill would need to come back to the House.

1.45 am

Mr. Bennett: I accept what my hon. Friend says. I am sure that he has also gone to meetings, hoping that a certain number of people will turn up. One is often a little disappointed. On other occasions, a much larger number of people turn up. That is one of the problems with this legislation. The figure of 5,000 obviously denotes a big event, but it creates some difficulties.

Mr. Michael Welsh: We sympathise with the Isle of Wight and the trouble it has had with big parties. However, no city or town should suffer such trouble. If trouble is stopped in only one area, it will be exported somewhere else unless we have a Bill which applies to the whole United Kingdom. Such a Bill would be debated fully and would put an end to all trouble throughout the United Kingdom. Is that not what we wish?

Mr. Bennett: My hon. Friend makes a point which I have made on several occasions. These issues should be covered by Government legislation. The sooner we get private business sorted out, the sooner we can avoid proceedings such as these.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Fallon.]

1.55 am

Mr. David Harris (St. Ives): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. I have proposed the Question. If the hon. Gentleman speaks he will take time out of the debate. Does he still want to raise a point or order?

Mr. Harris: Yes, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Can you inform the House of the position on the carry-over motions for various Bills? I have a constituency interest in the Penzance Albert Pier Extension Bill. To my knowledge, no reference was made to those Bills during the time for private business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand that the Chairman of Ways and Means will put them down again tomorrow.

1.56 am

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): At this late hour it would not be wholly accurate to say that I am delighted to be bringing before the House the important subject of the multi-fibre arrangement. It is important for the 480,000 people who are employed in the textiles and clothing industry in this country—it is the fifth largest industrial sector. It is important for consumers—every man, woman and child has textile products. It is crucial for the textile industry worldwide, which is worth about $160 billion, and it provides opportunities for development in the poorer countries. Most of all, it provides the opportunity to explore the relationship between the interests of consumers and the maximising of economic growth worldwide and the desire for stability and the steady restructuring of industries in the developed world which are involved in the textile industry but which have a natural cost disadvantage compared with developing countries.

It is apposite that we are considering this matter now as the Uruguay round of GATT expires in 1990 within which discussions on the multi-fibre arrangement, through the EEC, will begin in July 1990 and, we hope, be concluded in July 1991. These are not easy questions and there are no simple answers on whether the MFA should be abolished and, if so, when. Perhaps we should begin with the basic premise of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, which is that multilateral trade should be as free as possible and should be impeded only by tariff barriers, and that even those should be brought down gradually. Through that and through the process of comparative advantage, wealth will be maximised because countries with particular advantages, either on a labour or a technological basis, will be concentrating production on those areas where they have the greatest expertise. As a result, wealth throughout the world will be maximised because countries will be producing the products that are most appropriate for them.

From the outset, GATT was weighted in favour of the developing countries. It allowed them tariff-free access to the developed world and it laid down that the developed world should not raise non-tariff barriers. The MFA is specifically a derogation from GATT and from its liberal, free trade principles. To that extent, it is an anomaly to allow the developed world, in particular the textile producers, to restructure against the threat of low-cost imports from the developing world.

When the system was first introduced in 1974 it was regarded as being temporary, yet 15 years on it has been renewed three times and now covers 45 countries with 26 bilateral agreements under MFA4.

I should emphasise that the MFA is a protectionist measure that discriminates against low-cost producers in the developing world and imposes costs upon consumers throughout the world. It is the most protectionist measure in any manufacturing sector in the world, and only this October it was called by Barber Conable, the president of the World bank,

In the Uruguay round, the EC and the British Government, who are signatories to GATT, have called for the phasing out of restrictions under the MFA and other restrictions on textiles and clothing not consistent with GATT rules and disciplines on a progressive basis and subject to restrictions. Even the apparel, knitting and textiles alliance agrees with the principle of ending the MFA.

Nevertheless, the abolition of the MFA is politically sensitive, as we saw on 9 December 1988 when every speaker, bar one, in a debate in the House spoke for the producers who would be affected by it. They argued that it provided relative stability in the United Kingdom's textile industry, despite the fact that employment in the industry has dropped from 700,000 to 480,000 in 20 years; it averted trade conflicts of the kind into which the United States has been tempted recently, and to a certain extent it allowed for a gradual restructuring and concentration of the industry which has invested £2 billion in the past five years, although the number of establishments in it has dropped during that period.

The arguments that hon. Members put forward in December last year were that the British textile industry needed protection from high interest rates, although they have been a relatively recent phenomenon; from high exchange rates, although between 1980 and 1987 the effective exchange rates for British textiles fell; and particularly because of unfair trade practices. For instance, there was a total ban on imports of textiles by Pakistan, high tariffs on textiles by Turkey, adding up overall to about 199 per cent. of basic value, and South Korea erected non-tariff barriers on the basis that its balance of payments was heavily in deficit. That is one of the things that can be done under the MFA, yet it had a trade surplus of $4·2 billion in 1986 and $11·4 billion in 1988.

It was argued that the MFA should be retained indefinitely to protect home industries. In the words of the Opposition Front Bench spokesman, the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson),

"we can have free trade only if we have fair trade."—[Official Report, 9 December 1988; Vol. 143, c. 567.]

To be fair, those are arguments that the Government have taken seriously and, to their credit, they have commissioned reports from Professor Silberston in 1984 and 1989, upon the latter of which they are still consulting.

Equally, it is a disgrace that the EC, which will effectively be doing the substantive negotiations on the MFA, did not commission such reports and wrote to an important part of the textile industry recently saying:

"The Commission itself is not undertaking scientific studies on the effects of the MFA, because it is lacking the resources which would be necessary to carry out a comprehensive assessment."

Nevertheless, it is my contention that the MFA should be phased out as quickly as practicable—within five years rather than the seven to 10 years favoured by Professor Silberston and the 10 years-plus favoured by the industry, for the following reasons.

First, the MFA is only a finger in the dyke of more fundamental economic forces that have seen the clothing exports of developing countries' share of the British market increase from 10 per cent. in 1955 to 48 per cent. in 1982. Secondly, the rate of import penetration has increased over that period. Textile imports have increased from 8 per cent. to 48 per cent., and clothing imports from 12 per cent. to 38 per cent. Thirdly, despite the panoply of controls under the MFA, five sixths of textile imports apparently come from countries not covered by the agreement, and two thirds of those come from Europe, which accounts for no less than £1·75 billion of our £3·6 billion textiles deficit.

Silberston makes the point that the MFA masks a rather awkward truth: that Britain's textile industry was not doing very well in its home European market, having exported to that market only 15 per cent. of its turnover, compared with France's 21 per cent., West Germany's 34 per cent. and Belgium's 80 per cent.

Fourthly, the Retail Consortium has argued that quotas mean that developing countries concentrate on higher value-added, higher-priced and higher-margin products which compete directly with the British textile industry and, as a result, militate against the United Kingdom's poorer consumers, who should be helped most by the developing countries' specialising in lower-value products.

The final argument is the strongest of all: that the MFA is, in effect, a very regressive tax. According to Silberston, the British people pay £900 million a year to subsidise an industry that would otherwise be restructuring itself—as Japan's textile industry has done—or diversifying to higher value-added products. Opposition Members—none of whom is present at this time of night—argue strongly against a progressive eye test and dental charge that raises £110 million a year, while supporting and seeking to retain a regressive £900 million tax that falls mainly on the least fortunate.

Ending the MFA would, of course, lead to a loss of jobs in the short term—Professor Silberston mentions a figure of 33,000. Even if that figure were doubled, however, the amount saved in terms of consumption would be twice the average pay of each worker. There is little doubt that the additional spending power available to British consumers, and the additional opportunities for British firms to export to newly industrialised countries, would mean the creation of more jobs to compensate.

Everyone recognises that ending the MFA would have transitional effects, particularly in certain regions of the United Kingdom—the north-west, Scotland and Northern Ireland are cited by Silberston. British export opportunities, and opportunities for import substitution in the home market, would depend on a level playing field, and on the developing countries' obeying GATT rules after the downgrading of the MFA quota system. I am sure that the Government are aware of that: the Minister will have seen the comprehensive statement made in July by the European Economic Commission's negotiating group on textiles and clothing, which mentioned a number of important respects in which GATT must be improved if the MFA is to be abolished without undue disruption of the British textile industry.

I nevertheless feel that the MFA should be gradually reduced over a five-year period, and that quotas should be progressively increased, provided that GATT is strengthened. Article 9 of GATT provides safeguards for countries which believe that imports are threatening a sector of their economy. They should be made more selective. Action should be allowed against particular countries, and it should be possible to take action more quickly. The article should be interpreted on a national rather than on a continental basis, or EEC imports, coming particularly via East Germany to West Germany, may be targeted on the British market and may disrupt our industry to a far greater extent than in other EEC countries.

The investigative powers of the textile surveillance body, or its equivalent body when the transitional period ends, should be improved to allow sampling against the state subsidies that are likely to cause disruption in the textile markets.

Settlement procedures for trading disputes should be made more effective through majority voting, not consensus.

In that way, the MFA could gradually be phased out over a five-year period and integrated into a strengthened and more comprehensive set of GATT rules. A significant restrictive trade practice, which has a bad effect on consumers, particularly poor consumers in this country, could be removed. Wealth throughout the world could be improved through greater specialisation and efficiency, to our comparative advantage. A balance could be held between consumers, retailers and producers in Britain and abroad. I am sure that the Government will wish to ensure that progress on the gradual abolition of the MFA is vigorous, responsible and speedy. I trust that the Minister will be able to give me that assurance.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. John Redwood): I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) for initiating this most important debate. The only sadness for both of us is that it has to take place at this hour in the morning, owing to the problems over earlier business.

My hon. Friend has put the case against protection and for maximising growth by liberating trade extremely well. He has stressed its importance to our consumers and to developing countries. His speech will stand alongside those of other hon. Members who in previous debates have put the case for the textile industry, which is well known to Ministers. I am delighted to have his ideas on record. We are conducting consultations, having studied the Silberston report.

The textiles and clothing sector is of great significance to the United Kingdom economy and to all of us as consumers. Textiles and clothing is our fourth largest manufacturing industry, employing 9 per cent. of those employed in manufacturing. In 1988 it had a total output of approximately £12 billion, of which over £3·6 billion was exported. As consumers, we spent in the same year some £17 billion at retail prices.

The present MFA protocol, MFA IV, expires in July 1991. Since the MFA was established in 1974 to replace earlier arrangements relating only to cotton products, the arrangements have been renewed three times. The difference this time is that the future of the MFA is not being looked at in isolation but as an integral part of the GATT Uruguay round, which is due to end in 1990. These are ambitious negotiations, in which the Community is only one of the players. With more than a year to go, not all the cards are yet on the table, but I can reaffirm the Community's objectives.

There are based on the commitment made by all GATT contracting parties in the Punta del Este declaration at the beginning of the Uruguay round

"to examine the modalities for the eventual return of textiles and clothing to strengthened GATT rules".

The MFA is a major exception to GATT rules, justified as a temporary measure to allow industry in developed countries to restructure in response to orderly growth in low-cost competition.

For developing countries, better access for their textile and clothing exports is a key objective for the Uruguay round. In their view, many of the other issues in the round will be of advantage principally to developed countries. They believe that this proposal will maximise growth in their own countries. For countries at an early stage of development, textiles and clothing are one of the few manufactured products they can successfully export. Such countries would certainly argue that, if they are to achieve sustained economic growth—and hence in due course become attractive markets for our exporters—they must have the opportunity to sell the products in which they are competitive. Textiles offer them a path to prosperity.

Community views of the MFA are not just a response to pressure from developing countries, important though that is. Any effective import restriction also imposes costs on the consumer. It is clear that the complicated network of MFA quotas also distorts international trade by providing an incentive for internationally mobile industry to move to unrestricted countries or to switch to products outside quota control even where these might not otherwise be rational choices. In addition, the continued existence of such an important exception to the GATT rules tends to undermine the whole multilateral system. For this reason, the Community is committed to negotiate about phasing out the MFA on acceptable terms.

I must stress that this is a matter for the Community as a whole, and not for the United Kingdom alone. A common commercial policy was created by the treaty of Rome, and it is the Community that is a party to the MFA and to the bilateral agreements negotiated under it with exporting countries. EC regulations implementing the arrangements have the force of law in the United Kingdom. It is also the Commission that negotiates on behalf of the Community in the GATT round, although on the basis of general policy positions agreed by the member states.

There is therefore no question of the United Kingdom going it alone. Of course, we want to play our full part in internal Community discussions. That means keeping in close touch with developments in the GATT and with the views of industry and other interested parties in the United Kingdom. The objectives are set by the Community as a whole and, at the end of the Uruguay round, it will have to decide collectively whether they have been achieved sufficiently.

[Mr. John Redwood]

The essential issues in the GATT negotiations will be the timing of the phasing out, the method and the conditions. The Community set out its general objectives in a paper presented in July to the GATT negotiating group on textiles and clothing, which proposes that the gradual integration of textiles and clothing into GATT would proceed in parallel with the application of strengthened rules and disciplines. These ideas will need to be translated into more precise proposals.

To assist us in playing our part in more detailed consideration of the EC's negotiating position, we commissioned Professor Silberston to prepare a report on the MFA and its implications for the United Kingdom economy which was published on 19 October. We have invited comments on it.

The report runs to some 120 pages and provides a number of facts and estimates. Professor Silberston estimates that the extra competition brought about by ending MFA restrictions would result in an average fall of about 5 per cent. in retail clothing prices in the United Kingdom, leading to some increase in demand. The fall in yarn and fabric prices would be rather lower. He estimates the gain to consumers as some £980 million at 1988 prices. He has given a range of estimates of the effect on employment, while accepting that any overall estimate is bound to be crude, as there are considerable differences in the vulnerability to competition of particular sectors.

The effect on employment would be spread over a number of years, and there would be offsetting effects over time in other sectors of the economy that might benefit. We welcome further comments on these estimates, and I hope that they will be backed up by reasoned arguments. While there will always be disagreement about exact figures, every study of the MFA that I am aware of has concluded that the restrictions impose a net cost on the economy of developed countries.

Because we are awaiting other comments on the report, we will have to consider all the responses carefully before forming a detailed view. The main issues for discussion in GATT are clear. It is accepted that the integration of textiles and clothing into GATT could only be gradual and progressive. My hon. Friend agrees. He is tonight debating the exact time involved. There will have to be further debate about just how long a period this implies, in the light of our consultation findings. Timing is an issue on which the Community has not yet adopted a precise negotiating position, so we are still in time to influence that debate.

We shall also need to consider carefully what arrangements would be appropriate for the transitional phase. A steady increase in quota growth rates is one obvious option, but there are other possible techniques and we must consider whether certain categories of product or certain kinds of exporting country should be given special treatment.

The controversial issue in the negotiations is the interpretation of the Punta del Este declaration on the strengthening of GATT rules and disciplines if the MFA is to be successfully phased out. The Community paper made clear its view that strengthened rules and disciplines included more effective safeguard measures, greater market access through the reduction of tariff and non-tariff barriers, particularly in newly industrialised economies, and the creation of fair competitive conditions in relation to unfair trade, protection of intellectual property and access to raw materials. This is an ambitious position, but these aims form part of the Community's wider objectives for the round as a whole and not just in relation to textiles. They will have to be judged against that background. A more effective GATT framework is, in our view, in the interest of all participants.

I know that there is already concern in the industry about increased imports, although not all of them are from countries covered by the MFA. I can understand the fears about job losses, even if restrictions are phased out gradually. Clearly some sectors are more vulnerable than others to competition from low-cost imports. In addition, nothing that we can negotiate in GATT will prevent taste and fashion from changing the prospects for particular businesses. Under the spur of competition, however, the industry in the United Kingdom has made considerable gains in productivity, partly as a result of investment in new technology. High-quality products hold their own in export markets as well as at home, and the United Kingdom industry must be able to respond quickly and flexibly to the demands of increasingly sophisticated consumers in the domestic market. The right balance is to work with our Community partners for greater competition and consumer choice within the framework of more effective GATT rules and disciplines.

The Government will consider what further representations to make to the EC about the handling of the negotiations once we have seen all the replies to Silberston and once we have had a chance to sift the evidence about the balance of advantage on the issues that I mentioned.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty one minutes past Two o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 10 November 1989

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

World Climate Change

9.36 am

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): I have pleasure in presenting a petition from the people of Nottingham in respect of their environmental concerns, it reads:

> the threat to the world climate and our global environment, including the ozone layer, requires urgent action, not more platitudes and declarations of intent; believes that the Prime Minister has talked green but continues to act dirty, failing to meet the commitments of the Commonwealth Conference and showing indifference to the needs of the Third world.
> Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House holds an immediate inquiry into how rhetoric can be transformed into action to reduce emissions, clean up power stations, insulate domestic and commercial property, develop alternative and renewable energy resources, emphasise public transport over private, introduce lean burn engines, catalytic converters, and a wider differential between leaded and unleaded petrol, replant the world's forests, and establish a powerful energy efficiency agency in order to combat global warming, which threatens us all.

That is the petition from the people of Nottingham, and I forgo the opportunity to make a short speech.

To lie upon the Table.

Death Sentences (South Africa)

9.38 am

Mr. Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and that of the House, I wish to present a petition from more than 30,000 residents of the United Kingdom, which shows that they are opposed to apartheid in South Africa. They are

> 1. gravely concerned at the abuse of the judicial system in South Africa;
> 2. highly alarmed by the significant increase in the use of the death penalty against opponents of apartheid;
> 3. strongly believe that the use of the death penalty for political offences can only exacerbate the situation in South Africa.
> Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honourable House will appeal to the state president of South Africa to halt the execution of opponents of apartheid.

I support that petition, which is in the same terms as early-day motion 1361, signed by 132 right hon. and hon. Members of all parties.

To lie upon the Table.

Private Bills

9.39 am

Mr. Barry Field (Isle of Wight): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The conduct of the affairs of the House is under your direct responsibility. I believe that I am correct in saying that it is your view, both in private and in public, that the way in which we conduct our affairs has improved in recent years. May I therefore direct your attention to the relevant Hansard reports of 1971 when the then Isle of Wight Bill was passing through the House? I ask you also, to examine the proceedings and events late last night and early this morning.

After the prorogation of Parliament, our proceedings will come under the scrutiny of the lens of the television camera. We shall do ourselves no service if we continue to conduct our affairs as we did last night. I say this, Mr. Speaker, not from the barrel of sour grapes but in view of the way in which the International Westminster Bank Bill was treated last night. Britain is supposed to be the financial centre of the world, but I believe that we made ourselves a thorough laughing stock last night. I hope that you will address these matters during your day.

Mr. Speaker: The House knows that opposed private business is a matter for the Chairman of Ways and Means. I am aware of what went on in the Chamber last night and I shall look into the matter. I do not know whether there is anything that I can do personally, but I share the hon. Gentleman's concern about the Bills which the House failed to debate.

World Climate Change

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. John M. Taylor.]

[Relevant documents: Sixth report of the Energy Committee, HC 192 of Session 1988-89, on the energy policy implications of the greenhouse effect, and the Government's observations, HC 611 of Session 1988-89.

First report of the Environment Committee, HC 270 of Session 1987-88, on air pollution, and the Government's reply, Cm. 552, as they relate to chlorofluorocarbons and the ozone layer, and the greenhouse effect.]

9.40 am

The Minister for the Environment and Countryside (Mr. David Trippier): I am delighted that today we have an opportunity to debate an issue of vital concern to every individual in our country and, indeed, throughout the world. I do not think that it is an exaggeration to say that nothing we could discuss in this place could be of greater or more immediate importance.

I should like to apologise to the House at once for the fact that I shall be unable to stay until the end of the debate because I am due to present the Young Environmentalist of the Year Award at lunchtime.

Our knowledge of the environment that surrounds and sustains us has been expanding rapidly in recent years, and unfortunately——

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): I am aware that it is important to present the Young Environmentalist of the Year Award, but surely the House should take precedence when the House is debating what the Minister correctly described as an "issue of vital concern". Does not the House take precedence over the young environmentalist?

Mr. Trippier: I do not think that there is any difficulty about that. If I were to reply to the debate, I would have to be here. As it is, the Government have an arrangement with the Opposition that there will be two speakers from each Front Bench. I am delighted to say that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State will be replying to the debate. I shall be here for the bulk of the debate.

Our knowledge of the environment that surrounds and sustains us has been expanding rapidly in recent years, and unfortunately much of what we have learnt has not been good news. We are daily faced with more evidence that the activities of our species may be threatening not only the quality of life of ourselves, nor even just that of our children, but may be posing a danger to the very survival of life on this planet.

As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in her speech to the United Nations General Assembly on Wednesday—a speech which even The Guardian called profoundly impressive and moving—

> "It is life itself that we must battle to preserve. The evidence is there. The damage is being done".

Across the globe we can see irrefutable proof of the damage that human complacency and arrogance about the environment has already caused. That proof is being stamped on the face of our planet by the destruction of tropical rain forests, the effects of acid rain and the thinning of the polar ice caps. Some predictions are that a change in the global climate in future could devastate crop yields, flood huge areas of land and threaten the viability of societies in many countries. But we must not move from indifference about the environment to paralysis about our fate. There is no need for us to regard disaster as inevitable of preordained.

Previous predictions of inevitable doom have proven false, from those of Malthus, who believed 200 years ago that mass starvation in this country was inevitable, to those erroneous forecasts that India could never feed itself. The key is and must be human ingenuity. That, in a sense, got us into this mess. Now it is time to harness it towards the goal of getting us out.

The first point must be a proper scientific basis for understanding the problems that we face. It may therefore be helpful to the House if I set out briefly what the current scientific consensus is about climate change, and the greenhouse effect. Changes in the world's climate are inherent to the very structure of the planet and to our place in the solar system. The history of the Earth shows clearly that such changes in our climate have occurred in the past and would occur inevitably in the future even if there were no men or women here at all. Climate changes may be caused by small, natural changes in our orbit around the sun. They may be influenced by volcanic activity or even changes within the sun itself.

Scientists have predicted that in perhaps 5,000 years we shall enter another ice age, which would not reach its furthest extent for another 60,000 years. In fact, the rise or fall in temperature which can cause such a momentous change as a shift to or from an ice age may be very small. It is part of the great complexity of this problem that we as yet find it very difficult to disentangle these natural changes from the man-made effects which may be accelerating the process of global warming.

Mr. Dalyell: People should understand that talk about an ice age is not fanciful. It is a fact that it was not tundra that was found in the stomach of the mammoth. The mammoth was quickly encased in ice. That is precisely what many of us are concerned about. That is a climatological flow into an ice age.

Mr. Trippier: I should make it clear that the passage in my speech to which the hon. Gentleman has referred has been included in the publicity which the Department of the Environment is making available widely. I am grateful to him for his intervention. His last comment seems to support the publicity that we are issuing.

The naturally present greenhouse gases in the atmosphere, including water vapour and carbon dioxide, keep the average surface temperature some 30 deg C above the level that it would reach without them. In other words, if there were no greenhouse effect at all, we might freeze to death.

The problem lies in Man's activities since industrialisation which have created additional greenhouse effects. We have been producing and emitting gases, such as carbon dioxide, CFCs, nitrous oxide and methane, at rates at which the world's oceans and forests cannot absorb them. As a result these gases have been accumulating in the atmosphere and gradually building up a reflective capacity which retains heat from the sun which the Earth would normally lose to space. In the short term, this artificial global warming will continue whatever we do because the full consequences of gases emitted in the past have still to catch up with us.

We have learnt enough about the greenhouse effect to know that we should be worried about it, but we do not yet have all the information we need to devise comprehensive solutions. We still need to know by how much the temperature will increase, how fast this increase will occur and how high the seas will rise as a result. Most important of all, we need to know where these effects will be most severe.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Wednesday therefore announced a major step forward by the British Government. We shall set up an international centre for climate prediction as a focus for worldwide fundamental research on climate models. My Department will be providing more than £5 million a year to fund this important new initiative, which will build on the pioneering work of British scientists and meteorologists.

I should like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the many British scientists, notably at the Meteorological Office and at the British Antarctic Survey, who have established this country as one of the world leaders in knowledge on climate change and damage to the ozone layer.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce (Gordon): Does the Minister accept that there is a widespread view that initiatives are all very well but that more should be done? The Government are setting up initiatives so as to obtain more information while blocking specific measures, along with the United States, to deal with the problems and to set targets. How does the hon. Gentleman reconcile the apparent inconsistency?

Mr. Trippier: I shall be fascinated to learn to which precise targets the hon. Gentleman is referring. I led the British delegation at Noordwijk in Holland earlier this week, and there was no blocking whatsoever. I shall make it clear that the British delegation acted as a broker in pulling together the major countries, especially America, the USSR and Japan. It was our initiative and only our initiative that led to the inclusion in the declaration of the date that was agreed by all the countries represented at that conference.

Mr. Allan Roberts (Bootle): The countries which the Minister mentioned, led by Britain, took out of any proposed draft declaration any reference to targeting CO_2 reductions by specific dates and substituted a vague statement about "taking action in the future", with statements from the Minister about waiting until we had found out the kind of facts which the hon. Gentleman has just said we did not have. Surely, if we believe in the precautionary approach, we should have targets. The Government have no targets for the reduction of CO_2 emissions.

Mr. Trippier: I must caution the hon. Gentleman not to keep reading The Guardian. its account of what took place at Noordwijk was completely erroneous. The accurate account was given in The Times by the journalist Michael McCarthy.

Mr. Roberts: Do the Government have any target dates for the reduction of CO_2 emissions by Britain?

Mr. Trippier: Yes, it is in the declaration. The date is the year 2000. The hon. Gentleman seems to think that he knows more about what is in the declaration than I do. The levels will be decided when recommendations are made to the second world climate conference by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. We are chairing the scientific part of the IPCC. Earlier this week at Noordwijk, I asked the three major industrialised countries to which I have referred to agree to that date to achieve the levels, which will be based upon scientific information provided by the IPCC. As it is clear that Britain is very much in the lead in the scientific reasearch which is provided by the IPCC, and as the Government have paid the best part of £1 million initially to fund that scientific research, it is rather silly for the Opposition to devalue the currency of the IPCC in any way.

Dr. Jeremy Bray (Motherwell, South): We may pursue this matter later, but the Minister should be clear about the fact that the IPCC is not carrying out research: it is collecting research done by other people. The British contribution is not to chair the policy panel but to chair the research panel. Policy is a very different matter.

Mr. Trippier: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely wrong. I did not say that it had anything to do with policy. I said that the British are chairing the scientific panel. We must get this point right. We were flattered that, in recognition of the experience and success of British scientific research in these matters, we were asked to chair that sub-committee. It is chaired by Dr. John Houghton, the head of the Meteorological Office.

Mr. Allan Roberts: This is an important matter and we need to get it right. The Minister has confirmed that the British Government and other Governments at the Netherlands conference refused to accept the freezing of the amount of CO_2 emissions at the present level and will wait for the year 2000 before making any decisions about what to do. Then the British Government might freeze the level. In the meantime they could double them.

Mr. Trippier: If the hon. Gentleman does a little more research, he will find that a whole new world is opened up to him. I must make it clear that it was the British delegation, led by me, which brokered the date which was put in the declaration. I have said that any 20 per cent. figure which was mentioned at the conference may be inadequate. It may not be enough; no one knows. What on earth was the point in setting up the IPCC if we were not going to listen to its recommendations, which I understand will come forward in only a matter of months?

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: I was advised by a first-hand observer who was at the Noordwijk conference that 11 of the 12 EC countries were prepared to sign an undertaking for that reduction in the year 2000, Britain being the only one that would not, with a caveat for Portugal and Greece. Is that true or false? Is the Minister saying that my observer's view of the meeting differs from his?

Mr. Trippier: There seem to be a number of different accounts. The hon. Gentleman is not in a strong position to speak with any authority, because he certainly was not at the conference. All the information which he is imparting to the House is very much second-hand. As it is clear that we are in the lead in providing the scientific evidence for the levels that will be agreed at the intergovernmental conference which will be held in 12 months' time, it is clear that, if we are supporting that initiative, the levels which are recommended should be the ones that are accepted. I can give a categorical undertaking to the hon. Gentleman that, when those recommendations are made to the second world climate conference, the Government will respond positively. We believe that, as a first step, we should be looking to the year 2000 as the date by which CO_2 emissions are stabilised.

I have already paid a genuine tribute to British scientists, notably at the Meteorological Office, for all their work. The Government are spending over £15 million on research on climate change and the ozone layer through the Natural Environment Research Council, the Science and Engineering Research Council, the Meteorological Office and Government Departments. We have also more than doubled Britain's contribution to the United Nations Environment Programme, and I echo the Prime Minister's call for other countries to do the same.

The quality of British scientific work on climate change was given international recognition last year, when we were chosen to chair the working group on scientific assessment of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. This body, which was set up jointly by the United Nations Environment Programme and the world meteorological organisations, is the principal international focus for research and action on climate change. I stress once again that we are fully committed to the work of the IPCC and we are providing £750,000 to support its work.

Collecting the international information we need is only the first step towards tackling the problem of climate change. The next step must be to take effective action. We remain committed to international co-operation as the only way that we can meet this global challenge, and we have called for the work of the IPCC to be continued. We have therefore called for the negotiation of an international framework convention on climate change. This proposal has been endorsed in the Langkawi declaration on the environment which followed the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Malaysia.

Britain has led international discussions on a climate convention and we were instrumental in securing the unanimous agreement of the nearly 70 countries represented at the conference on air pollution and climate change in the Netherlands for this initiative. I am certain that the strong endorsement which was given to the convention at the United Nations General Assembly following the Prime Minister's speech will help to focus minds on the benefits such a convention could bring.

It is vital that we recognise that action must be collective and international if it is to be effective. In particular, there would be no point whatsoever in securing an international agreement on reducing carbon dioxide emissions to which the major CO_2-producing countries —the United States, the Soviet Union and Japan—were not willing to subscribe. I hope, therefore, that some of the more short-sighted critics who earlier this week berated the British Government's attitude at the Noordijk conference —and in at least one case wholly misrepresented it—will recognise the significance of the agreement reached there, brokered by the British delegation, which I was proud to lead, and which was signed by all attending countries.

That sets out in clear terms an agreement to recognise the need to stabilize carbon dioxide emissions and to study the feasibility of a 20 per cent. reduction in emissions by industrialised countries by the year 2005. It is a major breakthrough in international efforts on climate change and I pay tribute to all the members of my delegation who helped to achieve it, and whose efforts were publicly applauded by our hosts.

Our efforts in the international sphere to secure multilateral agreement on what action is needed builds on Britain's successful leadership role in securing action to protect the ozone layer. Earlier this year my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister hosted the international conference on the protection of the ozone layer and in 1990, Britain will host the second conference of the parties to the Montreal protocol, which we hope will strengthen the existing protocol commitment of a 50 per cent. cut in emissions by the year 2000. As the House will know, Britain is 10 years ahead of schedule on its Montreal obligations and that is all the more important because chlorofluorocarbons are an important greenhouse gas too.

As well as the important role we can play internationally, there are important steps that Britain can take on its own to tackle climate change. There is our aid programme to other countries. The Overseas Development Administration is already promoting projects on forestry in nearly 30 countries and I am sure that all sides of the House will want to welcome the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister this week that we will be providing a further £100 million bilaterally to tropical forestry activities over the next three years. I hope that we can build on the model of the memorandum of agreement with Brazil that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment signed in his capacity as Overseas Development Minister in July. I should add that in the United Kingdom itself we have increased our tree planting by 50 per cent. in the past 10 years.

Mr. Dalyell: I have here the text of the Prime Minister's speech to the United Nations and there is one point on which I should like clarification. The Minister said:

> "£100 million bilaterally to tropical forestry activities over the next three years."

The Prime Minister said:

> "mostly within the framework of the tropical forestry action plan".

What discussion has taken place with our partners in the tropical forestry action plan on this and what is meant by "mostly"?

Mr. Trippier: I am not aware of the precise discussions with that body. However, the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will be very much welcomed. We talk with our partners in that body regularly.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Although we all welcome any effort made to preserve and protect the tropical rain forest, are his Department or the Government proposing any changes in the trading arrangement by origin marking of tropical timber so that virgin tropical timber is not imported into this country or western Europe in large quantities and that, instead, what one could call farmed timber is imported?

Mr. Trippier: I am not aware of any such measures, but as the hon. Gentleman has raised the matter, I undertake to look at it myself.

The Department of Energy has successfully promoted energy efficiency to the extent of securing recurrent savings of over £500 million a year since 1983. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State hopes to be able to deal with these matters in greater detail later. The electricity supply industry is investing £2 billion to reduce acid rain emissions by fitting flue gas desulphurisation equipment to six of our major power stations.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Trippier: Yes, but for the last time.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Are the Government saying that they are committed to the six and that the six will be desulphurised? As we understand it from announcements by the Central Electricity Generating Board and the private companies that are about to take over, before the next election only Drax B will be retrofitted, the decision on Fiddler's Ferry having been postponed.

Mr. Trippier: Having cleared that point with the Department of Energy, I can tell the hon. Gentleman that although the Department does not say when, it says that we are committed to fitting flue gas desulphurisation equipment to six of our major power stations. The statutory non-fossil fuel obligation embodied in the Electricity Bill is a further important commitment.

Sir Hugh Rossi (Hornsey and Wood Green): It is a question of logistics. A £2 billion programme is in hand, but the implementation of retrofitting desulphurisation units to power stations can be carried out only when it is most convenient and proper. The equipment has to be available, and the power station has to be shut down and taken out of the grid for a period. That has an effect on electricity supplies, and all those practical considerations have to be taken into account.

Mr. Trippier: I want to underline my hon. Friend's point. It is important to stress that desulphurisation can be carried out only when convenient and proper.

The Electricity Bill has provided the vehicle for a new and unprecedented legal duty to be placed on electricity suppliers positively to promote energy efficiency. We shall continue to work sensibly and constructively with other countries, with British industry and with ordinary consumers to strengthen efforts to reduce the threat that global warming poses.

Unlike the Labour party, we do not advocate mindless and isolated public posturing in international forums. Agreements, not arguments, are what the world needs and agreements will not be secured unless the interests of all nations, industrialised and developing alike, are recognised and catered for. Unlike the Labour party we have no mandate from the National Union of Mineworkers to endorse coal-fired power stations, whatever the environmental consequences. We shall move ahead with an energy mix which is sensible for our economy and our environment. Above all, unlike the Labour party, we have the track record of economic growth and a long, firm commitment to the environment which alone can produce the green growth we need to fund the measures required both at home and abroad to tackle climate change. We are aware of the responsibilities these global challenges impose on us. We shall not fail to fulfil them.

Mr. Dalyell: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I want to make a House of Commons point, not a party political one. Will you formally raise with the Chair the question of the practice of some Ministers? Some Ministers are extremely courteous to the House and some Ministers have sat through the whole of a Friday debate. The Minister has been asked a number of questions and there are likely to be contributions from the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi), the Chairman of the Select Committee on the Environment and the hon. Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd), who has a long record of interest and expertise in scientific affairs. Having made such a speech, the Minister will then go off to an engagement, which, however attractive, is not more important than the House of Commons. There are many other Ministers who could present awards to the young environmentalist of the year. Will you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, raise with Mr. Speaker the acceptability of the Ministers' behaviour?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): The hon. Gentleman and the whole House know that the question of which Ministers turn up for a debate or how long they stay is not a responsibility of the Chair. However, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman's point will be noted.

Mr. Corbyn: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Ministers should be accountable to the House. This is an Adjournment debate and there will be no vote at the end, so in that sense, the Government are not held accountable for their actions. However, there are few opportunities for Back Bench Members to question Ministers directly by intervention or through their own speeches. Surely something should be done to ensure that Ministers stay to respond seriously to the points raised by hon. Members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is nothing I can add to what I have already said.

10.7 am

Dr. Jeremy Bray (Motherwell, South): The whole House welcomes the opportunity to debate the important question of global climate change, but many Conservative Members were expecting the Secretary of State for the Environment to open the debate. To find that the Minister of State is unable to stay even over lunch is less than the House was expecting.

The Opposition welcome the attention being given to the global environment and to changes in the world climate in particular. However, the problem is to know what to do in the face of threatening, but uncertain future change. I want to underline that uncertainty by mentioning new research results which have been published in the past few weeks. In an article in Nature on 14 September, John Mitchell and his colleagues at the Meteorological Office, the group to whom the Minister of State referred, revised their estimates of the effect of doubling the carbon dioxide in the atmosphere and on global warming from 5·2 degrees centigrade to 1·9 degrees. That reduction of more than one half was due to introducing into the Meteorological Office global general circulation model the effect of reflection and absorption of radiation by cloud with varying ice and water content. Further refinements could go either way, but the variation of 50 per cent. or more is characteristic of the problems that we face.

Fresh light has also been shed on the question of where the carbon dioxide from burning fossil fuel is going. It is possible to measure directly the amount produced, and the amount remaining in the atmosphere is about 50 per cent. of that produced. It had been assumed that the balance of 50 per cent. was dissolved in the oceans, passing through the marine food chain into ocean sediments and eventually becoming the coal and oil of future eras. Through deforestation, the land was assumed to add to carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, not to absorb it.

On 2 November at an NERC press conference, Dr. Andrew Watson and his colleagues at the NERC Plymouth marine laboratory and the university of East Anglia announced that experiments in the North sea on the movement of gases between the sea and the air suggested that only 30 per cent. of the carbon dioxide produced from burning fossil fuels ends up in the oceans, compared with the 50 per cent. previously assumed. The implication is that 20 per cent. of the carbon dioxide generated ends up in the soil and biomass on land. The figure may be 10 per cent. or 30 per cent. but it seems to be large and positive.

Sir Hugh Rossi: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman could help me with the research to which he referred. I understand that it referred particularly to the capacity of the oceans to absorb carbon dioxide that the the effect of plankton and pro-plankton in the oceans and their capacity to absorb carbon dioxide and exhale oxygen was missed out. There are tremendous masses of these creatures in the southern Atlantic ocean which may be affected by the hole in the ozone layer. That creates a wholly different dimension. Was that aspect dealt with in the research?

Dr. Bray: The research was covered in a NERC press release dated 31 October and published on 2 November. Work was done on the transfer velocity of gases between sea and air in the North sea. it did not deal with the bio-geochemical fluxes to which the hon. Gentleman referred. He is right that many questions about the accumulation of carbon in the oceans remain to be answered, but it has been discovered that the first stage, where carbon dioxide dissolves into the water, is less important than previously supposed.

Sir Hugh Rossi: The statistics should be treated with some caution because they omit the possibility and probability that other organisms are at work in reducing the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere.

Dr. Bray: Tighter restrictions on the absorption of carbon by the oceans would make the imbalance even greater than the 20 per cent. suggested by NERC. Absorption in the oceans would be less than the 30 per cent. that it now proposes. There would be a greater imbalance, which would accumulate in the soil and biomass on land. The hon. Gentleman is right that the major uncertainties call for more research into every aspect of the problem. I shall come later to the problems of designing policy in the light of those uncertainties.

We cannot do much about absorption in the oceans, but we can and should take measures to reduce carbon dioxide generation by improving energy efficiency and conservation. If casual and haphazard policies already lead to the absorption of 20 per cent. of the carbon dioxide generated instead of its release through deforestation, positive land-based environmental policies seem likely to contribute more to minimising global climate change than we thought a fortnight ago, before the NERC research was published. Such policies could help to feed an increased world population, preserve and enrich the natural environment and make our environment more pleasant for human habitation.

More observations, surveys and experimental work are required. Both the Met office and the NERC have said that theories about how carbon absorption on land is increasing include the extent of re-afforestation in temperate zones—which has tended to be dismissed—and the fertilising effect of increased concentrations of carbon dioxide, which causes greater growth of vegetation throughout the world. No hon. Member believes that we can be certain about what is happening.

Mr. Barry Field (Isle of Wight): The hon. Gentleman has not touched on the problem of catalytic converters. I understand that the Government have been told by scientific advisers that catalytic converters will increase the output of carbon dioxide from motor vehicles by 10 per cent. One of the difficulties that we face is that as we try to cure one problem we increase another.

Dr. Bray: My hon. Friend the Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) will deal with road transport and road vehicle standards and regulations. The hon. Gentleman is right that we must look at all the effects of specific measures, whether regulatory, fiscal or other.

On predictability, the Minister implied that variations beyond 10 to 20-day weather forecasts must be due to external causes. Some of those that he mentioned have been dismissed by scientists but others are significant. Long-term variations, whether due to the annual cycle of solar radiation, year-to-year changes in sea-surface temperature or others, do not necessarily explain the variations in the atmosphere. In Nature on 2 November, I. N. James and P. M. James of Reading university reported that with the non-linear dynamics of the atmosphere, long and slow variations can occur from purely internally-generated dynamics within the atmosphere—not from interaction with the oceans—over periods of 10 to 40 years. When the oceans are included, the internally-generated variations could spread over hundreds of years. At present, no one has the computing capacity to treat that problem. Indeed, even for the 40 years suggested by James and James as the minimum time over which purely atmospheric models should be run, it will take weeks for even the fastest computers to do just one run. The increase in capacity to analyse what is happening in the oceans and atmosphere may disclose a new uncertainty about long-term variations which no amount of computing could overcome. In that case, we may need enhanced capacity to respond to changing trends, accepting that how long they will continue is uncertain.

The pace of production of important new research will continue. I have given only three samples of such research. The results could go either way. New results will continue to flow from all over the world. Certainly, much more research is needed but, equally, we must act now in the light of the best information that we have. The alternative of waiting to react will make life nastier, more brutish and shorter.

The Minister looks puzzled——

Mr. Trippier: Just amazed.

Dr. Bray: Oh, he is just amazed. I hope that he will talk to John Mitchell at the Met Office. He did not go there to get a briefing for his speech this morning.

Mr. Trippier: Who?

Dr. Bray: John Mitchell, who is the scientist in charge of the general circulation model and deals directly with questions of uncertainty in these highly non-linear dynamic systems.

Mr. Trippier: I should be happy to do that, but it is more important to talk to Dr. John Houghton who has been selected to lead the scientific research as part of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. The trouble with the hon. Gentleman's suggestion is that it conflicts with what he was saying five minutes ago. He accepted that a tremendous amount of work remained to be done, and certainly some of the evidence that is coming forward is conflicting. I have an assurance not only from Dr. John Houghton but from the chairman of IPCC that more and accurate information will be forthcoming in February next year.

Dr. Bray: I discussed the matter with John Houghton on Tuesday. I also met those present at the first meeting of the research committee of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, which was held near Oxford. The Minister should talk to those who have been drafting the IPCC report. He will discover that their view is that, with increased research, the uncertainties might increase rather than diminish. We shall certainly get more information, but the Minister should ask the chaps what they think. The Minister seems to think that scientists can be detached and give the best views and answers, which politicians can then mull over. That is not the nature of the problem that we face. We need a much closer dialogue between scientists and politicians.

Let me continue on the question of how we handle the research. We welcome the new centre for the prediction of climatic change which the Prime Minister announced in her speech to the United Nations on Wednesday. We also welcome the fact that it will be located at the Met Office. It will clearly represent an expansion of the work that I saw there on Tuesday.

The Met Office is, by international standards, an outstanding environmental observation, forecasting and research organisation. The researchers there tell me that they gain both from their own experience as forecasters and from the flow of data and methods of handling it. As a visitor, I thought that they also gained—by contrast with some other research institutions—from the tightness and discipline of an organisation that has to work in real time and gets constant feedback from the accuracy or otherwise of its forecasts. No comparable feedback is possible in predicting climatic change but the benefits will spill over because the forecasters have learned what to look out for.

One problem that needs to be overcome is the isolation of the Met Office. It is nonsensical for it to be located in the Ministry of Defence. The disciplined nature of the work of meeting defence operational requirements is congenial and stimulating to those forecasting. But in defence terms, it is curious, to say the least, that the weather forecasting requirements for a modest number of British and NATO flying hours are greater than those for the greater number of civil flying hours. That matter must surely be due for review. The Met Office is moving to agency status, but surely more is needed.

The Met Office should become the core of a wider environmental monitoring, forecasting and research organisation. For example, its scientists had an essential role in tracing and monitoring the Chernobyl fallout. If they are to deal with climatic change, they will have to examine changing land use, changing salinity and ocean circulation and much else besides. They will have to deal with the research community generally. The Met Office will have to become an open and accessible research and communication centre whose methods are available to the scientific community generally.

Within their own central area the scientists now accept —they did not a year ago—that computing power is the limiting factor. But because they have lived in the in-bred world of weather forecasters who, the world over, have demanded and been given the biggest supercomputers, they have neglected the really powerful developments in computing, which are coming with massively parallel computers. Ask any parallel computing buff what is the leading application of parallelism and he will say, "Weather forecasting." Ask him whether he has talked to the weather forecasters, and he will say no.

I have asked the Met Office about this matter. First, it took on a PhD student. Now it has agreed to talk to the algorithm group of the national transputer programme. I bet that in two years' time the Met Office will be running its climate model faster on a parallel processing Meiko computing surface than they can on their Cray YMP, which is to be installed in January. In that form—running the general circulation model on parallel processing—the model can be made available to other scientists to run for themselves. There is a tendency on the part of some in the Met Office to argue that their model is so complex that no one else can run it. Foreigners may come in and run it at Bracknell but they cannot take it off and run it in Norwich or Reading, let alone Japan or Ottawa.

That is how economic modellers argued 10 years ago. The London Business School and the National Institute of Economic and Scientific Research said that their models were so complex that no one else could run them. However, there is the serious scientific counter-argument that if others cannot reproduce the results, those results must be questionable. Nowadays economic models are handed round on floppy discs and run on personal computers. For the economic models in the United Kingdom, it has been useful to have a centre at Warwick university which tests and compares the Treasury, Bank of England, London Business School, NIESR and other models. Similar testing and comparison would be useful for the global general circulation models. I have asked Professor Geraldine Kenney-Wallace, the chairman of the Science Council of Canada, the Government's chief scientific adviser, whether Canada and Japan would like to take on that role. Of the five general circulation models, four are American and one is British. If the Government think that by expanding Bracknell they will somehow pre-empt the world scene in general circulation models, they are up a gum tree. The whole point is that the models —four of which are in the United States—must be available to the scientific community throughout the world. That requires a more imaginative approach to the computing facility organisation and dissemination.

[Dr. Bray]

It is much easier to work in that kind of environment than it is with the supercomputer, common computing service arrangements that the Met Office has been used to. The need though for a wider approach extends beyond computing. Fuller participation in the research community is needed across the board. I am not criticising the fine scientists in the Met Office, who have their hands full and are best left to get on with their job. I am saying that their organisation is wrongly related to other research and other researchers do not gain the full benefit of the unique resources and experience of the Met Ofice. Met Office staff may be better paid than the research community because of the decline of academic salaries in the past 10 years. I hope that they are. The answer to that is that research salaries must be increased. [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor) says that he thought I would say that. Is it really sensible for our most brilliant graduates to be paid £6,000 a year while they are doing research when young, grossly underqualified merchant bankers can pick up twice or three times that amount in the City on leaving college? Does he really think that that is the way in which to treat scientists? He ought to be ashamed of himself, as, indeed, should the whole Government.

The thinness of research cover shows not only in the Met Office's limited approach to computing developments. For example, the Natural Environment Research Council in its recent experiments in the North Sea on the absorption of gasses by the oceans, could not find a scientist to count the white horses in different sea states to estimate the effect of spray and bubbles directly in increasing the effective air-sea surface area. The same story can be told across the board. We cannot carry out research in isolation. It must be done in the whole research community. If we starve the research community, the research will be second rate.

The right place for the Met Office and climate research is surely alongside the research councils. There should be a joint research directorate on the global environment. It could then carry out a coherent programme of research on the global and more local environment. The Met Office cannot track down the cycles of carbon dioxide and greenhouse gases from the land, in the oceans and in the atmosphere.

The Prime Minister cannot co-ordinate all this herself. No Minister at a lower level has that responsibility. The Secretary of State for the Environment is not allowed to do it and the Minister responsible for the research councils would not accept that anyway. It is all a bit of a muddle.

The Prime Minister proposed in her United Nations speech that the role of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change should be prolonged after it submits its report next year so that:

> "It can provide an authoritative scientific base for the negotiation"

The Prime Minister seems to be under a misapprehension. The panel was asked to write a report, not to direct research. It has not and will not carry out, plan or commission research. The report for the second world climate conference is being put together by 29 lead authors from 13 countries using 200 contributors to produce a 200-page report. I have been told that the material really needs a 20,000-page report. However, that 200-page report will be distilled into a 20-page policy summary and no doubt into a two-page press release. That will be all that most people will see. New research results will be fed into sections of the report on climate observations and predictions.

The report of the intergovernmental panel will be subject to peer review. But that is not the way in which research is carried out. The world climate programme and the international geosphere-biosphere programmes plan research. The Prime Minister said that we do not need more institutions. I am sure that the intergovernmental panel will produce an admirable report, but perhaps we should wait and see whether the scientists who draft the report and the politicians who read it feel that that is the best way of interacting and whether they even want to repeat that particular exercise.

Certainly the intergovernmental panel would be placed under great pressure if it had to pronounce the last word or even the best available word on global climate policies next November. That would place it in an impossible position. We should make it clear in this House that we accept that it is an unfolding story. The achievements of British scientists and their contribution to our understanding of the global climate have been despite rather than because of the appalling and abysmally incompetent way in which they have been organised by the Government.

In the much more difficult phase of application to policy on which we are now entering, the organisation as a whole must be put into better shape. There is a disjunction on policy between what the Prime Minister says and what Britain and Ministers do.

Britain emits more carbon dioxide per dollar of gross domestic product than any other industrial country. It emits 327 tonnes per million dollars of GDP compared with 307 tonnes in Canada, 299 tonnes in the United States, 293 tonnes in Germany, 216 tonnes in Italy, 204 tonnes in France and 184 tonnes in Japan. On carbon dioxide, Britain is not just the dirty man of Europe, but of the world. In that we are in a class of our own. I am sure that hon. Members will want to know that those figures come from estimates made in the journal "World Resources" 1988-89 with sources from the university of New Orleans and the Woods Hole research centre in the United States. The GDP figures that I have used are the latest figures from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and relate to 1985.

Sir Hugh Rossi: I am always troubled by figures like that, particularly when they give percentages of emissions and activities in other countries. We know the methodology and the basis of figures produced in this country and we know the great care that is taken over them. However, some of the countries which the hon. Gentleman listed are perhaps not so methodical. The basis of those figures is not as accurate as ours. We have noted that not in that sphere, but in many others. Very often there is a basis of guestimate in the figures produced by other countries. Is the hon. Gentleman satisfied that the researchers to whom he has referred carried out the work themselves using a uniform methodology, or did they rely on figures supplied by other countries which may use different bases altogether?

Dr. Bray: I am afraid that in the international research and statistical community, the reputation and integrity of British Government statistics has suffered a great deal under this Government. There are great uncertainties and they must be more carefully examined. The figures for carbon dioxide emissions are by no means the least accurate. The greater uncertainties relate to other stocks and flows of carbon dioxide within the oceans, on land and in the atmosphere. It is easy to point to the general problems which lie with the fuel inefficiencies of British industry, lack of insulation standards——

Mr. Timothy Kirkhope (Leeds, North-East): What about coal?

Dr. Bray: The hon. Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope) has referred to coal. What about Germany? It is as dependent on coal as we are. However, we need more vigorous energy efficiency and conservation and insulation measures to get our figures anywhere near comparable to the levels in other countries.

It is generally agreed that easily the quickest and most effective way of reducing carbon dioxide emissions is through increasing energy efficiency. On information and promotional campaigns for homes and industry, regulations and standards for appliances and buildings, financial and tax incentives for homes and industry, the Government have a long and wide record of retreat and veto. On international protocols on chlorofluorocarbons, carbon dioxide, vehicle emission standards and water standards it has been the same story, with Britain trying time and again to set a slower and less definite pace.

The Secretary of State for the Environment tried to set a new direction when he moved into the Department. He gave a fanfare—or at least a peep or two—for Professor Pearce's "Blueprint for a Green Economy" which I thought was an interesting document. It was all about bending markets in an environmentally favourable direction and anticipatory rather than reactive environmental policies—anticipatory of highly uncertain measures of probability which the Minister seems to think that scientists will be able to brush away for him, which they certainly will not.

Since the Pearce report was published, we have heard nothing more. At the United Nations this week the Prime Minister was back on the same old theme. She said that free markets

> "would defeat their object if by their output they did more damage to the quality of life through pollution, than the well-being they achieve by the production of goods and services."

So what? Free markets often defeat their objective. Professor Pearce and the Secretary of State for the Environment would bend the market. The Prime Minister would re-define the benefit or the quality of life to make the market queen.

The general nature of environmental degradation is that the effect of damaging factors such as CFCs can grow rapidly, with the environment recovering only slowly when the factor is cut out. Every year's delay in acting on CFCs means four years longer before effects fall to half today's levels. There is an urgency.

At the United Nations the Prime Minister urged the adoption of binding protocols on the different aspects of climate change at the 1992 world conference on environment and development. She said that none will be more contentious than the need to control emissions of carbon dioxide. She can say that again. But why wait until 1992? Why not use the world climate conference in November 1990 to adopt initial protocols on all the obvious measures to conserve resources which should be undertaken any way, and which the Government have been steadily resisting. Why not set targets and dates, which can then be reviewed and tightened up in 1992? Why delay and risk diplomatic breakdown in 1992?

There is no inconsistency between such early and firm action, and the most demanding research. They reinforce each other. I am confident that we can hand on this lovely world to our children and grandchildren in a better state than we found it, if we take thought and act now.

Sir Ian Lloyd (Havant): The hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) and I would probably be regarded by many of our colleagues—I say this without offence to him, even if it disparages myself—as members of that small group of political eccentrics who browse around in the dustbins of policy, hoping occasionally to come across the word "science". The hon. Gentleman and I have attended many debates on this and similar subjects over the past 25 years. Therefore, I wholly understand his reaction to the suggestion that our most brilliant graduates should be paid only £6,000 a year. I have heard that point made almost every year for the past 25 years, irrespective of which side of the House I was on.

I make a more general criticism. It is not so much a failure of one or other particular party, it is a failure of our culture to recognise the significance and importance of science and to elevate it within the nation more continuously and more substantially than Governments of either party have chosen to do during the past 25 years. I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman would accept that comment. Obviously, he must make his political points, and I understand that.

I followed with great interest what the hon. Gentleman said about the importance of computing, not least because it is one of the subjects that we discussed in Washington a few weeks ago. I welcome and support much of what my hon. Friend the Minister said, although I disagree with one or two minor points. I particularly like his emphasis on the solution that will come from human ingenuity. There are vast problems, but human ingenuity is a vast resource. In this context, the primary resource lies within science and nowhere else. No one should ever forget that.

Here we are again on a Friday, discussing probably the most momentous issue facing the human race. I suppose we should be grateful for the crumbs of comfort which fall from the power man's table. My right hon. and learned Friend the Leader of the House would probably validly reply that, if he were to grant us a two-day debate, the Chamber would probably be much fuller than it is now. Hon. Members who are concerned about these matters would probably find it difficult to keep the debate going. When the cameras are operating in the next few months, the country will begin to assess our judgments about the importance of our affairs, and that will be a constructive and positive influence on us.

The Select Committee on the Environment, which I chair, had the honour to present to the House a report on the energy policy implications of the greenhouse effect. The Government's response reached me yesterday. I will not weary the House by repeating many of the recommendations and conclusions in the report, which I hope most hon. Members present will probably have read for themselves, but the principal points were the urgency, scale and complexity of the issue. I am pleased to say that, in their reply, the Government accepted virtually all of what we said, but I shall draw attention to one or two points of residual disagreement.

[Sir Ian Lloyd]

One issue is research and development. We emphasised as strongly as we could the need for a dramatic increase in research and development. The Government replied that they do not believe that they should "arbitrarily specify a proportion of gross domestic product"

"because effective research requires a bottom up pressure of sensible ideas and cannot simply be called into existence by allocating large R and D funds."

I accept the generality of that conclusion, but we are now possibly looking at the necessary worldwide measures to defend the future of the human race. If one measures the R and D now being spent principally by the great industrial countries on this subject, and take that as a percentage of what they are still spending to defend themselves as nation states, one notes that it is a minuscule sum. In Committee, I argued—I am afraid, unsuccessfully—that we should form this as a percentage of defence R and D so that the willingness of Governments to face up to this issue can clearly be perceived by those who support them. In Committee, my friends supported me to the extent of making it a percentage not of defence R and D but of gross domestic product. I am sorry that the Government have not seen fit to go at least a little way down that road.

Dr. Bray: On the relationship with defence, does the hon. Gentleman agree that it is absurd for the Ministry of Defence to be in charge of the Met Office? Would it not be much better for it to be in its original position under the Board of Trade? There is absolutely no reason why it should not move from where it is now.

Sir Ian Lloyd: That is as may be. I do not disagree profoundly, but the importance of the subject requires our conclusion that its work should be thoroughly and well done and fully funded, under whichever Ministry it falls. From evidence given to the House of Lords Selection Subcommittee on this subject, I understand that those concerned are not greatly worried about their relationship with the Ministry of Defence. It is a somewhat esoteric point.

Mr. Dalyell: I have respected the hon. Gentleman's knowledge of these matters for 20 years. Has he seen page 28 of the copy of "New Scientist" of 4 November in which a table shows how Britain compares with other European countries in the distribution of Government funds for R and D? The figure for Britain is 48·4 per cent.—easily higher than any other European country's expenditure on defence—West Germany 12·7 per cent., Italy 7 per cent., and the Netherlands 2·8 per cent. It is a tell-tale table.

Sir Ian Lloyd: I agree that it is a telling table, and many conclusions can be drawn from it. We could incidentally draw a beneficial conclusion from it. If our defence R and D is high, so must our global warming R and D be high. The incentive would be to increase one and reduce the other if we are to keep both as a given percentage of R and D.

My Committee carefully considered many policies, recommendations and proposals on alternative energy and new systems which would be carbon dioxide benign. There is no doubt that immense interest has been shown in the use of hydrogen as a possible fuel, and even as a substitute for petrol and fuels of that kind. The OECD conference in April, which looked at alternative technologies for the reduction of the emission of greenhouse gases, produced some extraordinarily interesting papers on the subject of hydrogen.

I refer first to the Government's reply on the question of hydrogen. They say that they accept our recommendation that the potential benefits should be reviewed and that they are undertaking such a review with the energy technology support unit. They state:

"However, for any impact on CO_2 emissions to acrue from the use of hydrogen, it must be produced, usually using electricity, from a non-fossil source."

That is grotesquely inaccurate.

If those who drafted the paper had read the papers that were presented at the OECD conference in Paris, they would have seen that one of the most exciting new technologies now being considered is the use of nuclear heat to upgrade natural gas to hydrogen.

In the context of this paper, there is the suggestion that, if the industrialised world moves, as the authors think it will—and rapidly—during the next two decades, to a natural gas-based economy, yielding a hydrogen economy, the power requirement to convert natural gas into hydrogen would be about 3,000 GW of nuclear electricity. Worldwide, the figure would be about 7,000. The world energy economy would then be based completely on hydrogen and, to all intents and purposes, CO_2 would be eliminated.

The Government must think again and think carefully about their commitment to hydrogen research. I am glad that my right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State for Energy has followed through what we told him about the work being done in co-operation by West Germany, Canada and the United States.

I now turn to the Prime Minister's speech at the United Nations, which I personally consider to be a fine speech. The lead must come from right at the top and my right hon. Friend has given that lead in her characteristically vigorous and effective manner. Much of that speech will stand careful and critical examination. My right hon. Friend emphasised the scale of the threat—and I agree with what she said. She emphasised the possible runaway or irreversible quality of the greenhouse effect. I entirely agree. She also emphasised the need for a vast international co-operative effort. I have some views on what she meant by that and on what I see as being necessary.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said that science is an indispensable contributor to the solution, a welcome conclusion. She said that different nations may have to consider programmes differing in quality, scale and complexity. Those are my words, not hers, but I believe that I summarise what she said. I add simply that the main thing is that those programmes should respond to the same criteria. My right hon. Friend said that nuclear power is the most environmentally safe form of energy. I wholly concur with that view. I shall return in a few moments to the questions about nuclear power that were raised yesterday.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said that we must expand our model building capacity. The hon. Member for Motherwell, South fully endorsed that point and I shall return to it. My right hon. Friend also said that we will not succeed without the full co-operation of the research and development capacity and capabilities of the multinationals—a sound point. She reaffirmed the initiative taken by the Government and said that we need a framework convention, filled out with specific undertakings.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Does the right hon. Gentleman agree that the Prime Minister did not accept any commitment to action and refused to set targets for reductions in CO_2 emissions in Britain?

Sir Ian Lloyd: I am coming to that because my next point is to endorse what the Prime Minister said about the need to agree targets and to develop new technologies for dealing with those problems——

Mr. Allan Roberts: When?

Sir Ian Lloyd: I shall come on to the question of when, because it relates to the problem of scientific uncertainty. The hon. Gentleman must not assume that I do not understand the importance of this or the policies that are now required. If he will exercise a little patience, he may approve of what I am about to say.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said that we had to increase our research and development. I agree and wholly endorse that view. Finally, she said that we must help the poorer countries. That point raises one of the biggest policy and political issues that has ever been before the House.

My endorsement so far of what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said is thus enthusiastic and whole-hearted. However, in fairness to the House and to my own position, I must enter a few caveats. My first is purely scientific and technical. The Prime Minister said, in effect, that we had to place great emphasis on the planting and replanting of forests, and that this process contributes to the CO_2 position. That is not quite accurate. As the evidence presented to the House of Lords Select Committee that considered the science base of this question pointed out a few weeks ago, stable forests—whether tropical or temperate—do not remove carbon dioxide, whatever their other merits. That is an important point.

The evidence pointed out that the most that one can expect from forest replanting on a massive scale as a contribution to the greenhouse problem, in relation to the massive scale of our present pollution of the environment, is about 10 per cent. Of course, 10 per cent. is not insignificant; it is of the greatest importance, but it is produced only by new trees growing to maturity. The moment those trees reach maturity, the natural ecosystem goes into balance as far as carbon dioxide is concerned. It is important that that fact is known, because it could exercise an important and significant effect on policy.

The International Institute of Applied Systems Research recently produced a profoundly interesting analysis of carbon 14, a radioactive component of carbon, from which it reliably deduced the proportion of carbon dioxide contributed by various activities. Its analysis is relevant to this debate, because that which has come from land clearance over the centuries, including in the Brazilian forests, is the major contributor and accounts for 265 trillion tonnes of carbon dioxide, whereas that which has come from fossil fuels—although also very large—is less, at 170 trillion tonnes of carbon dioxide. When we are considering the relative contributions from different sources, we must therefore pay close attention to land clearance.

Although this is perhaps understandable in any Prime Minister, my right hon. Friend seems from time to time to exhibit a certain antipathy towards new institutions. In her words, we need to strengthen those which already exist. However, I ask the House to consider whether that will be enough. I believe that it will be enough to produce the science and to organise great international conferences at which great and important resolutions are passed. It may be enough to organise the necessary exchanges of data. I do not need to remind the House—and certainly not the hon. Member for Motherwell—that exchanges of data between supercomputers are a necessary component of the research, but can be an expensive business.

What about the specific undertakings and protocols to which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister referred? She referred to "effective regimes" to supervise and monitor their application. I agree, but do such effective regimes exist? What could the United Nations do as an organisation to enforce such regimes and how could it enforce them? Even the light protocols cause the most profound reactions. I remind the House that the 20 per cent. protocol agreed at the Toronto conference could be described as a light protocol in the context of the threat. When the policy makers returned home to say, "We may have to reduce fossil fuel emissions by 20 per cent. within a decade," the reactions were profound and far-reaching. Therefore, I repeat the question that has already been asked—what are we going to do about it?

I turn now to the vital point, which is where I disagree to some extent with my hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier), who believes that the political will exists to execute imminent change on the scale that is contemplated. Logically, he may therefore have to agree that the institutions exist through which we can exercise that political will. Although the political will has been expressed in vigorous, interesting and dramatic terms at international conferences, in my judgment the political will to follow through that policy right across the globe to a degree that will be effective does not exist. That political will does not exist because public opinion has not yet begun to be aware of the scale of possible change that Governments will ask their publics to accept. When the public do not understand that, there is no political will because Governments do not have public support.

Do the institutions necessary to carry out policy exist? Our international institutions are frail, fragile and tend to be powerless. We may be moving into an era when frailty, fragility and powerlessness are simply not enough. The proper institutions must be created. At the Paris conference, a distinguished Japanese contributor, Mr. Akira Kinashinta, said:

> "There seem to be no adequate policy sciences capable of handling this issue."

I believe that that is accurate.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is optimistic —that optimism has been qualified to some extent by the hon. Member for Motherwell, South—about the eminence of scientific proof. That scientific proof is necessary to underpin the political decisions and policies that must be followed if it is correct that we are already suffering from the greenhouse effect. The circumstantial evidence to support that theory is powerful.

[Sir Ian Lloyd]

I am not optimistic about the eminence of scientific proof. The consensus of the advice given to my Committee and to the House of Lords Committee—unfortunately that Committee will not report until next week, but I have read all seven volumes of the evidence given to it—by responsible scientists is that we shall not have the answers in under 10 years. Both Committees visited Washington a few weeks ago. We had a fascinating week which started with a meeting with the scientific adviser to the President, Dr. Bromley. We talked to the National Academy of Sciences, the Department of Energy and the Department of the Environment, and we had discussions with the advisers to some of the relevant committees in the Senate and Congress. The judgment given to us in evidence was wholly reinforced in the United States. No one there is expecting demonstrable proof from their scientists within the next 10 years.

In the United States, we were given a remarkable example of what is involved. At the moment, the vast global climate models that have been created are limited by the number of grid points from which information can be received and processed. Dr. Bromley told us that they would like to reduce the grid size from 100 square miles per grid to about 20 square miles per grid. To process that information so that policy makers can obtain the answers means that the supercomputers would have to be 500 times more powerful. The hon. Member for Motherwell, South will understand precisely what that means. Although the rate of increase in computer power has been staggering, we are asking for another staggering increase before we can achieve the grid size necessary to enable us to make reasonable predictions about regional variations, never mind about other matters.

Dr. Bray: The hon. Gentleman is absolutely right. It is now suggested that further research might disclose that we are up against a barrier of ignorance that will be with us for ever, whatever the amount of computing. We shall always be faced with the problem of having to act against the background of great uncertainty.

Sir Ian Lloyd: I accept that and I am reminded of Albert Einstein, who said that the tree of scientific knowledge would continue to grow, but that the space between the branches would always be far greater than that which they occupied.

The global climate models are of immense sophistication and brilliance. They demand ever vaster computer power, but they remain primitive, incomplete, partial and tentative.

One of the vital areas areas of contribution to the interchange of carbon dioxide between the oceans and the climate is the Southern ocean. The key area of the Southern ocean is off South Africa, but that country has been excluded from the world meteorological conference. It is no longer supplying information on the scale required by various organisations. How stupid can we get?

The conclusion that must be drawn by policy makers is that we shall have no scientific proof or certainty for 10 to 20 years. The evidence that appears within that period is likely to be circumstantial or anecdotal. Within that time, we cannot separate the signal from the noise—an interesting term used by communication engineers. In this case, the noise is that of the natural environment and refers to such immense forces as the movement of the El Nino current, about 400 miles north of the Pacific. We do not know whether the droughts in the mid-west of the United States last year were the direct result of El Nino or the direct consequence of the imminence of the greenhouse effect.

For the next 10 to 20 years we are on our own, and there will be an unavoidable and tremendous dependence on judgment. We must start examining the political requirements presented to us by that situation. We must start examining now the consequences of what can only be described as "worst case" scenarios. We were shown one curve in the United States relating to an assessment of the economic cost to the United States if sea levels rose successively. That curve traced the effect of a probable rise of a few centimetres through to the possible rise should the Antarctic ice cap melt.

If that happens, sea levels would rise by between 10 and 15 m. Under the worst case scenario, nearly the entire gross national product of the United States would be absorbed in defending its coastal regions. An equal analysis would apply to the rest of the world. In the United Kingdom we must start looking at worst case, medium threat and low-threat scenarios. We must start to publish the results and prepare public opinion for what might be necessary.

Neither the political will nor the political mechanisms exist to deal with any worst case scenario. Even medium-threat scenarios would challenge the incomplete, spasmodic and largely powerless instruments that have been created by the nation states. Faced by the problem, the nation states will not set environmental policy examples that are industrially damaging to their own economies. The internal political pressure against such policies would be overpowering. They will not make great sacrifices by restricting greenhouse emissions when logic shows that their marginal contribution brings no national benefit and is offset by massive increases elsewhere.

Even allowing for the figures produced by the hon. Member for Motherwell, South, the United Kingdom contributes 3 per cent. to the greenhouse effect—the contribution from our industrial power stations is less than that. Any decision taken by policy makers will be queried if, for example, next year, the Chinese increase their coal burn emissions more than the total reduction of emissions achieved in western Europe. That is the key point. Will the Chinese react to an extreme event? They will do so only if it occurs within their area of political and economic interest.

I attended a conference in London a couple of weeks ago when I said:

> "By adopting the most rigorous and sensible greenhouse effect policies, individual nations can conceivably mitigate the consequences for everyone. They cannot mitigate the consequences proportionately to their own efforts for themselves and this is a completely new state of affairs. The implications are very far reaching. In increasingly large areas of life and policy and in all the areas covered by energy, there is no longer such a thing as a coherent national policy."

Such a policy can be said to have coherence only if it forms part of a global energy policy which, as a whole, has relevance to the problems for the global environment caused by the global energy system and fuel mix.

What questions should we ask, and are we doing the right sums? Will enough answers arrive in the right timescale? We do not know. If not, will more money achieve that objective? Money is a necessary, if not sufficient, condition for success and it is one necessary condition which we can and must fulfil. Are we beginning to prepare public opinion and institutions for the possibility of having to face severe short-term energy-related dislocations?

Putting man on the moon demanded new tools and technology, and a massive commitment of resources on a scale unprecedented for the human race. Keeping man's tenancy of the earth may well require a worldwide programme by comparison with which all previous resource allocation records—even in war and when putting man on the moon—will pale into insignificance.

I shall refer to the reaction in this morning's national press to yesterday's announcement about nuclear energy. Those opposed to, and hostile to, nuclear power claim the announcement as a great victory. They said that the British Government had recognised the folly of their ways and are going to slow down and then retreat from nuclear power. That is not a conclusion of which anyone need be proud. Anyone who is fully aware of the range of complexities involved in this issue will realise that no solution is available to the United Kingdom, Western Europe or the industrial developed world which neglects or sets on one side the vital contribution now made by nuclear power and which—as I implied earlier in relation to hydrogen—could have to increase dramatically.

Alternatives are all very well. The latest estimate by the International Energy Agency is that, at the most, it could make a 1 per cent. contribution.

Mr. Alan W. Williams (Carmarthen): It has not had the chance.

Sir Ian Lloyd: May be it has not had the chance, but even the most optimistic assessment—the free capital investment at zero rates of interests—gives figures of about 5 per cent. I am not concerned about those figures, but about the other 95 per cent. of contributions which we know cannot be met in that way. I have no doubt that the contribution from energy conservation could be dramatically increased but, during the next several decades, we shall depend on slow transition because there is no other way. Our societies cannot afford greater capital investment than more than the 3 per cent. or 4 per cent. change per annum in our energy systems.

During the next few decades we shall be vitally dependent on not only coal, the supply of which we shall have to improve by dramatic capital investment and changes in technology, but on nuclear power. We may well have to become dependent, if predictions prove correct, on natural gas and the nuclear power processing of natural gas. Therefore, those who cry triumph must look carefully at their analysis and the information on which they have based their judgment. I fear that they will have to eat their words and will become uncomfortable.

Let us not destroy the prospect of nuclear power by clutching vast numbers out of the air, as we have been doing, and attaching them to such processes as decommissioning when we do not know what the capability and contribution will be from the ingenuity which will exist in science and technology in half a century or a century's time. We may be able to decommission a nuclear power facility at a small fraction of the cost which is now estimated. Therefore, let us not take a figure of £10 billion, apply that to the British nuclear industry and say that it is uneconomic, we must scrap it and not consider it as an option. That is a fatal judgment which is fatally flawed.

Mr. Tony Marlow (Northampton, North): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. You will know that last night a European instrument was discussed and debated in the House and that next week further European instruments are to be discussed and debated. Those instruments have a major effect on the powers of this House. You will also know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, of the dramatic events in Germany and the potential for the reunification of Germany which is pregnant with impact for our continent. Massive events are taking place which could radically effect the relationship of this country with Europe and European institutions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. What is the point of order for me?

Mr. Marlow: The point of order for you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that in view of the dramatic events which have taken place and the, as yet unknown, impact which those events should have on our potential relationship with Europe and European institutions, would it be possible for you to get a Minister to come to the Dispatch Box to give a statement on the relevant significance of these major events and the likely outcome for this country and its relationship with other European institutions? That is an urgent point which should be addressed immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have received no request for a statement. I am sure that what the hon. Gentleman has said has been heard by Ministers.

11.17 am

Mr. Gordon Oakes (Halton): When I was coming into the House on Wednesday I read a headline—I think in the Evening Standard—which struck terror in my heart. It said "Thatcher to save the world". That was the sort of hype about the speech last Wednesday. If the Prime Minister wants to save the world, why do we have a debate in the House on a Friday and not in prime time? If she wanted to save the world, why did not the Prime Minister come to the House and make a statement about her speech to the United Nations? Apparently, the whole world was in her hands. Surely she could come to the House and tell us about it.

The matter is being discussed on a Friday and the Secretary of State is not even present. However, a Minister is present for whom I have the highest personal regard and respect because he has helped me and my constituents considerably. But even he has to leave the House before the end of the debate. That is a sign of the sincerity of the Government's attitude to the environment.

Let us consider the events of three days of this week. When my noble Friend Lord Wilson of Rievaulx was the Leader of the Opposition he coined the famous phrase that a week was a long time in politics. As time has advanced, the timescale has gone down and now three days is an immensely long time in politics.

The Minister attended and led the delegation at an important conference at The Hague. He has given his version of events to the House, but it contradicts what I have read, and not only in The Guardian. The hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), the Liberal spokesman, also gained a totally different impression of the conference.

[Mr. Gordon Oakes]

My impression of what the Government were going to do was formed from my reading of The Observer—[Interruption.] The Minister laughs about The Observer and The Guardian. I read The Observer and the impression that I formed, and still have, is that we were delaying and saying that instead of having fixed dates and targets we would act as soon as possible. That was what we were saying to Europe when the issue of air pollution was raised. At that time we wanted to delay and forestall our action. I fear that that is precisely what the Prime Minister was doing in New York.

It is well known that if there is a problem, a royal commission is set up. The Prime Minister suggests that we should set up a world commission and do nothing about the problem. Although I admire and appreciate the Government's generosity in spending £100 million over three years to stop the erosion and deforestation in Brazil and Africa—it is a good and generous move on the part of the Government who are heading in the right direction—they are spending money on more blotting paper when we should stop spilling ink. We should not put the blame on the Brazilian or Zaire Governments and bribe them not to use their natural resources.

We should stop pollution, but the Government are significantly failing to do that. I agree with the hon. Member for Havant (Sir I Lloyd). Indeed, I agreed with every word of his speech—as I usually do. It is always interesting to listen to him.

On Wednesday, the Prime Minister said that, environmentally, the nuclear industry could be the salvation of the atmosphere. Yet what happened when she stepped off her jet plane? She went to a Cabinet meeting which, for commercial reasons, said that the nuclear industry should not go ahead. That is the measure of the Government's sincerity on the atmosphere. I fully accept the right hon. Lady's assertion that nuclear energy is cleaner for the atmosphere than our fossil fuels—but having boasted about that, she has decided that the taxpayer must take responsibility because the private sector cannot afford decommissioning and the control of nuclear waste. Presumably, the public nuclear sector will be in competition with the privatised sector, which exists to make a profit. Will further resources be committed to nuclear power when it is in the public sector while the remainder of the industry is in the private sector? The truth is that when it comes down to commercial reasons, the environment goes out of the window.

The nuclear industry is costly because we set environmental standards following public concern about the disposal of nuclear waste. We accept that the disposal of such waste must be paid for. Coal-fired and oil-fired stations simply chuck their waste up into the atmosphere where it does no much damage. If we dealt with those fumes—as we have the technology to do—reduced the amount of acid rain, took out the SO_2 and reduced the carbon dioxide content, the true cost of the privatised energy sector would be as high as the nuclear sector. At the moment, we merely chuck all the fumes into the atmosphere and other nations, as well as ours, suffer.

There are three main factors in the warming of the atmosphere: first, carbon dioxide, which is by far the biggest; secondly, the emissions from cars of nitrous oxide; and, thirdly—and more minor—CFCs. As I have already said, the Government are simply providing blotting paper for Brazil, but are doing nothing about the ink that is being spilt. Indeed, they are going backwards.

For carbon dioxide and car emissions we have the necessary technology. We do not need new technology, we simply need to spend more money on the technology that we already have. It is a question of cash. I noted that in her New York speech the Prime Minister referred to lean-burn engines. Britain is in the forefront of the world in that technology. But although they reduce pollution at slow speeds—for example, when driving round London—once on a motorway when the speed increases the lean-burn engine emits just as many pollutants as the traditional engine. We already have catalytic converters, and I believe that they are the answer to the problem. I am glad that the Government reduced the tax on unleaded petrol; it is the sort of initiative that they should be showing to a much greater degree. Catalytic converters would significantly improve the environment. They should be compulsory not only on new cars but on existing cars.

Sir Hugh Rossi: Although the hon. Gentleman is right to say that the use of catalytic converters will reduce the volume of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emitted into the atmosphere, they also increase the amount of carbon dioxides emitted—in other words, they aggravate the greenhouse effect and global warming.

Mr. Oakes: I am not a scientist, but I understand that nitrous oxide from car emissions has a catalytic effect with carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, which seriously increases the warming effect. Apparently the two go together. I am not a scientist, so I will not argue the point.

The Government have not seriously dealt with the two factors of carbon dioxide and nitrous oxide. The Prime Minister might make a great speech in New York, but this country is doing nothing about that problem.

Britain has a success story on CFCs and the Montreal agreement, although no thanks to the Government. I am proud to say that in my constituency, ICI—the cradle of the chemical industry—has found the alternative to CFCs. It has spent more than £100 million on a crash research programme. The plant making the new product will be in operation in 13 months, in January 1991. Another plant will be opened in Louisiana in the United States. This country is ahead of the world in providing substitutes for CFCs. The new product will be called KLEA 134A—it is a trade name and the initials have no significance. It has been toxicologically tested and is as good as, or better than, CFC 12. In addition, and at its own expense, ICI has agreed to take in all old refrigerators so that it can safely dispose of the waste. It will also take in fire extinguishers using halon. ICI is an environmentally conscious company.

The Prime Minister was at least right when she said in New York that some of the criticisms of multinational companies was wrong. ICI is an example of a multinational company that is making a considerable impact on improving the environment.

Mr. David Tredinnick (Bosworth): I was interested to hear the right hon. Gentleman's remarks about KLEA 134A. Has ICI given an undertaking to take all the redundant refrigerators in the country and remove the harmful CFC gases, or is it just a local initiative? I am sure that it is a move that would be welcomed in Leicestershire.

Mr. Oakes: It is certainly not a local initiative; I think that it is national. ICI has reached agreement with a major waste and scrap firm to take off its hands anything containing CFC 12, which is the most damaging of the CFCs to the ozone layer.

Mr. Dalyell: I wish to put on record the appreciation of an hon. Member from a different part of the country for the efforts both of my right hon. Friend and ICI at Runcorn in explaining objectively, while open to critical questions, the marvellous work that the company has done.

Mr. Oakes: I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), to my hon. Friends the Members for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) and for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) and to some Conservative Members whom I do not see in the Chamber for attending the meeting with ICI. The people at ICI are scientists and know the damage that could be caused to the climate and to the world. They wanted to inform hon. Members about what they were doing, but not in an advertising sense because at that time they did not have the product. The ICI scientists merely told us what they were trying to do. At the time they had not succeded, but now they have. I am proud of that success and the fact that the product was developed in my constituency. I welcome the debate, but I do not think for a moment that the Government are sincere about the environment.

Mr. Trippier: I am listening carefully to the right hon. Gentleman. Much of what he says is fair and I am grateful to him for the nice things that he said about me. If he wishes to continue to be fair he should not make such statements. He said that the Government played no part in the reduction of CFCs. But about four things have happened in which the Government took the lead. First, as he and I know, it was British scientists taking part in the Antarctic survey who first discovered the erosion of the ozone layer. That survey was sponsored by the Government. We were the first to sign the Vienna convention and played such a part in the Montreal protocol that it was recognised that we should host the ozone layer conference. It is recognised internationally that we are in the lead because people are content to come back to London next June. We should be proud of that. The Government have taken many initiatives on the matter and the right hon. Gentleman should not say that we are not in the least concerned about the environment.

Mr. Oakes: The Government have taken an initiative by saying that there is a problem but they have done nothing to provide a solution. That was left to ICI. When the product was first developed by ICI no one knew about its effect on the ozone layer or the environment. As soon as the Government found out they reacted and tried to do something about it. The Government should take much greater initiatives with companies such as the Central Electricity Generating Board and with industry generally to make sure that it is as environmentally conscious as ICI. They should do something to save the planet.

11.32 am

Sir Hugh Rossi (Hornsey and Wood Green): As this is the first opportunity that I have had of doing so on the Floor of the House, may I welcome my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to his new post? Last week, my Committee found his attendance most helpful. At that time he gave evidence on another subject and displayed a concern, an openness of mind and a willingness to be flexible on the issues that concerned us. I am grateful for that.

I was fascinated by the erudite contribution of my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) who is the Chairman of the Select Committee on Energy. The House knows the contribution that he has made to that subject. For many years he has devoted his parliamentary life to a study of such matters and he and his Committee have added greatly to our knowledge about matters which have recently become of much greater political significance than was the case when he embarked on his course many years ago.

It is understandable that Opposition Members should take a cynical view of what they regard as the conversion of the Government. Reference has been made to the speech by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister at the United Nations. My hon. Friend the Member for Havant put that speech in its proper perspective, and I join him in welcoming the profound and important statements that it contained. Britain should be proud of the fact that it is being seen to take the lead in matters that present the world with enormous problems requiring solutions.

I know that Opposition Members do not want to hear about such matters and adopt a cynical attitude. However, it is part of the Opposition's function to adopt such an attitude, because if they did not question what the Government were doing they would not be operating correctly. The way that some Opposition Members talk about what are called the green issues is a little rich. I recall —the hon. Member for Bootle will remember this—that only six years ago my Committee decided to look into the phenomenon of atmospheric pollution. We embarked upon an inquiry which, for want of a better term we called acid rain, into the consequences of the burning of fossil fuels. The hon. Member for Bootle will remember, when the Chairman first raised those subjects as possible matters for inquiry, the bemusement with which some members of the Committee greeted the suggestions. They asked what acid rain was, how it was important and how it affected us and Parliament. They asked how it affected the nation and, in an aside, they said, "There are not many votes in it, are there, because the public are not concerned?"

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): I agree with much of what the hon. Gentleman has said so far, and especially with his suggestion that concern for green issues has come late to all political parties. One of the things we complain about is that it has come particularly late to the Prime Minister. There is an element of cynicism among those of us who have been involved with those issues for many years, even before we were in Parliament. In many senses, the Prime Minister is using them as a way of diverting attention from what is going on at home so that she can get headlines such as:

> "Thatcher's plan to save the world".

Sir Hugh Rossi: I do not accept that for a moment. I have nothing whatever to gain by doing so but I can say that I am perfectly satisfied that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has a deep personal conviction on these matters.

Let us look at what is happening. I spoke about the inquiry into acid rain, which was met with scepticism and cynicism all round. As my Committee says in the opening part of its report, members of the Committee approached the subject with an open mind because they knew very little about the subject at that time. That reflected the situation in the House. We came back absolutely convinced about the problem and the need for action, and we reported accordingly.

The reaction outside to the report was typical of the mentality of the country as a whole. No political party excluded, the reaction was summarised very nicely in the third leader of The Times following the publication of our report. It posed the questions: "What are these 11 men up to? Are they trying to scare us? They have gone over the top by exaggerating a situation for which there is no real scientific evidence."

The consensus at that time was that no scientific nexus existed between emissions from power stations and industry and damage to the environment. That was the majority view in this country and the advice given to the Government. That advice was given also to the Labour party. It required 11 hon. Members from all parts of the House to take the trouble to study, to go abroad and to investigate the subject for themselves, so that they could subsequently identify the dangers. From that time on, some notice began to be taken both in the House and outside.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: Is it not the case the Britain was about the last country in Europe to acknowledge the problem of acid rain and the last to join the 30 per cent. club? Is it not true also that Britain has done less to tackle the problem than any other Community member?

Sir Hugh Rossi: It is the last country in Europe to record the effects of acid rain, for the reasons given in the Environment Committee's report. The complacency that existed at the time of the report was based partly on the enormous success of the Clean Air Act 1956, which removed the dirt and dust from our atmosphere, did away with London smog, and brought a 100 per cent. increase in the sunshine enjoyed in London in the 1970s over the 1950s and the return to central London of many species of wildlife that had not existed there since the industrial revolution.

That was coupled with the tall chimney policy, based on the scientific belief—still prevalent in respect of the oceans —of "dilute and disperse" It was thought that the atmosphere was so vast that it could absorb, dilute, disperse and render harmless anything put into it. We know now that that theory was wrong. We were misled partly because, while tall chimneys took the muck high into the atmosphere, that only served to carry it elsewhere —and then the people at the receiving end started agitating for changes and corrections. That is why members of the Committee visited many of the countries so affected.

Mr. Allan Roberts: I accept, as a member of that Environment Committee, that the report was good and was before its time. However, it was published six years ago. Recommendation 3.50 in the Fourth Report was

> "(a) that the United Kingdom joined the 30 per cent. club immediately"— after six years, we still have not done so—

> "and that this target be achieved by the CEGB being required to reduce its emissions accordingly."

In fact, Britain has increased its emissions accordingly over the past six years, and the Government have done nothing.

Recommendation 3.50 (b) was > "that in the medium term as power stations come to be refitted"—

none has been refitted, and the proposal is to refit only one before the next general election—

> "the CEGB should be required to instal equipment to attain the overall national reduction of 60 per cent in accordance with the EEC draft directive, that is, by the end of 1995."

None of those recommendations has been accepted or implemented by the Government, and nor have any of the Select Committee's latest significant recommendations.

Sir Hugh Rossi: I acknowledge the enthusiastic role that the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) played subsequently in the work of the Select Committee. Like him, I regret that the Government did not see fit to join the 30 per cent. club, as the Committee unanimously recommended. However, he knows as well as I do that this country is likely to attain the targets that have been set far earlier than many of the signatories to the agreement. We have, however, joined in agreeing the targets of the EEC directive in respect of large combustion units, and we are well on target with the reductions required by that directive. We are playing our full part.

The hon. Member for Bootle is right to say that there was a reluctance to accept immediately the dangers that the Committee cited, because of the scientific advice that the Government were then receiving. The attitude taken by the scientific world at that time was very similar to that which it adopted many years ago on the link between cigarette smoking and lung cancer—"Not proven . . . it is in doubt that . . . the balance of probabilities is . . . ." A similar view was taken in respect of sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions and their impact on the environment.

One cannot blame a Government, having listened to scientific advice, for adopting a cautious approach. However, the hon. Gentleman must acknowledge that the Government accepted all the Committee's recommendations——

Mr. Allan Roberts: Because they did not cost any money.

Sir Hugh Rossi: —as to the need for research and for monitoring air quality, in order to establish the facts. Contrary to the hon. Gentleman's remark from a sedentary position, I had it from the chief scientist to the Department of the Environment that, following the Government's acceptance of the Committee's report and recommendations, money became no object insofar as scientific research into that area was concerned. It proceeded apace.

It is hardly surprising that, following that research, just as night follows day, the Government reached the same conclusions as the Committee reached in 1984. Some 18 months after our report was published, a programe of desulphurisation costing £600 million, now increased to £2 billion, became part of our country's efforts to achieve the norms set in the EEC directives. I am satisfied that the United Kingdom will continue to honour its obligations under that directive and will reach its targets before many other members of the 30 per cent. club.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): We obviously welcome reductions in sulphur emissions, which reduces acid rain, but perhaps the hon. Gentleman will turn his attention to another significant cause of pollution that is increasing throughout the world: the internal combustion engine. Is it right for the British Government and every other Government in Europe not only to predict a 120 per cent. increase in private car ownership over the next 25 years but positively to encourage it? Should not the Committee turn its attention to reducing the number of internal combustion engines and to increasing the use of public transport, which would inevitably give rise to much less pollution?

Mr. Tony Banks: Yes—bring back the sedan chair.

Sir Hugh Rossi: If the hon. Gentleman will compose himself and become more patient, he will find that I shall direct myself to transport in a minute or two. I wish that my Committee could examine problems that are associated with transport. It has been difficult to deal with energy matters without trespassing far too far into the province of my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd), who is Chairman of the Select Committee on Energy. Similarly, it cannot examine transport policy. It can, however, consider the environmental consequences—

Mr. Oakes: I intervene on the £2 billion and the report of the hon. Gentleman's Select Committee. Surely he must realise that the spending of £2 billion is not directly the result of his Committee's report. The Government fought tooth and nail against it. They lost, and that is why they are spending £2 billion.

Sir Hugh Rossi: The hon. Gentleman must be relying more upon newspaper reports than on personal knowledge of what happened. If he studies the record, he will find that the Minister who was concerned in the Department of the Environment with EEC directives on large combustion played a leading part in getting the norm settled and agreed to. That is the role that Britain played in the Montreal protocol and its revision.

Mr. Allan Roberts: What about CFCs?

Sir Hugh Rossi: The hon. Gentleman is preoccupied with CFCs, as we all must be.

The right hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Oakes) must be fair. It is not always entirely safe to rely upon newspaper reports as a source. If he wants sources, I suggest that there is more than an abundant supply to satisfy him in the Library, in the reports of my Committee and in those of the Committee of my hon. Friend the Member for Havant. In that material he will find the matter dissected and analysed, followed by recommendations. I recommend that he read that material instead of the more facile commentaries upon what may or may not have taken place, many of them being based on conjecture.

Mr. Corbyn: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Sir Hugh Rossi: I must get on. I have a great deal of ground to cover and I want to be fair to those who wish to participate in the debate.

My Committee dealt with the subject that is before us again in 1985-86, when we produced an update on acid rain. We did so once again when we produced the report on air pollution of May 1988. We discussed the Montreal protocol and recommended that the Government should take action to tighten the protocol, which happened subsequently.

My Committee dealt also with the greenhouse effect. I am sure that the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) will agree with what I am about to say, because the Committee's findings conform very much with the burden of his speech this morning. The Committee underlined the necessity for more and more expenditure upon research. In paragraph 154, it stated:

> "The urgent need for more research on the problem is underlined by our understanding that the development of abatement technology for greenhouse gases is in its infancy. Techniques of removing and disposing of carbon dioxide from fuel gases are unproven and, if technically feasible, are likely to be prohibitively expensive. We were told that carbon dioxide emissions are more likely to be reduced by a strategy of more efficient use of energy and a changing to non-fossil fuels."

In other words, we do not know very much about it and there is a great deal more to learn. The hon. Member for Motherwell, South underlined that when he spoke of the effects upon the oceans of the absorption of carbon dioxide.

Dr. Bray: The hon. Gentleman's Committee has an admirable record on recommending action at the same time as research and not regarding research as an excuse for not taking action.

Sir Hugh Rossi: At some stage, politicians have to make a judgment on the balance of probabilities. They cannot wait for absolute scientific proof: I accept that. However, we need to know some of the basics before we can make value judgments on the balance of probabilities.

There is unequivocal evidence that the concentration of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere has increased over the past 30 years, and that the gases existed in much smaller concentrations before the industrial revolution. The Meteorological Office has made a major international contribution to modelling climatic change, whether that be under the auspices of one Government Department or another. It estimates that the range of possible time scales for the doubling of greenhouse gas concentrations from their pre-industrial revolution levels is from 60 to 100 years plus. The effect of such a doubling would be to increase average world temperatures from 1·5 deg C to 4·5 deg C, with a rise in sea levels of between 20 cm and 1·5 m.

The European Commission has analysed some of the possible effects of global warming in Europe. It suggests that these could include permanent inundation of many coastal areas; coastal erosion; flooding; storm damage; lack of water for human consumption, power generation, effluent dilution and navigation; changes in the growing seasons of plants, agricultural yields and crop certainty and quality; changes in forestry; an increase in tropical diseases; more frequent famines and food supply shortages; and an impact on marine life and the diversity of all life systems. That is an appalling scenario. One may feel that it is almost Cassandra-like in tone. Nevertheless, we cannot ignore it, even if it is only half true.

The problems of predicting the effects of greenhouse gas emissions were emphasised last week when the Natural Environment Research Council revealed the results of the first phase of the North sea community project, to which the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) has referred. That research has revealed that the take-up by the ocean of carbon dioxide may be only 30 per cent.

[Sir Hugh Rossi]

compared with the 50 per cent. thought previously. Dr. Andrew Watson of the NERC's Plymouth marine laboratory warned that CO_2 in the earth's atmosphere may increase 20 per cent. faster than current models predict.

On 3 November, in The Independent—I am sure that the right hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Oakes) will not mind my quoting from a newspaper—Dr. Watson said:

> "we do not know if, or why, the land vegetation takes the carbon dioxide up, or how long they might continue to do so. Scientists are being asked by the policy makers what they should do. It's rather embarrassing to admit we do not even know where the carbon dioxide is going."

That is the dilemma with which we are faced in discussing these matters, not as scientists but as politicians. It is the dilemma that the Government must face in deciding upon actions which might have enormous consequences for the people of Britain and throughout the world in terms of their lifestyles and way of living.

I should like to refer to some aspects of this dilemma, one of which is, of course, transport. We know that deforestation causes the build-up of CO_2 in two ways. The burning of forests produces CO_2 directly and means that there are fewer trees taking in CO_2 to retain growth and then release oxygen. In addition, any change in land use which increases erosion and soil degradation is likely to result in a greater release of carbon held in the soil.

I was delighted when, last July, the present Secretary of State for the Environment, then Minister for Overseas Development—my right hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Patten)—signed the first agreement between Brazil's Ministry of External Relations and any foreign country. If the right hon. Member for Halton is asking for action by Britain, here is one: Britain will supply money and expertise to train Brazilian officials to explore the environmental impact of projects.

Last week, at a meeting of the International Tropical Timber Organisation, made up of the big consumer countries—such as Japan, the United States and the EEC—and countries that have or used to have tropical forests, it was the United Kingdom that proposed a worldwide labelling scheme for tropical hardwoods which would identify their origins and allow the consumers to refuse to buy those hardwoods. That would have an impact on the trade, but the matter goes further than that. It is essential that we help those countries with reafforestation programmes. If hardwoods have to be cut down because they are needed, new hardwoods must be planted at the same time to replace them.

The developed world can help the developing world by a price mechanism for hardwoods to enable developing countries to bear the costs of reafforestation. It is difficult for the developed countries to persuade developing countries to change their ways and not to maximise their produce as economically as possible. Developing countries may say, "You have had your industrial revolution and you have attained your standard of living. All you are trying to do now is to stop us catching up with you." We must recognise that problem and do what we can to solve it. It is true that there is virtually no control today over the world timber trade. The statistics are wholly unreliable and short-term cash need has meant that countries such as Thailand and Nigeria have literally run out of cash crops and have been forced to place a ban on exports.

Research on the relative advantages of maintaining rain forests or cutting them down to cultivate other crops has shown that the forests produce twice as much cash if left standing. Managed Amazonian forests that produce Brazil nuts, rubber and honey yield £4,500 per hectare compared with £2,000 if cleared for cattle ranching. I hope that the future liaison between the United Kingdom and the Brazilian Government in carrying out research and in finding alternatives will make a contribution both to the Brazilian economy and to the world in terms of a reduction in global warming.

About 10 per cent. of land in the United Kingdom is wooded and that area could be expanded to 25 per cent. If the area were merely doubled and the extra land were devoted to broad-leaved species, 3 million tonnes of carbon dioxide would be absorbed per annum. The Select Committee on Energy noted that if trees were used as fossil fuel and constantly replaced by new trees, no net carbon dioxide would be added to the atmosphere and they could provide 20 per cent. of the United Kingdom's electricity requirements. Clearly, there is a need to think out our policy on land use carefully. Taking land out of agriculture and the planting of trees—broad-leaved wherever possible—would not only create a pleasant environment in terms of the physical view, but would contribute considerably to alleviating the problems that concern the House today.

I was asked about cars, and I must say that the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) is right. Cars are responsible for about 60 per cent. of all greenhouse emissions from the transport sector. It is a matter of current controversy between Her Majesty's Government and our EC partners whether the three-way catalyst or lean-burn engine technology is the correct way forward. Our Government prefers the lean-burn technology and that was the conclusion to which the Select Committee on the Environment came in its 1984 report on acid rain. But again, the scientists do not agree and they continue to fight among themselves.

The hon. Member for Islington, North may be surprised that there is common ground between us on any subject, but it is clear that an increase in the use of motor vehicles, even in the light of recent technology, is bound to contribute significantly to the greenhouse effect. That must be taken into account seriously when evolving transport policy.

Mr. Corbyn: The hon. Gentleman and I agree that the internal combustion engine is the major source of greenhouse gases. Will he confirm that catalytic converters, while purifying vehicle emissions to some extent, increase carbon dioxide emissions because of less efficient burning and that we need a long-term policy of reducing the number of internal combustion engines and increasing communal forms of transport to reduce the total amount of carbon dioxide emitted by transport?

Sir Hugh Rossi: The hon. Gentleman must have temporarily left the Chamber when I made precisely that point when I intervened in the speech of his hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell (Dr. Bray). I put it to him that catalytic converters increase the amount of carbon dioxide emitted into the atmosphere. That is why I told the Select Committee on the Environment that, in the light of information received in 1984, the lean-burn approach was the way ahead. Lean-burn motors operate on a reduced quantity of petrol compared to air, therefore emit fewer gases into the atmosphere. Whether we can achieve and implement that technology is still open to doubt—which is why, in agreement with our European partners, we are adopting the three-way catalyst solution.

Behind that European decision, there is pressure from the manufacturers of larger motor cars which rely on a powerful engine to sell their product and meet the market. Such larger engines would run less efficiently on lean-burn technology, so the manufacturers prefer the three-way catalyst which will enable them to build ever more powerful cars to zoom up and down the autobahns of Europe where there are no speed limits.

A European transport policy must be evolved to deal with the problems mentioned. The hon. Member for Islington, North will recognise that the people of Europe demand as much personal freedom of movement as possible. Nothing achieves that as well as the motor car parked on the doorstep, into which one can jump and arrive immediately at one's destination.

Mr. Allan Roberts: Immediately?

Sir Hugh Rossi: That is the preference of the British people. Perhaps the hon. Member for Bootle will pledge this in a moment, but it would be a rash Government that limited the size of motor cars to say, 1,000 cc or insisted that people use their motor cars only once a week or for essential purposes. I do not know whether the Labour party has any such regulations in mind, but I doubt that it would dare to contest a general election advocating them.

Mr. Allan Roberts: We would contest a general election pointing out that what the hon. Gentleman says is not the case. The motor car is not a convenient mode of transport into which one can jump and arrive quickly at one's destination. Anyone who thinks that it is possible to travel quickly across London has not tried to do so recently. The M1 and the M6 have become the longest car parks in Britain. One cannot drive along them; one simply parks on them. We are destroying the advantages of the motor car by allowing too many on our roads. By failing to support public transport, the Government have failed to encourage people to use it.

Sir Hugh Rossi: The hon. Member is introducing a personal note. If he is interested, let me tell him that I use my motor car to get to my constituency at inconvenient hours—inconvenient in terms of my programme, that is —and to depart from the House at unsociable hours. My preferred way of getting round London is by underground. Most Londoners who are worldly wise go by underground at every opportunity. That is the way to get around London, for all the reasons that the hon. Gentleman gave. Before long, those responsible for transport policy will have to turn their attention to the whole question of inner-city traffic, but for the moment I am concerned only with environmental issues and the effects of CO_2.

I did not intend to detain the House for so long, but I have had to deal with interruptions or appear unreasonably discourteous. I hope that I have explained some of the problems that exist and the matters that we need to examine.

The Environment Select Committee has also been considering the disposal [illegible] waste, landfill and the generation of methane gas. Methane gas is a significant contributor to the greenhouse effect. We must find ways of trapping it and using it to generate electricity. There are about 20 schemes in operation at the moment. We should like a process to be adopted universally whereby we can eliminate the gas and turn it to good use. We shall then have made a double gain. It is for local authorities, which are responsible for the regulation of landfill sites, to ensure that that comes about.

We must also consider much more seriously than hitherto combined heat and energy systems and the disposal of refuse and sewage sludge by incineration. We should ensure that such waste is not dumped at sea or in landfill sites and allowed to create further hazards. It should be incinerated under controlled conditions and used to produce energy, as an alternative to the burning of fossil fuels.

The debate raises a whole range of issues. These are early days yet, and our knowledge of these matters is still limited. Despite what Opposition Members say, however, it is quite clear that the Government are apprised of the problem, and that they are anxious to act in the light of advice that they receive concerning the best way forward. I am sure that the Opposition are equally concerned about the problems. In the Select Committee that I chair, I have been able to achieve co-operation between the parties in finding solutions to the problems rather than continually carping and selling the country short—the role to which Opposition Members frequently reduce themselves.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Several hon. Members wish to speak, in addition to the Minister and the Opposition Front Bench spokesmen. I therefore appeal to hon. Members on both sides of the House for short speeches.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce (Gordon): We should perhaps take the advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker, of the secretary of the Budapest chamber of commerce, who told members of the Select Committee on Trade and Industry a year or so ago that in Hungary they believe in short speeches and long sausages. Unfortunately, it seems to be the other way round in this place. I shall try to make my remarks as compact and systematic as possible.

The Chairman of the Select Committee on Energy, the hon. Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd), and the Chairman of the Select Committee on the Environment, the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) both seemed to be saying that we needed more information and better knowledge. They claim that it is very difficult to take decisions without that knowledge and the Government should put their resources into securing more information.

No one would disagree with the need for research to get more information on which we can base decisions. Most people accept, however, that the potential seriousness of the crisis that we face is such that we must take positive and specific action now in the light of the knowledge that is currently available. Both the hon. Member for Havant and the hon. Member for Hornsey and Wood Green drew considerably on the Prime Minister's speech to the United Nations. It is obvious that the Prime Minister has an excellent speech writer on the subject of the greenhouse effect, and she delivered the speech extremely well—it even came across as a visionary speech. It was a little unfortunate, however, that at the very moment when the Prime Minister was making her speech to the United Nations the Minister for the Environment and Countryside was blocking specific agreements on real reductions. The record appears to be disputed on that, but that is the information from all the first-hand reports that I have from people who were present and from the press.

[Mr. Malcolm Bruce]

Mr. Trippier: The hon. Gentleman has just misled the House yet again. This is probably the fourth time that he has misled the House so far. He said that it was at the precise moment, when in fact it happened the day before. As vicars say in the Church of England, could he also share with us the names of the people who gave him his information at first hand?

Mr. Bruce: I could do that, but I do not see why I should do so without their authority. There is no secret about it and I would give the Minister that information, but I will not put it on the record as that would be invidious and a discourtesy to people who give me information.

The Minister is disputing press information. Is he saying that The Observer and The Sunday Correspondent are wrong? The Sunday Correspondent has a headline, "Britain shuns gases freeze." The article states:

> "The Government argues that there is no scientific consensus on the size of a cut needed to avoid climatic change."

The article in The Observer to which reference has already been made states that the objective was to:

> "'stabilise' emissions of carbon dioxide in industrialised countries at present levels by the year 2000 and 'investigate the feasibility' of reducing them by 20 per cent. by the year 2005."

Did the Government agree to that? My information is that they would not agree.

Mr. Trippier: This is the fifth time that the hon. Gentleman has misled the House. He is referring to an article in The Observer which was written by Mr. Geoffrey Lean. The hon. Gentleman does not seem to be very well briefed on the subject. The ministerial conference did not start until first thing on Monday morning. Any supposition that Mr. Lean reported in The Observer was thus conjecture at best.

Mr. Allan Roberts: But he was right.

Mr. Trippier: No he was not. The situation changed dramatically, and I changed it. That story is in The Times article on the Wednesday morning.

Mr. Bruce: I am grateful to the Minister. It is his word against others. My advice from someone who attended the conference is that 11 of the 12 members of the Community [Interruption.] The Minister has not told me whether the Government agree with specific targets for the year 2000. If so, what are they?

Mr. Trippier: Honestly, the hon. Gentleman must listen more carefully to me. It was my responsibility , and I am proud to accept that responsibility, of putting the year 2000 into the declaration. The hon. Gentleman obviously has not read the declaration. The levels would be agreed at the climate conference put forward by the IPCC. If I say it at least 13 times, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will be on to it in a flash.

Mr. Bruce: I understand that the other member states wanted to include specific agreements about targets, but the Minister wanted to take them out. That is the most important issue.

Mr. Trippler: What other members?

Mr. Bruce: Eleven out of 12 Community countries wanted to do that. The only reservations came from Greece and Portugal which were given caveats because of their circumstances. One day soon, I trust, the facts of the meeting will be reported and the Government's position will be clear. The Government's position remains unclear at the moment. It appears to me that, as in virtually every case when such international agreements are sought, the British Government tried to avoid specific commitments. When the Government are finally boxed into a corner, they have the audacity to claim that they have triumphantly secured an agreement that has advanced the frontiers of environmental protection. That is the standard ministerial speech.

Since the Prime Minister made her Royal Society speech I have taken the view that she is genuinely concerned about the greenhouse effect, but she has failed to grasp that it is incompatible with her political philosophy to take appropriate action. It is incompatible with Thatcherism. That is a problem for the architects of that philosophy. Thatcherism does not appear to control the Cabinet any longer. That being so, we saw the first step in a positive direction yesterday, when the Secretary of State for Energy announced the abandonment of the nuclear power programme, which should have been abandoned years ago.

Mr. Tredinnick: Surely the fact that the Prime Minister chose to speak to the United Nations about the environment—she could have chosen any other issue—is an illustration of her commitment.

Mr. Bruce: No, I am afraid not. I have made it quite clear that fine words do not alter a situation unless real, specific action is taken. All the fine speeches in the world will not alter things. So far, the Prime Minister has acquired a good speech writer, but she has taken very little action to back her commitment.

As has been acknowledged by hon. Members, greenhouse gases from various sources are causing concern and they could get out of control and cause an irreversible disaster at any time. It is worth remembering that dinosaurs are regarded as one of the evolutionary failures of this planet. They managed to survive for 70 million years but were apparently wiped out virtually immediately after a major climatic change. The human race has been in existence for only a tiny fraction of that time, but it could face exactly the same annihilation. It could take place at any time within the next few years, and within a short space of time, unless we take action now.

The main greenhouse gases include, chiefly, carbon dioxide, which comes from fossil fuel burning, deforestation, and the burning of biomass; methane, which comes from animals, the burning of biomass, and landfill sites, rubbish sites, gas leaks, paddy fields and swamps; CFCs, which come from aerosols, refrigerators, air-conditioning and solvents; nitrous oxide, which comes from fertilisers, the burning of biomass, and fossil fuel combustion; and ozone, which is caused by the reaction of sunlight and car emissions. All those matters must be addressed if we are to deal with the problem. Carbon dioxide may be the biggest problem, but the others are on the increase and cannot be left without action.

It has been acknowledged that carbon dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom are the second highest in Europe, after West Germany. We have no reason to be complacent about that. Whereas emissions in West Germany and France are decreasing, they are continuing to increase in the United Kindom. Although we are getting a reduction in emissions from power stations, vehicle emissions are increasing.

I do not wish to dwell for too long on catalytic converters, but there is no doubt that introducing mechanisms to clean up car exhausts is utterly useless if we do not have a transport policy to ensure that we switch from private transport to a proper public transport system. That is borne out by the fact that the investment of subsidy in our railways, for example, is the lowest in Europe. Britain invests £1·95 per kilometre, France invests £5·83, and West Germany invests £5·37. Luxembourg, which may not be directly comparable with the United Kingdom, invests £16·06 per kilometre. That is illustrative of how out of touch we are. Of course there is also the Channel tunnel mess. The Government refuse to accept their responsibility to ensure an environmentally sound and efficient link—if we are to have the tunnel at all.

However, the Government continue to promote a massive road-building programme which, apart from not solving the traffic problems, will add greatly to the problems of vehicle emissions. Whereas in the United Kingdom 4 per cent. of freight travels by rail, the comparative figure for West Germany is 20 per cent. The Government should have a policy of closing that gap.

Mr. Corbyn: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that one of the problems is that although the major motor manufacturers in the world may be forced into accepting improved environmental standards in western Europe and the United States, that is not happening in poorer countries? Indeed, many of the economic models that poorer countries are persuaded to accept encourage road development and internal combustion engine transport, whereas they should be encouraging the very opposite, railways and other forms of public transport.

Mr. Bruce: The hon. Gentleman's intervention deals with a different but relevant argument about the appropriate method of ensuring that poorer countries can aspire to improved living standards in ways that are environmentally sound. That is an important point.

Unless this view is picked up by his successor, one regret at the departure of the former Chancellor will be that at least he recognised that company cars are a major source of the growth in traffic in the United Kingdom. That issue should be addressed because a company car is a heavily subsidised perk. In the circumstances that we are discussing today, it is time that we reconsidered whether that policy should continue, given the resulting costs to the environment and traffic congestion.

Methane comes from various sources, which include gas leaks, about which more should be done. I understand that it is slightly less than 1 per cent. of the total, but that still amounts to a substantial tonnage. According to written answers that I have received, only 26 landfill sites in Britain exploit the methane from such sites although 438 sites are suitable for commercial exploitation. Again, what are the Government doing to ensure that that wide discrepancy is sorted out?

I turn now to the problems caused by CFCs. It is worth mentioning that when The Sunday Times had a questionnaire to try to discover how green Members of Parliament are, it maintained that the main concern caused by CFCs was the increasing incidence of skin cancer. I dispute that. The main concern about CFCs is their impact as a greenhouse gas, especially when one discovers that the ozone layer over the Antarctic can disappear in a matter of days when the sun rises at the end of winter and that that phenomenon could race through the whole of the ozone layer at any time if circumstances got out of control. That makes dealing with CFCs an urgent priority, especially since they do not disappear but have a long life in the atmosphere.

The Government have tried to claim some credit for the Montreal protocol, but that protocol is now wholly out of date in relation to what can be achieved. I am increasingly of the view that my Chlorofluorocarbons (Control) Bill, which I introduced earlier this year and which I was told is impractical, is exactly the legislation that the Government should have picked up. Indeed, it is almost identical to the legislation now being adopted by the West Germans. The fact that the Government were not prepared to take that action shows a lack of urgency in their thinking.

The hon. Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) intervened on the question of ICI's willingness to recycle fridges. I want to put on the record the fact that the first two local authorities in the United Kingdom to offer recycling of CFCs from fridges were the London borough of Sutton and my own district of Gordon. They did it because they are controlled by Liberal Democrats and because our party takes action on such matters, while others only talk about it. If we as local councillors can do it, the Government should be able to do a great deal more if they have the will, but I fear that they have not.

The problems of nitrous oxides—NOX—come back to vehicle emissions. No doubt that argument will run and run with more European orders late at night as the European Community forces us, kicking and screaming, into a more environmentally sound transport policy.

As the Chairman of the Select Committee on Energy said, it was interesting that the Prime Minister chose to pick out the environmental virtues of nuclear power. I totally dispute the claims made for nuclear power and make no secret of my belief—I may be castigated by the Chairman of that Select Committee for this—that the expansion of the nuclear power industry over the past 10 years cannot be justified on either economic or environmental grounds. I have opposed nuclear power every inch of the way. I note that the South of Scotland electricity board has now admitted that Torness, which I demonstrated against, is an expensive white elephant and should never have been built in the first place. That is true of other power stations that should not have been built.

I accept, however, that if we get through this crisis, the next generation or subsequent generations may see a role for nuclear power—generated by fission, fusion or from hydrogen. I accept that we may come back to that option, but I do not believe that we should advance with that programme now. Resources should not be diverted to that end. They would be better invested in more immediate means of reducing the greenhouse gases. We should promote energy conservation and promote more benign energy alternatives.

If nuclear power was seen as the sole solution to the greenhouse problem we would have to build one new nuclear power station every day and a half for 40 years at a cost of $787 billion per annum. That would ensure that we had sufficient nuclear power capacity to replace the energy capacity generated by other sources of power. At the very best, nuclear power can make only a small contribution. It is a red herring to try to pretend that nuclear power is anything other than a small component of energy generation. It was ironic for the Prime Minister to try to make that claim the day before the Secretary of State for Energy announced the effective abandonment of the expanded nuclear power programme.

I do not accept the argument that nuclear power is environmentally sound. That argument is not borne out when one considers the costs of the programme, the unknown problems of decommissioning and the increasing problem of reprocessing nuclear waste materials. Because of that, the case for any further development in the future cannot be made. The resources would be much better spent elsewhere.

For many years my party has taken the environment issue seriously. In the local councils that we control we have ensured that environmental issues are put at the top of the agenda. We can stand up and defend our record far better than any other party. We have put forward to the Secretary of State for the Environment a raft of proposals in our environment Bill. They represent specific measures to deal with the problems that face us. Let us consider what the Government have done. They have cut the budget of the Energy Efficiency Office. They have maintained limited support of research and development into renewable sources of energy and that support does not compare with the investment they have made in nuclear power. In many cases they have pulled the research from under those projects just when they were becoming viable. That is particularly true of wave and geothermal research. They introduced a programme to clean up our coal-burning power stations only as a result of intensive pressure from our European Community neighbours. They resisted that pressure as hard as they could.

I hope, however, that there is a glimpse of light and wisdom appearing in the Cabinet. I was extremely encouraged when the new Secretary of State for Energy made a speech in Canada—interestingly enough he did not make it here—when he said:

> "Energy efficiency is the single most cost-effective response to the effort to limit carbon dioxide."

The right hon. Gentleman made a good start yesterday, in embarrassing circumstances, when he scrapped the nuclear power programme. Perhaps he will come back to the House soon to tell us exactly what he will do to ensure that his belief that energy efficiency is the single most important way in which to reduce the greenhouse effect will be put into practice by Government policies. Those policies should ensure that we achieve the targets set. We have been told time and again by the Department of Energy that energy savings of 30 per cent. on current use are perfectly attainable within existing technology. We do not achieve those targets, however, because the Government refuse to invest the necessary money to do so.

At the bottom end of the fuel poverty and energy efficient scale no one in this country is eligible for any grant towards loft insulation. All the available sources of grant aid for energy efficiency have been effectively phased out. That shows that the Government do not have the slightest idea about how to grasp the problem. Energy efficiency is the most important policy that they could follow. They could take a lead. The Prime Minister cannot get away much longer with making fine speeches while allowing Ministers to obstruct the development of practical policies to achieve the desired objectives.

In the Select Committee on Energy, Edmund Burke was quoted—for the benefit of the Committee—as saying:

> "Nobody made a greater mistake than . . . who did nothing because he . . . could only do a little."

I regret to say that the Government are all talk and very little action.

12.35 pm

Mr. David Tredinnick (Bosworth): This debate could not be more timely. This week we have seen, first, the meeting of the world's leading industrialised countries at Noordwijk in the Netherlands and, secondly, the Prime Minister's address to the United Nations in New York.

Earlier this year the Government demonstrated their commitment to the environment at the international conference on saving the ozone layer held in London, which was widely acclaimed throughout the world. In 1987, the Government accepted the Brundtland report on sustainable development and the Government's response, "A perspective by the United Kingdom on the Report of the World Commission on Environment and Development" was published in July 1988. Therefore, when Opposition Members say that we have been doing nothing, they need only look at the record of the Conservative Government this year and in the preceding two or three years to see that a great deal has been done.

When I looked at the report last weekend, my fingers found chapter 10, headed "Managing the Commons". I wondered whether you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, had had a chance to look at that chapter to glean some insight into controlling the House in difficult times.

The report's central message relates to the concept of sustainable development or development without destruction. It is sometimes claimed that this is a new concept, but it is not. For centuries that approach has been adopted by rural societies. We are taught at school that in working the land, farmers rotate the crops. But it is a concept which the industrial society is having to relearn. Brundtland suggests that by successfully applying the tried and tested method to modern conditions we shall achieve a major breakthrough in managing and reconciling economic growth and the conservation of natural resources.

Later, I shall contrast Brundtland's stance, which is supported by the Government, with some of the views held by other parties in this country. Only a decade ago these two vital elements, the breakthrough in managing and reconciling economic growth and the conservation of natural resources, were regarded as fundamentally incompatible. However, this great and important report demonstrates that with wise management not only can they be made compatible but that they are essential to each other.

The report states:

"Poverty forces many of the people of the world to overdraw on the earth's ecological capital creating this vicious spiral of environmental degradation and further poverty." However, the technology and the advanced social and commercial systems of our industrialised world can be harnessed to provide opportunities for all mankind and, at the same time, protect the natural systems that support life on earth. That is a key point at a time when there are tremendous pressures on our eco systems.

I said that growth was essential, and that view is supported by the Brundtland report. The policies advocated particularly by the Green party and some other Opposition groups are detrimental to the process of protecting the environment in a major industrialised society. The Green party's commitment to reducing the country's economic growth as part of a strategy for protecting the environment, although well meaning, is profoundly misguided.

We must face the fact that we are an industrialised society. In the past 10 years we have seen sustained economic growth under this Government and a massive investment in measures to protect the environment—in particular, the £1 billion programme to combat acid emissions from power stations. We can argue that more should be done, but the fact is that we are spending £1 billion that was not previously being spent. The Green party's doctrine of negative economic growth would do more than lead to a decline in the resources available to protect the environment and to improve our life; it would create mass unemployment and stop the production of the financial resources necessary to combat the environmental problems that we face. I find its policies profoundly wanting.

We all know that global warming caused by the greenhouse effect is the greatest threat to the prospect of sustainable development. The best estimates suggest—my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) touched on that—a global warming of 1·5 deg C to 4·5 deg C by the year 2050. The United Kingdom can be proud that it supports research in that area to the level of £7·5 million. The Department of the Environment has almost quadrupled research on climate change, from about £600,000 to £7·5 million.

The Opposition have attacked the Government for not doing enough, yet the Government have been involved in measures to protect the ozone layer from at least 1985, when we signed the Vienna convention for the protection of the ozone layer, and in 1987 the United Kingdom and the EEC signed the Montreal protocol to that convention. As hon. Members will recall, the protocol requires that CFCs should be reduced by 50 per cent. by 1999 and that the production and consumption of halons should be frozen from 1992. That is hardly a laggardly approach.

I have already referred to the March conference on saving the ozone layer held across the road in the Queen Elizabeth centre. I was fortunate to attend that conference. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister opened it and I noted the strong conviction with which she delivered her address. It is absurd to claim that nothing was achieved because, as a direct result, another 20 countries agreed to join the Montreal agreement and 14 others, including China—that is very signifiant—are seriously considering doing so.

Following the United Kingdom initiative, on 2 March EEC Ministers agreed to reduce the production and consumption of CFCs by at least 85 per cent. as soon as possible, and to eliminate them by the year 2000. It is important that these points are highlighted because it appears that Opposition Members have skirted the positive steps that my right hon. and hon. Friends have taken this year and in recent history.

Just as Britain played a leading role in pressing for an agreement on CFC reduction earlier this year, so we played a leading role at Noordwijk on Tuesday in securing agreement on how global warming should be tackled. The hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) took my hon. Friend the Minister to task about the substance of that meeting. I have read the reports in the newspapers and I understand that at that meeting there were very real disagreements. However, my hon. Friend was the key person in bringing about a compromise. The hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) may laugh, but it was my hon. Friend's work that brought Ministers together so that they could come up with the statement and an undertaking to stabilise CO_2 emissions by the year 2000 at the latest. Surely it is better to have such a firm agreement than no agreement at all.

Mr. Allan Roberts: The hon. Gentleman is right when he says that the Government were instrumental in watering down the proposals, in refusing to accept the setting of targets and in coming up with a statement that means nothing.

Mr. Tredinnick: The hon. Gentleman has not listened to what I said. The Minister managed to persuade his colleagues to come up with a statement that shows firm agreement. The hon. Gentleman may be jealous of the fact that the Minister was able to pull that off. It is another illustration of the Government's determination to tackle environmental issues and to lead the world. We should be proud of that.

As I said in an intervention, on Wednesday the Prime Minister took the opportunity at the United Nations to devote her speech to environmental matters. It might have suited her domestically to talk about many other issues, but she chose to speak on the environment. The Opposition rather uncharitably suggested that the Prime Minister's contribution was the work of a speech writer. I watched the Prime Minister on television and to me she came across as the scientist that she is, as someone with a real understanding of the problems. There are not many scientists in the Opposition and the nation is fortunate to have a scientist as its Prime Minister. At the next general election the electorate will look to the leaders of the political parties to comment on environmental issues. Of course the Conservative party will win hands down because our leader has a proper understanding of science.

At the meeting in New York the Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government, gave specific undertakings that will benefit the environment. The first was the decision to establish a new research centre because of the climatic change expected from an increase in the level of CO_2. That is welcome and will be set up next year. I am sure that the £5·5 million per annum to be spent on that will turn out to be cheap in the long term.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister quoted a scientist from the British Antarctic survey who said that recent recordings have shown that the ozone layer is much reduced. It was a British scientist who discovered the hole in the ozone layer and it is important that we move forward yet again with measures that will reduce the problem of thinning. The Prime Minister called for three international conventions to commit the world to action on climatic change, ozone depletion and the preservation of plant species. Such preservation is crucial. It is a tragedy to lose species, because most of our medicines are derived from plants or animals or from other forms of life. I see that the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) is nodding. Most developments in food production also derive from plants. To see species wiped out through negligence and ignorance is the greatest possible tragedy. Plants are the raw material of nature, and we forget that at our peril.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister also gave an undertaking to provide an extra £100 million over three years to aid the tropical forestry action plan sponsored by United Nations, which aims to stop the destruction of the Amazon rain forests. Many years ago I hitchhiked through the Zaire jungle. Opposition Members might ask why I did not stay there.

Mr. Corbyn: We have more respect for Zaire.

Mr. Tredinnick: I was fishing for that sort of retort.

I gained an enormous respect for the jungle and for the different species of animals and plants that exist there. Although the jungles of the world serve as home for different species, they are similar in other respects. A tremendous amount of animal life is crammed into all of them. Right hon. and hon. Members who have not had an opportunity to visit such places should be aware of that.

My hon. Friend the Member for Havant described the speech of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister as outstanding, and I certainly agree.

Having covered the international measures that we have taken and the events of last week, I turn to specific parts of the world, starting with east Europe. I have spent some time also in east Europe, where I experienced at first hand its pollution problems. If one drives from Detmold to Dresden, one quickly discovers that the level of pollution there is phenomenal by western standards. One has to contend with huge clouds of polluted atmosphere. People who move from East Germany to West Germany often coment that the first change they notice is that the air smells so different.

About a month ago I was in Poland, where the same pollution problems are to be found. Pollution there is way above anything that is acceptable in the West. In the light of Egon Krenz's historic announcement that the Berlin wall is almost redundant, and in view of other dramatic developments recently in Poland, Hungary and even in Russia itself, as well as in other east European nations, now is the time to spread our environmental ideas into those countries.

When we talk about aid packages, we must ensure that environmental matters are not forgotten. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will be given a positive reception by his east European counterparts. When I was in Poland, I spoke to Ministers of the Solidarity Government, and they are keen to take up ideas on improving the environment. The representatives of at least one other east European country have approached friends of mine who work within the Tory green initiative group, also looking for ways of inroducing pollution controls.

My hon. Friend the Member for Havant remarked that China is increasing its coal burn by a greater amount than the total reduction of coal burn in the West. Smog levels in Shanghai are so high that one cannot spend more than a couple of hours in the open. My hon. Friend referred to energy consumption. The Chinese also hope that soon every household will have a fridge, which will phenomenally increase CFC gas emissons.

The right hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Oakes) mentioned ICI's contribution in respect of CFC substitutes. Both ICI and Du Pont are both developing such substitutes. The Government will have to find a way of making those substitutes freely available to Third world countries which want to use them. We shall have to buy them in, effectively, regardless of the cost. There will be a disaster of the most enormous proportions if what is almost a subcontinent that is populated by millions produces damaging CFCs.

I shall move on to more local issues. The positive lead that the Government have taken has encouraged environmental work at local level. I congratulate Leicestershire county council on its efforts. Last month, it held a lead-free campaign for 10 days, which was extremely successful. Secondly, it has adopted a programme for the next four years that is aimed at promoting attitudes to improve the environment, including the recycling of materials. There is a problem because although the public will save, there is a shortage of processing companies. For example, it may be said that the bottom has fallen out of the wastepaper market. Too much is being reclaimed. In Leicestershire, voluntary organisations cannot get rid of the waste paper that they are collecting. I understand that there has been a drop from £20 to £5 a tonne for waste paper over the past two months. The Minister should consider those problems and those which are being experienced with the recycling of bottles and aluminium.

At district level, Hinckley and Boswell borough council, which comes into my constituency, ran a community project from 1981 to 1988 that enabled the unemployed to gain new skills and to implement schemes to improve towns and villages and derelict land. That is another illustration of the knock-on effects of the Government's policies. The council is discussing establishing a special fund for environmental schemes in 1990-91, not just for the main town of Hinckley but for every village. I am sure that the fund will be welcomed throughout the constituency. Another scheme involves canal and park renovation, and is proceeding apace.

Finally, I make a plea for improved labelling. Discussions are taking place on introducing various schemes. I speak as a Member who is closely involved with the Tory green initiative, which is a Conservative green group. The group believes that the product label for Europe should indicate whether a product is environmentally friendly and whether it is recyclable. I suggest that a heart symbol would be appropriate, perhaps with a line down the middle with a green sign for environmentally friendly and a yellow sign for recyclable. The two colours should be present only if the product meets the two criteria.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I understand that a plea was made earlier that hon. Members should not make overlong speeches. I hope that it will continue to be borne in mind.

Mr. Alan W. Williams (Carmarthen): I think that there is a consensus that we are dealing with possibly the most difficult environmental challenge that is facing the globe. There are great uncertainties when it comes to quantifying how dramatic is the threat that confronts us. I have been impressed by several of the contributions which have been made to the debate, but especially by that of my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray), who spoke from the Opposition Front Bench. My hon. Friend highlighted the need for much more scientific research and the uncertainty that there is in estimating the seriousness of the greenhouse effect.

It is clear that the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere is increasing. That is something that has been measured for centuries. The amount has increased from 270 parts per million 200 years ago to 350 parts per million, and it is still increasing. The more we use our fossil fuels—coal, oil and gas—and the more we cut and burn our trees, the more carbon dioxide is put into the atmosphere. Projections based on the historic growth in energy demand show that, by the middle of the next century, we will have doubled the amount of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere.

It is clear that carbon dioxide emissions raise the planet's temperature. Venus provides an example of the greenhouse effect. It has a dense atmosphere of carbon dioxide and, while it is closer to the sun than the earth, its temperature is still much higher than would normally be expected. Heat is trapped by the carbon dioxide, resulting in a temperature of about 800 deg C.

It is difficult to work out the mean global temperature. Measurements show that there has been an increase of about 0·5 deg C this century. The projection for the middle of the next century is between 2 deg C and 5 deg C, increasing the sea level and causing flooding. Despite the urgent need for much more research, we are facing a catastrophic threat not only of flooding but of climatic change, which will affect our food supplies. I support the call for more research. It is time to take action.

The hon. Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) referred to the increase in the budget for private research into climate changes in Britain—£7·5 million this financial year. The energy budget—the value of the coal, oil and gas that we burn—is about £15 billion a year. One 2,000th of the amount spent on burning our fossil fuels is spent on evaluating its effect on the climate. I am reminded of the campaign by ASH—Action on Smoking and Health—to prevent cigarette smoking; the resources spent on preventive care are feeble compared to the economic impact of the problem.

I regularly attend Energy Question Time. Over the past two years, I have heard all sorts of accusations about coal-fired stations and the greenhouse effect. Such stations contribute only about 10 per cent. of the greenhouse gases worldwide. Even if it were possible to replace coal power with nuclear power in the short term, that would solve only 10 per cent. of the problem. Oil and gas are a part of it. Emissions from cars and central heating—whether gas, oil or solid fuel—are contributing to the greenhouse problem. The difficulty is almost intractable, because in tackling it we are attacking living standards. The increase in living standards has caused a growth in energy demand. Difficult political choices must be made. The hon. Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) questioned whether there would ever be the necessary political will in any advanced country to confront this problem. It is all the more difficult in Third world countries. We talk about limiting carbon dioxide production in Third world countries such as China, India, Africa and the countries of south America. We talk about limiting carbon dioxide production here, but are we to deny them the energy they need for development and so block that development?

Other hon. Members have mentioned CFCs and the case for their almost immediate disuse is overwhelming, especially as substitutes are available. Nitrogen oxides are a problem, but lean-burn technology and catalytic converters can stop their production in motor fuel. Methane is also a problem and it is not recognised sufficiently that in the production, distribution and combustion of natural gas, there are considerable leakages of methane. Methane molecules which get into the atmosphere are 30 times as potent as carbon dioxide molecules. As a result of those leakages, natural gas contributes just as much to the greenhouse effect as coal does, despite the fact that it holds two or three times as much energy per tonne.

Energy efficiency must play the largest role in cutting carbon dioxide production. Energy conservation cannot solve the problem, but we could use energy far more efficiently than at present. The Government's own advisers estimate that we could improve energy efficiency by about 40 per cent. in 25 years by insulating our houses, factories and offices, and by introducing district heating and combined heat and power.

I was a member of the Committee on the Electricity Bill earlier this year and Labour Members and the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), who is not in his place at present, tried to introduce dozens of amendments on energy conservation. I regret to say that the Government accepted none of them. The Bill's commitment to energy conservation is limited. We wanted the Government to accept especially the concept of least-cost planning, so that when the private companies built new power stations, they would have to demonstrate that the money would not be better spent on energy conservation. In the United States, power utilities themselves are taking responsibility for home insulation to improve energy efficiency for consumers. Many studies show that £1 billion invested in energy conservation is five to 10 times as effective as £1 billion invested in a power station.

Several hon. Members have mentioned the role of nuclear power. Nuclear power is nonsense in terms of the least-cost planning concept. It would be far better to spend £2 billion on energy conservation than to spend it on Sizewell. The results of such investment would be almost immediate. It would create many more jobs and would be 10 times as effective in terms of helping with the greenhouse effect. I was delighted by the Government's decision yesterday, but I wish that they had gone further, decided to scrap Sizewell B and spent the money on energy conservation.

We shall have to move away from fossil fuels to alternative sources of energy. For a host of environmental reasons, nuclear power is quite unacceptable. We should be moving far more to renewable sources of energy and we should be scaling up dramatically our investment in wind power, solar power, geothermal power, tidal power and hydro-electric power. As we now know, the Severn estuary barrage project is perfectly feasible. It could produce more power than all our nuclear power stations and would not produce carbon dioxide. It would generate electricity without contributing to the greenhouse effect. It would not add to the problem of nuclear waste. Its environmental impact would be very different and would not threaten the future of our planet.

I am delighted with the Prime Minister's announcement earlier this week of an extra £100 million to tackle the problems in tropical rain forests. The rain forests are critical on a planetary scale to the solution of the greenhouse problem because of their terrific photosynthetic potential. Every acre of tropical rain forest is 10 times more fertile and productive in absorbing carbon dioxide as an acre in temperate zones. In Brazil, vast acreages of forest which would absorb carbon dioxide have been destroyed. Such pillage of our inheritance of the planet threatens our survival.

The Government have not said what they will do about private transport. The contribution of motor vehicles to the greenhouse effect is greater than that of coal-fired power stations. Motor vehicles produce nitrogen oxides as well as carbon dioxide and ozone at ground level. That contributes about 12 per cent. to the greenhouse effect. Curbs on motor cars may be politically difficult, but they must be put on the agenda. The Department of Transport's White Paper published in July proposed a £6·6 billion road-building programme, but did not mention energy efficiency once. It proposes a 40 per cent. growth in road building over 15 years and a doubling of road traffic over 35 years. There are politically difficult decisions to be made and all advanced countries must bear in mind the greenhouse effect.

No one has mentioned a carbon tax, but I have an open mind about it. It could play a critical role internationally. A tax on the use of all coal, oil, gas and motor transport could raise money to subsidise public transport. We need to move from private to public transport. The revenue raised from fossil fuel power stations could be used for energy efficiency measures, such as home insulation. A carbon tax could help to improve the efficiency of our transport system and reduce energy demand.

Many hon. Members mentioned the Prime Minister's speech at the United Nations. We are proud that Britain has taken a part in the international forum and, lately, taken the lead on the ozone layer. However, the Government's rhetoric at the United Nations is completely at variance with their record on so many environmental issues.

The Prime Minister said that by the turn of the century 50 per cent. of our domestic waste would be recycled. What is the Government's record after 10 years in power? Less recycling is carried out in Britain than in any other European country. We have had a £2 billion programme to deal with acid rain, but by the time that the Government leave office, not a single power station will have been desulphurised. In comparison with Germany, Sweden and other European countries we are way behind. The Government will have cut the budget of the energy efficiency office by half between 1986 and 1990.

While the Prime Minister was speaking those fine words in the United Nations, the Government were recalcitrant and were dragging their feet in the Hague. They were there with the United States and the Soviet Union working against the European Community. They, alone among Governments in the European Community, do not have explicit targets written into agreements.

We need specific targets to deal with the greenhouse effect. Whatever the uncertainties, it is time to act, politically difficult though that may be. We must freeze CO_2 production at present levels by the year 2000 and aim to cut and cut during the next century, because the planet simply cannot absorb the CO_2 that we are producing.

1.15 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): I strongly agree with the hon. Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) that people who have spent time in the rain forest come to have very strong feelings about its biological diversity. That is why he was justified in making remarks about his own experience in Zaire and that is why some of us with experience of staying in rain forest will go on and on raising the issue. I have been here since 9.30 am and whatever the effect of greenhouse gases on the global environment may be, the greenhouse effect in the House of Commons is pretty unacceptable. The Leader of the House will have to consider the question of climatic change brought about by the television lights because the glare and heat simply will not do.

Let me cut down my speech by putting some questions. In what respects were the reports of the Noordwijk conference in The Guardian and The Observer inaccurate? A good deal has been said about that but it is not at all clear which aspects of the reports the Government find inaccurate.

Does the Minister accept the view of my right hon. Friend the Member for Halton (Mr. Oakes) about the importance of the work of ICI at Runcorn, and what will the Government do to encourage other firms to follow ICI's example? On nuclear power, I record my great admiration for the technical achievements of the South of Scotland electricity board and leave it at that.

I shall concentrate on the rain forest. I believe that global climate is a momentous issue. In one sense, it is as important a topic as any that the House has discussed in my 27 years here.

Let me ask for the Government's view on a basic problem. Defence spending was outlined in a table referred to on page 28 of New Scientist of 4 November. Will the Government tell me in writing whether they in any way challenge the figures given by the statistical office of the European Community?

Many of us have had pressing representations from our constituents about Ferranti and its orders. Is it fanciful to suggest that the time may come when we have seriously to consider exchanging spending on European fighter aircraft and ever more sophisticated equipment for spending on forest equipment that is urgently needed throughout the world? I am not naive about it—of course, there must be defence spending—but do we really need to spend so much on defence and has any real thought been given to turning swords into the ploughshares that are so desperately needed if we are to tackle the problems to which hon. Members have referred?

I am not the most uncritical fan of the Prime Minister. However, as I can express only a personal opinion, I thought that she was right to go to the United Nations. She made a very important speech which repays study. On page 6 of the text of her speech, she said:

> "We also have new scientific evidence from an entirely different area, the tropical forests. Through their capacity to evaporate vast volumes of water vapour, and of gases and particles which assist the formation of clouds, the forests serve to keep their regions cool and moist by weaving a sunshade of white reflecting clouds and by bringing the rain that sustains them.
> A recent study by our British Meteorological Office on the Amazon rainforest shows that large-scale deforestation may reduce rainfall and thus affect the climate directly. Past experience shows us that without trees there is no rain and without rain there are no trees."

Is that a reference to a matter that I have raised before in the House, on 14 March this year? If there is any more felling in the state of Para or in the eastern Amazon the rains that have come in from the Atlantic for tens of thousands of years through the classic process of evapotranspiration will not give way to that hopscotch effect of vapour—I am using the loosest of physical terms here—which across the Amazon gives life to the rain forest. In particular, is the problem perceived to be that if there is a cut-off on the Atlantic seaboard by any more destruction, the dry period may get longer, many of the plants may wither for want of the waters that have come to them automatically and the cattle ranchers may have to press even harder for new land on which to feed their miserable cattle? Might forest fires be even more frequent?

In February I went to Altimera to attend the rally of the Amerindians. Never in my life have I seen such destruction. Mile after mile of rain forest had been destroyed. My hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) knows exactly what I am talking about. Has the Prime Minister accepted this problem?

We must also consider the Brazilian view. The Brazilians state:

> "It must be pointed out, moreover, that Brazil's hard-won trade surplus is largely being consumed by interest repayments on its foreign debt, rather than in overcoming the country's pressing developmental problems."

The Brazilian view is crucial to the whole issue especially when they refer to

> "the depletion of the ozone layer, arising from the use of chlorofluorocarbons and halons in refrigeration and aerosol propellants. According to figures from the United Nations Environmental Programme, developed countries are responsible for 95 per cent. of their production—USA 28 per cent., EEC 44 per cent., USSR 10 per cent., Japan 13 per cent.—while Brazil contributes less than 1 per cent."

Is not the £100 million no more than a drop in the bucket in relation to overcoming the very real problems?

I want to set a marker about British support for the Tapajos project about which I have questioned the Minister for Overseas Development. I approve of the four projects—the Caxiuana national forest management project, the Ducke reserve project, the tropical forest research project and the Varzea management study. All those are estimable as far as they go. It was also estimable for M. and N. Norman and Company, a timber merchants, to organise a conference in Glasgow on labelling at which the Department of Trade and Industry was represented by Terry Veness. We could possibly hear more about origin labelling of tropical timber.

From Sarawak there are pleas from the Penan people, and, in particular, the letter of 14 October to the Prime Minister from David Gee of Friends of the Earth. I beg the Government to take the matter seriously.

In view of what was said about biological diversity, it is fair to ask the Government about their reaction to the four proposals of Tony Juniper and his colleagues of the International Council for Bird Preservation. They are, first, an EEC import ban on all parrots at risk of extinction; secondly, strict new EEC welfare standards for all parrots in transit; thirdly, a "buy captive-bred" campaign in the United Kingdom promoting the purchase of only captive-bred birds as pets; and, fourthly, a habitat tax payable on parrots sold in United Kingdom pet shops.

This is a truncated speech. Perhaps I will have the courtesy, as I always have had in the past, of a full governmental answer in writing.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): I am delighted to take part in this debate. Conservation issues and an interest in the environment first propelled me into politics when I was at university about 20 years ago. It is significant that that was a time of growth and productivity, and there was much interest in environmental concerns. My political career developed as the country became much more concerned about the problems of lack of growth, lack of investment, high unemployment and so on. Once again, we have a period of high growth and productivity and environmental issues are at the forefront of the political stage.

This issue has always been important to me. For many members of my generation, the first images of the planet Earth, seen from outer space, brought home more forcefully to us than any words ever could the nature of the earth as a finite spaceship flying through space. It reminded us of the necessity of preserving our environment.

As Conservatives, we should not be apologetic about these issues. In recent years, the green lobby, which is often motivated by the Left, has taken over the debate. That is why I welcome the Prime Minister's initiative last autumn, her speech in the United Nations this week, and all the other initiatives that she has taken. There is something deeply important in Conservative philosophy about preserving the best of the past and preserving our environment. That happened in the 19th century when we were not a laissez-faire party. People such as Lord Shaftesbury and Lord Salisbury stood up not for preserving the environment but for protecting workers' rights and ensuring that they were not exploited. In many ways, that tradition continues throughout Conservative party thinking and philosophy.

However, we must apply our own emphasis. We cannot fight the battle on the ground of our opponents' choice. We must make our own response and develop our own philosophy to meet what is undoubtedly a major global threat. We should consider doing that through the pricing mechanism—not necessarily bureaucratic trade mechanisms—for example, when dealing with fossil fuel emissions.

The Prime Minister's step-by-step approach is right. We must start with evidence. I am told that there has been global warming to the extent of 5 deg over the past 100 years. The highest recorded temperatures were in the 1980s, but it will be at least 10 years before we can gather enough scientific evidence to be sure of our facts. From evidence, we must proceed to research. That is why I welcome the Prime Minister's initiative to set up a world research body to examine the world climate.

[Mr. Edward Leigh]

Thirdly, and most importantly, we must work with industry. We cannot hold up multinational industry as the villain of the piece. Indeed, we can do nothing without multinational industry. I have been impressed by the work that I have seen in oil companies such as Conoco and British Petroleum and by the efforts that they are making to plough their initiatives back into the environment.

Therefore, we start with evidence and progress to research and to working with industry. However, we can do nothing on our own. It may surprise Opposition Members to know that I am a believer in the necessity for overseas aid and in accepting that we are one planet. That is why I welcome what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said this week about putting more British resources into curbing deforestation, especially in the south American continent.

We should work from a sound Conservative philosophy, be true to our past and consider concepts such as the pricing mechanism, rather than bureaucratic solutions. We should rely on carefully researched evidence and be determined to promote international evidence, such as we saw in Noordwijk this week, because that is the best way to proceed.

1.30 pm

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Of necessity I shall be brief, because the debate has been dominated by several excessively long speeches which do no credit to the subject or to the way in which the House treats it.

Many hon. Members have a serious interest in and concern about this issue and I very much welcome the fact that at last the House is debating world climatic change.

The debate has emphasised and underlined the inefficiency and incompetence of House of Commons and Government procedures for dealing with major environmental issues. We should have a Select Committee on the Environment which is not dominated by local government considerations. We need a Select Committee to consider environmental considerations and to bring together all the issues affecting environmental change. Likewise, we should have a Ministry to deal with environmental matters, not a Department of the Environment which, again, is largely dominated by local government considerations. However, I suspect that we shall have to await the election of a Labour Government before we have a serious environmental Ministry.

The magnitude of the issue of climatic change brought about by industrial pollution and development is well understood by millions of people. Indeed, it is probably better understood by many outside the House than by hon. Members inside. Environmental considerations are not the sole preserve of the industrialised North, which is taking part in the impoverishment of the southern part of the globe. Environmental considerations are widely understood. They are understood by those people in this country who live in polluted towns or cities. They are also understood by people who live in other parts of northern Europe and who suffer the acid rain emitted by Britain.

Environmental considerations are also understood by people in poor countries. One of the most illuminating discussions that I have ever had about the environmental damage done by the northern part of the world was at a small village in the delta south of Calcutta in India. I had a long discussion with the people there one evening. They told me that they too were suffering environmental damage because of the imbalance of the world's wealth. Their rice fields were being flooded so that they could take part in fish farming, but none of the fish was ever available to them. It was all immediately exported to Japan. Those people were losing their crop-growing facilities simply to promote greater wealth in Japan and there was very little that they could do about it.

Similarly, the forest peoples in Malaysia and in Brazil, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) has just referred, are losing their livelihoods and their opportunity to preserve their environments simply because of the activities of the international logging companies which are pillaging and destroying those forests and promoting cattle ranching and the like, leading eventually to desertification and to local climatic change, which then becomes a major climatic change.

We are at a time in the history of our planet when the power of human kind to dominate and to change the climate has come to full fruition. The hole in the ozone layer is but an example of that. Many climatic disasters are already happening. I refer, for example, to the loss of the rains in north Africa, to the droughts and floods in north America and to the changes in the currents off the coast of Peru, which have led to the loss of Peru's fishing industry. There are already many obvious signs about what is happening.

We must decide our response to what is happening and, in the four minutes left to me, I want to develop two approaches briefly. The first relates to the question of what the United Kingdom Government's policies should be and the second deals with how we can relate that to the rest of the world. The British Government have an obsession with the free enterprise economy and the market approach. The Prime Minister cannot propose any solution to any problem without putting it in the confines of the price mechanism. Frankly, it is the free enterprise system that promotes consumerism, pollution and environmental damage. It is about time that people began to understand that.

Of the energy consumed in this country, 20 per cent. is immediately wasted. For years, the nuclear power industry has lied, but, at last, it has been revealed that nuclear power is twice as expensive as any other form of conventional power. Similarly, the investment and research into alternative energy sources and the promotion of wind, wave, water or solar power is tiny compared to the investment and research into nuclear power potential —all because there is no immediate capitalist benefit attached to such alternative energy. We believe that there should be much more research into renewables and alternative sources of energy that are non-pollutants, and which therefore do not produce greenhouse gases.

We have presided over a mammoth growth in the use of internal combustion engines and we have promoted multinational capital, which has encouraged the use of those engines all over the world. Those engines are the biggest single polluters.

We have promoted consumerism, which is inevitably wasteful. Why are electrical goods made to last for only five years? Why do cars have a life of only 10 years? Why is our manufacturing industry based entirely on consumerism and waste? A different attitude towards the economy and towards society is required.

The problems are summed up by the Government's attitude towards the environment. When the Prime Minister made her speech to the United Nations, no one would have believed that her Government, only two weeks before, had vociferously argued at the Paris conference on the future of the Antarctic for the development of the continent for mining purposes. The hypocrisy of the Prime Minister and her Government is breathtaking.

Many people live a poor existence. Life expectancy in two thirds of the world is half that in Britain. Living conditions in many parts of the world are absolutely appalling. That is partly a result of the economic relationship between the North and the South. It is also the result of the arms race, on which $3 billion a day is spent. I welcome any increase in the powers of the United Nations Environmental Programme. I wish that all Governments would give more resources to it. I welcome the fact that the British Government intend to give more money to it, but it is not enough; it needs far more.

We should exert political pressure on the International Monetary Fund and on the World bank to change their attitude towards environmental schemes and towards the poorer countries. It is no good when they tell poor countries to get themselves out of debt and to reduce their balance of payments deficits by increasing their export-led industries. That does nothing to improve the living standards of the people and the policy has led directly to the destruction of the rain forests, as mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow.

A great deal can be done to improve our environment and to promote the improvement of the world environment. It requires a change of attitude and an end to the philosophy that advocates that price is everything and that the free market economy can solve all. It cannot do that because, of itself, it is the basic cause of the belief that the natural world is there to be exploited for ever more. That is not its function.

We require a real commitment to sustainability in the management of our economy and that of the world. It is not a question of the northern, rich Governments lecturing the poorer Governments; it is a question of working with them to improve living standards and to protect the environment at the same time. Those two objectives can go together, but not if our attitude towards the world economy is based on the idea of an endless supply of natural resources on the never-never.

Waste and climatic damage cannot continue for ever more. Unless we pay serious attention to those problems, we shall reap the whirlwind.

1.38 pm

Mr. Allan Roberts (Bootle): In some respects this has been a comprehensive and thorough debate. Some rather long speeches have been made——

Mr. Corbyn: Not by me.

Mr. Roberts: No, indeed. Those speeches made it difficult for Back-Bench Members who wanted to speak.

This is an important issue and we must put on record not only what the Government claim they have done, but what the Opposition will do when we become the Government after the next election.

Scientific opinion is divided about our knowledge of the greenhouse effect, but no one doubts that the level of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere is increasing. One school of scientific thought says that we cannot yet disentangle natural oscillations in the climate from man-made intrusions, let alone the route by which increased CO_2 and methane levels in the atmosphere impact on global warming. The Government seem to use that as a justification for not taking action on targets. The other school of thought, supported by the major international conferences on the greenhouse effect at Toronto and Hamburg in 1988, have urged an early commitment to major cuts in CO_2 emissions, especially in OECD countries.

Both schools of thought are agreed on two matters: first, that there is an urgent need for a huge international collaborative scientific effort to follow the Brundtland comission on the global environment and deepen our understanding of the causative changes of global warming and, secondly, that there should be no obstacles to an early decision on large cuts in greenhouse gas production, especially in those sectors where it kills two birds with one stone. Since CFCs produce about 18 per cent. of the greenhouse effect and also deplete the ozone layer, they should be eliminated as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Dalyell: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. My hon. Friend is speaking to Benches that are unoccupied by those Conservative Members who have taken up 128 minutes of parliamentary time. That is quite unacceptable.

Mr. Roberts: Since CFCs produce 18 per cent., of the greenhouse effect and also deplete the ozone layer, they should be eliminated as rapidly as possible. Likewise, energy conservation initiatives should be introduced without delay because they are at one and the same time the least-cost solution for the consumer for balancing energy supply and demand, and the largest single insurance policy available against the onset of further global warming.

The Prime Minister is trying to postpone any decision on greenhouse gases until well after the next general election—at least 1992. At the Commonwealth conference in Kuala Lumpur recommendations were made by the scientists who were there as expert advisers, led by Martin Holgate—who came from Britain, and used to be the Department of the Environment's scientific adviser. They recommended that the developing world must carry the overwhelming burden of reducing greenhouse gas emissions. In fact, 73 per cent. of the world's carbon dioxide comes from industrialised countries and 80 per cent. of the world's greenhouse gases come from the developed countries.

Barber Conable, president of the World Bank, has spoken about north America and Europe together being responsible for three quarters of CO_2 emissions. Only 8 per cent. of the world population live there, whereas the developing world, in which 80 per cent. of the world's population live, is responsible for only 7 per cent. of CO_2 emissions.

[Mr. Roberts]

Although it is important that we do something about the tropical forests, and the contribution that is being made by the developing world to save the tropical forests is environmentally desirable, it is not the way to deal with the major problem. The way to do that is to deal with the emissions from the developed world, not the developing world. We are the culprits.

The United Kingdom, Canada and Australia removed the first draft clause from the Langkawi declaration—the Commonwealth environment statement. The clause said that Governments should reduce pollutant emissions through planned and regulated policies. The other countries, which are not developed, supported its continued inclusion.

In the conference in the Netherlands at Noordwijk, the club of big polluters—the USSR, the USA, Japan and Britain, which produce 50 per cent. of the world's carbon dioxide—were represented. The initiative to reduce pollutant emissions came from the British Government who, at the Netherlands conference this week, removed any proposals for targeted CO_2 reductions. The Government also killed an initiative to freeze CO_2 emissions at 1987 levels by the year 2000. The Minister seems proud of the vacuous comment that he inspired, that the Government would agree to do something non-specific about it as soon as possible or some time in the future.

The USSR, the USA and the United Kingdom are free to increase their CO_2 emissions under the agreement reached in the Netherlands. For example, they could double them now and then freeze them in the year 2000. Is that the central role for Britain on climatic change? The Minister says that we must wait for science, that we must wait for a report at the end of 1990, within the IPCC framework, before taking any action. That is what we said about acid rain, about CFCs and about the relationship between smoking and lung cancer.

The Prime Minister has said that we must wait for a global convention in 1992 before setting targets or implementing any action to reduce CO_2 emissions. The Government are delaying action until after the general election. In the Netherlands, the right hon. Lady admitted that Britain had no targeted reduction programme for carbon emissions. Why are the Government so reluctant to act, even though the Prime Minister, in her speech, accepted the nature of the problem? It is because of the Government's energy and transport policies. The CEGB energy projections given to the Energy Committee show that CO_2 production for the electricity supply industry in England and Wales in the year 2005 will be up to 26 per cent. greater than in 1987. That will be a direct result of the Government's refusal to change their policies. Energy production is the major source of CO_2 emission.

Another major source is transport, as many hon. Members have already mentioned. Vehicle traffic miles will increase by between 83 per cent. and 142 per cent. by the year 2025. The Government policies mean major increases in CO_2 emissions. The Open university calculates that, on top of the 98 million tonnes already being created, road traffic will create between another 6 million and 130 million tonnes. The Government are refusing to take any significant action to switch resources to public transport. Some 6,000 new cars a day come on to our roads, 50 per cent. of which are company cars that arrive on our roads as a direct result of Government subsidies. Two Budgets ago, the Chancellor said that the Government would take action about subsidies for company cars, but we are still waiting.

Carbon dioxide, carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide, hydrocarbons and lead all come from motor vehicles. The catalytic converter will solve a significant number of pollution problems, but not carbon dioxide. Without a switch in emphasis towards encouraging and developing public transport, the problem will not be solved. Emissions from cars have increased by 33 per cent. during the past 10 years. The Prime Minister may understand the problem, she may make fine speeches about it and she may urge others to act, but she shies away from action herself. She makes a lot of noise and obtains a lot of publicity but, like Eddie Edwards—Eddie the eagle—she and the Government always end up coming last. She is the Eddie Edwards of the environmental world—a lot of noise and a little bit of action. The fact that she shies away from action because of the consequences on the already published plans of her Departments was no more clearly illustrated than by the statement in the House yesterday. That has altered the whole perspective of Government policies on nuclear power.

The United Kingdom is the sixth largest producer of carbon dioxide. If we do not take action, no one will. Total emissions of CO_2in Britain have remained stable for the last 10 years. There have been no reductions, but there will be increases. There would have been reductions if the Government had not closed many industries, because it is only in the industrial and not in energy or transport sectors that there have been any reductions in CO_2 emissions. As I have said, there will be a continuing increase in car and energy production emissions.

The Prime Minister promised £33 million a year for three years to protect the tropical rain forests. We do not object to that, but it is not enough. Much more needs to be done by Britain and internationally. As I said earlier, the developing countries are not the main cause of the problems. It is a technique and trick of the Government to highlight the problems and then to blame the developing countries and try to assist them, even though it is the developed countries that are the culprits. That was done in the case of CFCs. It was said that it was all the fault of India and China, but they are responsible for only 5 per cent. of the world's CFCs. Now it is said that these foreigners in the developing world are causing global warming, even though the developed world creates 95 per cent. of the problem.

Global warming will flood Ireland and destroy whole forests. It will cause the slow death by starvation of millions of people and millions more will wander the world looking for a home. In the face of that, the Government and the Prime Minister are playing politics. They are claiming to save the world and exploiting concern by their speeches, while refusing to take the action that is necessary, such as the decision by the West German Government to phase out all CFCs by 1992.

The Government highlight the Montreal convention agreement as a great breakthrough for Britain and quote the 50 per cent. cut in CFC consumption that is planned for this country. Such a cut would be totally inadequate, but it is only a 35 per cent. cut. The balance will be sold to the developing world, as if the developing world has a different ozone level from that of Britain.

We need more effective action. Carbon dioxide emissions from power stations, industry, motor vehicles and home-heating systems are responsible for 50 per cent. of global warming. Only one third of the United Kingdom's carbon dioxide emissions comes from fossil fuel power stations, so that source makes a contribution of 15 per cent. to the problem. Therefore, we cannot say that the problem will be solved simply by switching to nuclear power.

Other pollutants such as CFCs, tropospheric ozone—much of which is produced by motor vehicles—methane and nitrous oxide—much of which comes from the over-use of nitrogen fertilisers, a problem that the Government will not address because of the lobby from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—all contribute to the greenhouse effect. A high priority must be given to developing more efficient and cleaner methods of using coal. The projects on fluidised bed combustion should be given a high priority. That type of technology, together with combined cycle gas turbines, should be ideally placed in small electricity generators and combined heat and power schemes. The more efficiently we burn fossil fuels, the fewer greenhouse gases are produced.

We should target the major fossil fuel burning power stations for retrofitting and flue gas desulphurisation. The Government still refuse to join the 30 per cent. club and will not commit themselves to the 60 per cent. reduction in the time scale that is required by the European Community. They have plans and proposals for retrofitting only one fossil fuel power station. Fiddler's Ferry has been cancelled and Drax B is the only one in the programme. They say that they will eventually see to six power stations, but that will be done well after the next general election. That is not a commitment and the Government's inaction is a scandal. We must also take into account the type and content of fuel. For example, heavy fuel oil has a ratio or more than 2:1 of sulphur compared with coal.

Britain must have a major programme of energy efficiency and conservation, and it will get one from the next Labour Government. The efficient use of energy and the efficient management of its demand will benefit Britain. We are committed to energy saving. That will save money and create jobs. Our comprehensive energy efficiency programme will insulate and help to heat the homes of the elderly and those in need. It will boost home markets for Britain's energy efficiency industry, slow down the loss of finite fuel resources and create jobs in home insulation and heating.

We shall launch a major programme of domestic insulation in co-operation with local authorities, and we will involve industry in a partnership with central and local government to develop major initiatives for energy saving within industry. Research and other activities relating to alternative energy resources will also be increased. In 1984-85, Britain spent between £15 million and £17 million on research and development into alternative energy sources such as wind, tidal, wave and solar power, and geothermal energy, but in the same period, we spent £154 million on nuclear power. That illustrates the Government's priorities.

As to CFCs, in an interesting speech at a major conference, the Prime Minister acknowledged the problem but only urged the market to deal with it, refusing to ban the use of CFCs in aerosols. She declined requests for Government intervention or expenditure in phasing out totally the use of CFCs. The United Kingdom contributes 10 per cent. of the world's total CFC production, which is a massive amount. By simply imposing an effective ban on aerosols, the Government would meet their obligations under the Montreal convention. Even if British consumption of CFCs were reduced by 90 per cent., it would still account for more CFC usage than India. Greenpeace is calling for a 100 per cent. phase-out immediately. West Germany is taking that action, so such a demand could be implemented in the United Kingdom.

ICI is the world's second largest producer of CFCs, and Europe's largest producer and exporter. I welcome the company's initiatives in finding alternatives, but commercially it would have been in great difficulty if it had not done so. Britain produces three times more CFCs than India and China together. Last year, the United Kingdom exported CFCs to 117 countries—80 of which have not signed the Montreal agreement.

The Department of the Environment has also agreed to allow methyl chloroform to be used until 2030. That substance, an industrial solvent, is responsible for one twentieth of ozone depletion, yet the Government refuse to take any action on it.

Both the lean-burn engine and the catalytic converter should be speedily adopted in this country. The Government's recent campaign against the catalytic converter, in opposition to other Community countries, was scandalous. They now accept the inevitable, but use the lean-burn engine as an excuse for doing nothing about insisting on the fitting of catalytic converters. We want to see both technologies implemented. They are not alternatives..

The lean-burn engine burns more air than petrol. The more air that is burnt, the less petrol—and the emissions are leaner. Everyone wants a car that does not use so much petrol, but the technology can be developed and implemented only within limits. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Halton (Mr. Oakes) remarked, the faster a lean-burn engine car is driven, the more pollutant it emits—so we also want the catalytic converter adopted. We want public resources switched to public transport, action on nitrogen fertilisers, and the cuts made in research to be restored. The Natural Environment Research Council recently lost 60 staff, and 700 environmental scientists have been shed over the past five years. If the Government are really placing more emphasis on research, why are they cutting the number of staff involved?

We support also the action being taken in respect of rain forests. However, the Government recognise that environmental concerns—the green issues—are of growing importance to the British electorate. It will be considered the height of cynicism if the Prime Minister and other members of the Government, in an attempt to appear concerned about the environment, make fine speeches but by their actions prevent genuine international concern being translated into action. It will be seen as the height of cynicism also if the Prime Minister's most recent speech on the environment is not translated into action, with the setting and achievement by the developing world of specific targets.

The Minister must take back to the Prime Minister a message of concern from right hon. and hon. Members in all parts of the House, and stress to her and to other members of the Cabinet that the House wants specific targets to be set and action to be taken—and that fine words are not good enough.

Mr. Dalyell: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Conservative Members who spoke respectively for 27 minutes, 32 minutes, 41 minutes and 23 minutes were not present throughout the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts).

2 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. David Heathcoat-Amory): I am pleased to have listened to a good debate, and I shall try to respond to as many points as possible. I welcome the fact that we have been able to cover two important reports produced by the Select Committee on Energy and the Select Committee on the Environment. We were helped by two notable contributions from the Chairmen of those Committees, my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Sir I. Lloyd) and my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi).

My two hon. Friends and many Opposition Members have stressed that climate change is surrounded by great uncertainty. Britain is playing a leading part in the huge international effort being made to understand better the complex factors at work. The hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray), who opened the debate for the Opposition, was right to point to the uncertainty. We have all been following the debates in the technical press and we know that an enormous amount needs to be done. The hon. Gentleman was rather grudging in his welcome for the initiative that has been taken by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in her speech this week to the United Nations announcing the setting up of a new climate change prediction centre.

The centre will do much of what the hon. Member for Motherwell, South apparently wants. It will, for example, have a new computer. I accept that we need new and powerful computers to do the necessary climatic modelling. The centre will be annexed to the Meteorological Office. There will be the closest possible co-operation with the Meteorological Office and other centres throughout the country and abroad. It will be open in its links and open to scientists from other countries to visit.

I have mentioned the uncertainties that surround the hugely complex phenomenon that we call climate change, but at least the main facts are clear. There has been a build-up in the atmosphere of so-called greenhouse gases, chiefly carbon dioxide. This may have led to a small but progressive warming in average global temperatures. If that continues unchecked, the consequences, although difficult to predict, are likely to be serious and even catastrophic. I agree with hon. Members on both sides of the House who said that our action must not await final proof. I recognise that final proof of the changes and factors at work is likely to be highly elusive.

We have taken action already to reduce some of the greenhouse gases. CFCs are known chiefly for their damage to the ozone layer. The phenomenon was first detected by British scientists in the Antarctic. It is true also that CFCs are among the most potent of greenhouse gases. That is why we enthusiastically signed the Montreal protocol. We are 10 years ahead of our obligations under that protocol to reduce our use of CFCs. We are in the forefront of the countries pressing for even steeper reductions. I agree with the right hon. Member for Halton (Mr. Oakes) in his praise for the way in which ICI has developed substitutes for CFCs at its plant at Runcorn. I congratulate ICI on that. It shows that commercial interests can be harnessed to meet some of the environmental challenges that we face.

Methane is another greenhouse gas. It is produced by animals, rice paddy fields, mining and the escape of natural gas. It is a difficult gas with which to deal because it is linked so obviously to the relentless increase in the global population, but Governments can do their bit. This Government are already doing so. We have taken action to promote the use of landfill methane, which was mentioned by the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce). Not only does this cut methane emissions from the ground but, by burning methane, we can use it to produce energy. My Department, in association with the Department of Energy, is working on schemes to promote and extend these initiatives.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: I specifically asked why less than 10 per cent. of the suitable sites are developed. Does the hon. Gentleman know what will be done to increase take-up? Less than 10 per cent. is a long way short of potential, as I am sure the Minister will agree.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Not all sites are suitable. It is difficult to get the necessary equipment in place to use all the methane available at all sites, but we are working with local authorities to find out whether the number of sites can be extended. Considerable success has been achieved.

Far and away the largest greenhouse gas is carbon dioxide because of the huge quantities released each year into the atmosphere. Of course, there are huge natural flows of carbon dioxide from the land and the oceans into the atmosphere and back again, but man's activities are putting more carbon dioxide into the air than can be absorbed. The burning of fossil fuels—mostly coal and oil —is the main cause. Simply put, we are taking carbon which has been built up over millions of years out of the earth and putting it into the atmosphere through combustion. We must try to control our emissions of carbon dioxide and also, separately, find ways of absorbing it back again. Both sides of this coin are receiving attention.

I agree that international action is essential. We have been over the Noordwijk conference. My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside has made clear the leading role that he played. For the avoidance of doubt—I sometimes wonder whether hon. Members have had the chance to read the Noordwijk declaration—I stress that the final declaration recognises the need to stabilise carbon dioxide emissions and states:

> "Such stabilization of CO_2 emissions should be achieved as a first step at the latest by the year 2000,"

It is true that some of the large industrialised countries, including Russia, the United States and Japan, had difficulties getting this far. That is why Britain played an important role in getting those countries to achieve a consensus and to sign this declaration.

Mr. Allan Roberts: That declaration does not mean a thing. Those three countries and Britain refused to accept the original draft which included targets and which would have meant a much earlier freeze on CO_2 emissions. Britain was instrumental in supporting the USSR, the United States, Japan and other countries in reducing the commitment. The compromise is a fudge that means nothing.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The hon. Gentleman will agree that it was right that all countries at the conference should sign a final declaration. Britain played a leading part in getting those other countries to achieve that mainstream international consensus. We know that the next stage is to assess the scientific evidence at next year's meeting of the IPCC, followed by the second world climate conference at which specific carbon dioxide targets will be negotiated and agreed.

I want to pass on from Noordwijk to the more general question of what we are doing to reduce carbon dioxide. The task will not be easy. When I hear criticism from the Opposition about the lack of specific tagets, I cannot help turning to the new Labour party document, "Meet the Challenge: Make the Change". I have looked through all its 88 pages of closely written type to try to find a commitment to a reduction of carbon dioxide emissions. It is not there. The document is consumer-friendly and full of generalised aspirations, but there is nothing about the difficult decisions which are necessary if we are to move forward on the issue. I shall not take lectures from the Opposition about the lack of specific targets when they fail to give specific targets in their own policy document.

We have our own programmes to reduce carbon dioxide emissions. I have explained how the adoption of specific targets must await international agreement, but we already have programmes that offer long-term benefits in carbon dioxide reduction. Conservatives believe in diversity of supply: nuclear, gas and the alternatives. But the Labour party is the party of coal and, therefore, the party of carbon dioxide.

We know that nuclear energy is going through a period when the economics may rule out an expansion, but we are promoting—and expect—an increased use of natural gas because gas-fired power stations are not only more energy efficient, but produce less carbon dioxide for each unit of fuel.

Mr. Corbyn: It is interesting that despite the Government's own statement yesterday, they still appear to be obsessed with nuclear power. Would not the Minister be better advised to tell the House what research facilities and resources he will put into renewable energy sources such as wind, wave, water and solar power, rather than to pursue his obsession with nuclear power? He still seems to be besotted with it.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Department of Energy has an excellent programme of research into renewable energy. In addition, the Electricity Act 1989 allocates a specific role for renewable energy. We expect that by the end of the century, at least 600 MW of electricity should be generated by so-called "alternative" means. If that programme can be expanded so much the better.

Mr. Allan Roberts: I must make it clear that the Labour party is the party of clean coal. We want to continue burning coal in fossil fuel power stations to produce energy, as do the Government. The difference is that we would carry out that burning cleanly and we would ensure that fossil fuel power stations are retrofitted. It suits the Government not to take action to clean up the burning of coal so that they can stigmatise it as dirty to justify their obsession with nuclear power.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We recognise that coal will continue to play an important part, but however clean the hon. Gentleman gets his coal, it remains a fact that every tonne of coal burned produces two tonnes of carbon dioxide. Nuclear energy, whatever the economic situation at present, does not produce carbon dioxide or emissions leading to acid rain.

Energy efficiency has been mentioned by several hon. Members. The Electricity Act 1989 requires the Secretary of State for Energy and the Director General of Electricity Supply actively to promote energy efficiency. In addition, suppliers will have to give advice to consumers on the efficient use of electricity. The success of our energy efficiency campaigns is shown by the fact that although United Kingdom output has increased by 40 per cent. over the past 25 years, our energy consumption has stood still. My own Department is giving a lead here and has reduced its energy bill by 24 per cent. since 1985-86.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: Will the Minister acknowledge that in the past eight years energy consumption has increased and that it is only because of the 1979-81 debacle that the net result is a decrease? Does he accept that the Government have cut funding for energy efficiency projects and the Energy Efficiency Office and that as a result we are nowhere near achieving the targets that the Department says are technically feasible?

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The hon. Gentleman has chosen his own base date. I have chosen a longer time scale which gives a more accurate picture. I mentioned the Electricity Act 1989. It is not only the crude sum devoted to energy efficiency but the way in which the money is targeted and the specific administrative arrangements that are important. The hon. Gentleman served on the Standing Committee considering the Bill, so he should know the provisions that it contains to promote energy efficiency and encourage alternative power sources.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: I, too, served on that Committee. The clauses that the Government have written into the Bill are almost meaningless. The new privatised utilities can get away with a mere leaflet conveying information to the consumer. Such leaflets are already published. A Government committed to energy efficiency would have included in the Bill least-cost planning and targets, as proposed by amendments moved by Social and Liberal Democrat Members.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My recollection of the Committee proceedings is not the same as the hon. Gentleman's. The Act contains specific and binding obligations on electricity suppliers to promote energy efficiency.

The other side of the coin is the need to trap more carbon dioxide from the atmosphere and put it back into the land. The importance of forestry was mentioned by my hon. Friends the Members for Havant and for Hornsey and Wood Green. I agree that forestry has an important part to play. Deforestation may account for up to 20 per cent. of the greenhouse effect.

The hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) mentioned forestry, too. He raised several points, but I do not have time to answer all of them. Some strayed outside the subject for debate this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I remind the Minister that the motion is that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Gentleman was free to raise any point that he wishd. Perhaps I should rephrase what I said. Some of the points that the hon. Gentleman made strayed outside my responsibilities in the Department of the Environment. I shall ensure that he receives responses from the appropriate Departments.

I have always listened with care to what the hon. Gentleman says, both through journalism and in the House, and I respect his views. He was characteristically generous to the Prime Minister about her speech to the United Nations. He was right that she had in mind the Amazon basin when she described the dangers of deforestation. He criticised the figure of £100 million for an initiative to help with the management of tropical rain forests. We can argue about the amount, but the essential point is that the Prime Minister has put forward the notion that we cannot dictate to countries such as Brazil, India and China. We must work with them, not merely tell them what to do. We must show them how to manage the important natural resource of rain forests and give them financial help and technological assistance.

Mr. Dalyell: The most practical way to do that is to put to work the three nuclear power stations between Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paolo. As Siemens and Westinghouse are at fault, that seems that most practical thing that can be done.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Nuclear energy may have a part to play in Brazil, too. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman should try to persuade other Opposition Members of its importance.

The hon. Gentleman will agree that we need to conserve tropical rain forests and promote sustainable management. It is acceptable for mature tropical rain forest trees to be harvested provided that they are replanted. What we must not do is to burn them, thus putting the carbon straight back into the atmosphere. There is nothing wrong with using the wood for buildings and furniture because that locks up the carbon in solid form. Provided that the trees are replanted as part of a sensible and sustainable policy of regeneration, everyone benefits—those living in the forests, the countries concerned and the international community.

Temperate forests in countries such as ours also have a part to play. Temperate trees are less good at removing carbon dioxide from the atmosphere, as I am sure the hon. Member for Linlithgow knows, but we have played our part and continue to do so. The United Kingdom has increased its tree planting by 50 per cent. over the past 10 years and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has a number of schemes, such as the farm woodland scheme, which should lead to increased planting. Our target is 36,000 hectares of new planting.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) said that we must get to the front of the international pack in our response to climate change. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister did that at the United Nations, but I should stress that these matters cannot always be dealt with by Governments, even if Governments co-operate. Public concern, co-operation and acceptance are important. That is one reason why my Department recently produced a leaflet, which I commend to hon. Members and their constituents. It is called "Global Climate Change" and its aim is to try to increase public awareness and understanding of this complex issue.

The public are also involved as consumers. We have seen from the success of the campaign to encourage the move from leaded to unleaded petrol that consumers can be persuaded by administrative measures and the price mechanism to make the change to more environmentally friendly fuels. Moreover, consumers voluntarily choose some items, such as aerosols, that do not contain CFCs.

Mr. Leigh: Can my hon. Friend comment further on my argument that the Government should work out a distinctive response to environmental concerns based on the pricing mechanism? Will he pursue that matter with his colleagues in the Department to see how we might proceed?

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The leaded petrol example that I gave shows how the price mechanism can be turned to our advantage. I do not rule out the possibility of, for example, a carbon tax, although it would not necessarily work to the advantage of coal. If all the external environmental costs can be swept together and attributed to the burning of coal, the price of coal might go up and, who knows, nuclear energy might come back into the economic arena.

But we reject a centrally planned system. The command economies in eastern Europe are among the most polluting of all the economies in the world and that is why we favour a voluntary approach involving the consumer in what we are trying to do by using a mixture of persuasion and fiscal incentives. The public must also be shown that none of this will be painless.

Hon. Members on both sides of the House have referred to the need to remove sulphur oxides from power station emissions. We know that those emissions contribute to acid rain. Criticisms were raised that that was not being done fast enough. However, removal is not a cheap or a problem-free option. Flue gas desulphurisation equipment needs limestone as its raw material. That limestone must be quarried, frequently in places of great natural beauty. In addition, the sludge produced by the process must be disposed of. I hope that hon. Members will understand that the solution to one environmental problem can lead to another. Very difficult decisions must be taken, but nothing is served by pretending that the way will be easy or cheap.

Several hon. Members raised the issue of exhaust emissions. This country has an excellent record in responding to the need to reduce pollutants from vehicle exhausts. We have made great strides in removing lead from petrol. We have also signed the Community directive to bring in catalytic converters within three years. They will greatly reduce the emissions of carbon monoxide, unburned hydrocarbons and nitrogen oxides. However, as several hon. Members have stated, they do not deal with the problem of carbon dioxide. That requires the development and manufacture of lean-burn engines and I am delighted that research on that is being pursued vigorously by the Ford Motor Company and the Rover Group.

We must make our vehicles more energy-efficient. That does not conflict with what my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is doing to make our road transport system more efficient. Nothing wastes fuel more than congestion in traffic. The constant stopping and starting in traffic is the least energy-efficient option. That is why we are pressing ahead with a road programme while at the same time recognising that we must make our cars and vehicles more energy-efficient.

Several other topics were raised in the debate and I have not had time to cover them all. The problems will not be solved easily or quickly. This is a global issue. Britain produces only about 3 per cent. of the world's emissions of carbon dioxide. Anything that we can do to reduce that —I have referred to some of the measures that we are already taking—could simply be swamped by increased coal burn, for example in China. In a different sense, it could be swamped by the continuing deforestation of tropical hardwoods, which was an issue raised by the hon. Member for Linlithgow.

The science involved in these issues is extremely complex and not fully understood. There is a pressing need to increase our understanding. Britain is playing a leading role. We are chairing the first working group on scientific assessment which will pull together the work being carried out. The second working group, chaired by the Soviet Union, will investigate and report on the impact of climate change, and the third working group, chaired by the United States, will look into and report on policy responses to climate change. Those are the appropriate forums to pull together what we know and then go forward to a second climate conference at which specific emission targets will be set.

The criticism levelled at the Government by the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) in relation to the Noordwijk conference is misdirected precisely because we already have in place other organisations within which the decisions will be taken. If the hon. Gentlman wishes to be taken more seriously, why did he not, as a Labour party spokesman, tell us of his emission reduction targets and how he would meet them? Difficult decisions will be taken. I looked in vain for a commitment in the recently published Labour party policy document.

We are moving forward on a general front. Our uncertainties about this complex phenomenon are not stopping us taking action now. We are doing something to increase forestry planting in this country and to try to stop deforestation abroad. We are looking at ways of getting more energy out of our existing fuels in powers stations and——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournement of the House lapsed, without Question put.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That this House do meet on Thursday 16th November at half-past Nine o'clock.—[Mr. Garel-Jones.]

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, &c.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 101(5) (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments, &c.).

NORTHERN IRELAND

That the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 (Amendment) Order 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 1501), dated 16th August 1989, a copy of which was laid before this House on 23rd August, be approved.—[Mr. Garel-Jones.]

Question agreed to.

Meningitis

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Nicholas Baker.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Rhodri Morgan (Cardiff, West): It is always with much diffidence that an hon. Member who has no medical qualifications brings a medical matter to the attention of the House. When I think how little I know about medicine —I barely recognise the difference between a bacterium and a virus—and of what medically qualified people know, I am naturally hesitant to raise the topic. However, when constituents' lives have been shattered by a tragic and probably avoidable death and they bring the matter to the attention of a Member of Parliament, he or she has a duty to raise the matter in the House.

There are lessons to be learnt from the death of my constituent, three-year-old Anneka Brown, in the Wick Ferry holiday camp near Bournemouth on 23 August of this year. I raise the matter also on behalf of a constituent of my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), who is unable to be here today because of the ambulancemen's dispute. He has asked to be associated with my sentiments. Fifteen-year-old Stephen King died at the Pontin's Wall park, Brixham camp. That is probably where Stephen King contracted the meningococcal meningitis virus which also eventually tragically put an end to the life of Anneka Brown in another Pontins holiday camp four weeks later.

Stephen King died on 19 July 1989 at Wall park holiday camp outside Brixham. The family had to wait 13 hours for medical help. A resident camp nurse was supposed to be available, but one was not available. Non-medical staff administered aspirin on the ground of suspected sunstroke. Obviously, the expected 24-hour medical care was not available. The circumstances were remarkably similar in the tragedy which occurred four weeks later, in another Pontins holiday camp, where my constituent died. Although it is upsetting, I shall read the mother's letter to describe the circumstances in which her daughter died. She said:

> "On Tuesday 22 August, we went into Bournemouth for the whole day because I did not feel that the camp was safe enough for my children. On returning to our chalet mid afternoon some friends took my six-year-old son and three-year-old daughter to the swimming pool, but when I arrived and saw that the pool was extremely dirty I returned them to the chalet.
> On pages 14 and 15 of Pontin's brochure they offer a facility of resident nurse and chalet patrol. At 5.45 pm on this day I went to the reception office as I found the first-aid room was closed. When met by the receptionist I requested that a doctor be called for my daughter and after waiting 10 minutes she gave me the telephone so that I could speak to the doctor but he refused to come out. The receptionist asked if everything was all right and I said 'No'. The doctor had told me to give her Calpol. I asked her where the nurse was in case I needed her later, and she informed me that she finished at 3.30 pm but if I needed help to go to security and he would get me a doctor. Later that evening my husband went to the reception area to ask the security officer for help in getting a nurse or doctor, to his surprise there was a note on the door 'If security is required please go to the main building', this was the ballroom. My husband went to the ballroom and had to go through crowds of people drinking as the security officer is in an office behind the main bar. This same man patrols the area as well so it took my husband an hour to find him. The security officer who helped us was David Martin Campbell, he > took my daughter's temperature himself then telephoned a doctor. The doctor arrived and diagnosed an ear infection without even examining her.

> At 4.00 am my daughter's condition had worsened so I went looking for the security officer in the main building but this was all locked up so I ran to a telephone box on the camp but found it was out of order and had to go outside the camp to use a telephone there where I managed to get help after ringing the emergency services. When the ambulance arrived it could not get through the gates as there were cars parked blocking its way. When my daughter eventually got on her way to hospital unfortunately it was too late."

What lessons can we learn from that? I shall give the House the reply received from the Dorset Ambulance Service to the questions raised about the service being unable to enter Pontin's holiday camp. On 1 November, Mr. Jolliffe, the chief ambulance officer wrote to my constituent:

> "We have had discussions with the manager, Mr. Rozier, who explained the difficulty they have with controlling parking during the peak season, due to the limited number of staff available to deal with the problem. Clearly this is an unsatisfactory situation for all concerned, not least the Ambulance Service but is an issue which is outside our jurisdiction. Any long-term solution to this problem will need to be addressed by the owners of the camp and the local authority."

I return to the questions of the lessons that we must learn about the seriousness of the disease and the new strains of meningitis. I am told that it is the commonest cause of childhood deaths from any infectious disease. It recently passed the predicted levels and is now surpassing the incidence of the heavy 1974 outbreak. Children have far less natural immunity than adults. Indeed, the high incidence of the virus among adults is extremely important in building up antibodies to the disease, but that is not the case for children, and especially not for children aged nought to five. Unfortunately, adults can carry the disease in their nasal passages for long periods of time at no harm to themselves. They are innocent carriers, but in blowing their nose or sneezing they can pass the virus on to children who do not have that natural immunity because of their age.

I refer to some of the serious statements made recently about meningitis so that the House can appreciate how seriously the Government should be taking it. The Royal College of Physicians of London stated in January 1982, when we were not in a period of serious infection:

> "Meningococcal infection is the cause of 2 per cent. of all deaths between one and four years".

An author called Raman wrote in the British Medical Journal in 1988:

> "early diagnosis and treatment are vital . . . delay may be catastrophic".

How true that is of the two cases that I have mentioned. Another comment, from Abercrombie and McConaghey in "The Encyclopaedia of General Practice" also needs underlining. It states:

My last quotation comes from the report of the task force on diagnosis and management of meningitis, by Klein, Feigin and McCracken in1986, which states:

> "Prompt diagnosis and aggressive management are the goals".

We are certainly not getting prompt diagnosis and aggressive management of meningitis in the cases that I have raised this afternoon.

I turn now to what the Government should be doing to ensure that such cases are not repeated. We should look at the quality of the medical guidelines issued to GPs by the Department of Health and its territorial equivalent in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland. We should also consider the particular case of holiday camps.

I commend the work of the Meningitis Trust. Next Tuesday it is bringing out a new information pack designed for the medical profession and for interested lay people such as those living in areas where there have been epidemics—for instance, Stroud, Plymouth, south and mid-Glamorgan, the area in south Wales from which I come. Where there is such a concentration of infection the information published by the trust will be of interest not just to the medical profession and to school nurses, but to parents. I greatly commend the work of the Meningitis Trust and I am glad that its efforts are receiving some attention.

I am not completely happy, however, that the Department of Health has pushed the guidelines that it issued, through Sir Donald Acheson, on 3 February 1988. It should act to ensure that those guidelines have been read and are acted upon in the areas most prone to the disease. It is particularly important for those guidelines to be studied by those who deal with a lot of children in the nought to five age group or the 15 to 24 age group. The tragic deaths to which I have referred occurred in those age groups. Those age groups are particularly prone to attacks from the group B meningococcal meningitis virus.

One can issue as many guidelines as one likes, pile the paper into the post and assume that those guidelines are read by doctors and others who are supposed to receive that information. One can assume that they act on that information, but doctors receive an enormous quantity of paper through the post from drug companies and so forth. How does one ensure that they read information that is absolutely essential to them and which they may have missed out on at medical school 20 years ago when outbreaks of meningitis did not represent a particular crisis?

Efforts should be made to ensure that medical advice on the new strains of infection is absorbed by those doctors who are likely to be faced with a decision—sometimes in the middle of the night—on whether to treat something as sunstroke or ear ache instead of recognising it, as it should have been recognised in the two cases to which I have referred, as suspected meningococcal meningitis. One cannot afford to withhold the requisite penicillin treatment in such cases. Perhaps the most important medical fact to emerge from the study of the recent meningitis outbreaks is that penicillin should be administered on suspicion of the disease, rather than on certain diagnosis. If the symptoms turn out to be meningitis, delay often means it is too late to administer the treatment to small children or teenagers.

Which areas of the medical profession should be targeted for the specific instructions currently issued regarding new strains of this highly infectious disease? Obviously those instructions should go to the members of the profession who deal with closed or semi-closed communities—residential schools, military camps and holiday camps. As a criticism of Government health guidelines it is fair to say that they generally think of closed communities as residential schools or military camps. The Government have paid insufficient attention to holiday camps. Such camps do not always have even a minimum standard of medical care. Frequently such camps, as with Pontin's this summer, advertise a resident nurse. In the case to which I have already referred there was no resident nurse, nor was there a non-resident nurse available after 3.30 in the afternoon. To leave an untrained security guard to look after children who may be subject to the meningitis infection is well below the minimum standards that we should expect in such large communities. Generally 1,200 people stay in holiday camps, many of them children who play together in the swimming pool, and are therefore likely to pass infection between them.

In the case I have described the security guard acted heroically, but security guards are unable to match up to the demands of such a situation. The Government must ensure that holiday camps receive the same specific medical advice about the new strains of infection as is sent to military camps or residential schools, both of which contains many teenagers. The nought to five age group is less likely to be in either of them, but will be likely to be in holiday camps. That is an essential factor to which I hope that the Minister will be able to respond today. Clearly, there is a deficiency in holiday camps, which should provide a minimum standard of medical cover. Such camps are still a popular form of holiday for families. Minimum guidelines should be sent out to holiday camps to ensure that they have GPs with specific training so that if infectious diseases such as meningococcal meningitis break out in the camps, as happened this summer, the GPs will know how to recognise the suspicion of the presence of an extremely serious and potentially fatal disease which has a particular tendency to emerge where large numbers of children live together briefly for a week here or a fortnight there.

It seems that the Department of Health has not yet got the measure of this disease. More must be done and higher standards must be set for residential establishments in which children congregate in the summer. Ten or 20 years ago we used to be able to say that when it came to health we were lucky to be born British. After all the events of this summer, I am not convinced that that is still true today.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Roger Freeman): The House owes a debt of gratitude to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) for bringing this matter to its attention. It is an important issue and the hon. Gentleman has set out the concerns not only of himself and his constituents, but many other members of the public. I wish to try to reassure him, his constituents and other hon. Members.

I was extremely sorry to learn of the death of Anneka Brown. Death is never an easy thing to come to terms with, but the death of a young child is perhaps all the more sad. I have a three-year-old daughter who is almost the same age as Anneka would have been today. If my wife and I had been placed in the same circumstances as Anneka's parents, we would have suffered a grievous and devastating blow. I feel very much for Anneka's parents and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will convey to them my condolences and those of other hon. Members.

The hon. Member has raised a number of important questions in his speech which reflect the concern he expressed in a letter of 24 October to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health. I shall try to deal with his various points and I hope that he will accept my reply today as a full answer to his letter.

First, I shall turn to the issue of what guidelines are issued to doctors about the recognition and treatment of meningitis. Following a noted increase in the prevalence of meningitis, Sir Donald Acheson, the chief medical officer, issued—as the hon. Gentleman has explained—two letters in February 1988. He issued one to all doctors and copies to regions, districts, family practitioner committees and environmental health officers and another to regional medical officers, also with copies to regions and districts. I have sent the hon. Gentleman copies and placed further copies in the Library.

The hon. Gentleman may know that the Meningitis Trust pack, to which he referred and which I also commend, contains the chief medical officer's letters with his support and approval. I shall not of course read from those letters, since they contain a lot of detailed medical information, but I should like to draw attention to certain points. Meningitis is the inflammation of the lining of the brain and can be caused by viruses or bacteria. The former are usually less serious and self-limiting; the latter need urgent treatment with antibiotics and may lead to death or handicap. The chief medical officer's letters mention that infections can occur at all ages, but the highest rates of the commonest group are seen at ages nought to four years. Anneka was three when she died. The classical features of meningitis are neck stiffness, sickness, headache and intolerance to light, but they may not always be prevalent, particularly in children under one year old.

I am advised by the medical officers in the Department of Health that it is difficult to diagnose meningitis in its early stages and that rapid deterioration is unfortunately common.

Guidance is given about the treatment that is recommended if diagnosis of meningitis is suspected. The letters stress that it is a statutory requirement to notify cases of meningitis to the proper authorities, usually the medical officer for environmental health. They also draw attention to a leaflet, attached to both letters, prepared by the Gloucester health authority. The leaflet, which is extremely well written, is a step-by-step guide and explains what meningitis is, what the signs and symptoms are, what can be done to prevent it, and how it is spread. On that last point, it is interesting to note that the leaflet says that the germ

"cannot live long outside the human body so it cannot be picked up from buildings or factories, water supplies or swimming pools".

The bacterial infection can be spread only by personal contact. The hon. Gentleman underlined that fact.

In addition to the two letters I have mentioned, in December 1988 my Department issued a circular on the management of communicable diseases following the Government's acceptance of the main recommendations of the chief medical officer's report "Public Health in England". The circular is also in the Library.

The circular reminded health authorities that effective arrangements for the surveillance, prevention and control of communicable disease and infection were an important part of their responsibility to improve the health of the population. Health authorities were also advised, in that circular and in later guidance, as to the action that should be taken to ensure that those responsibilities were discharged. That includes the appointment of a consultant in communicable disease control, eventually, in every district to take executive responsibility for the surveillance, prevention and control of communicable disease and infection, whether notifiable or non-notifiable, in the local population.

Of course, at present every district has a medical officer of environmental health whose duties we have redefined for the new consultants. We have also just issued a consultation document on the review of the law on infectious disease control seeking views from all health and local authorities, a variety of professional bodies and anyone else who wishes to reply, about how we might go about providing a more modern and effective legislative backing to the control of these diseases.

I know that the matter that the hon. Gentleman has raised relates to two specific cases. If he has not had time to look at the consultative document, I shall write to him and send him a copy. I should welcome his views on the wider issue. Indeed, in the light of the sad experience of his constituent and the constituent of his hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), his views would be particularly appropriate.

With the recent issue and broad circulation of both the chief medical officer's letters, the circular, the leaflet and the consultation document, we have widely informed professional people and authorities about the guidelines and services available for the recognition and treatment of infectious diseases such as meningitis. The hon. Gentleman rightly said that it is one thing to write and to distribute, but another to ensure that people read and understand. I shall return to that point in my closing remarks.

Another of the hon. Member's points was the question of guidelines to holiday camps for the provision of medical cover. We would expect holiday camps to adopt a commonsense approach by having trained medical staff available; should they be in any doubt as to what service to provide, they should either contact a local medical practitioner or seek advice from the district health authority or the proper officer, usually the medical officer for environmental health, who has the local lead responsibility when cases of communicable diseases occur. Such bodies are best placed to give advice based on local circumstances and the needs of patients.

Similarly, should the nursing staff become aware of an outbreak, whether it be meningitis, food poisoning or something else, we would expect them to contact an appropriate doctor. We expect those running holiday camps, like any other facility or organisation where people, especially the young, gather together—and holiday camps are not the only location where young children gather—to have clear guidelines for their staff such that, if they are approached about an individual incident or group of incidents, they should use their common sense and promptly call a general practitioner or the hospital. Indeed, despite the catalogue of organisational and procedural disasters to which the hon. Gentleman referred, the procedures were properly followed, a general practitioner was called and did take action, but, sadly, too late.

I should like to take this opportunity to clear up one or two points in relation to the cases of meningitis where Anneka Brown was concerned. Cases of meningitis occurred at the Brixham holiday camp at the time that Anneka and her family were there. However, it has been established that the organisms were all of different strains and therefore were not connected with each other, but had occurred by chance. I know that the hon. Gentleman did not imply that there was an epidemic of similarly related cases at that camp, but it is worth putting that on the record.

About four weeks after visiting that camp, Anneka and her family went to another holiday camp at Christchurch. The period between the family's stay in the two holiday camps makes it highly unlikely that there was any direct connection between the incidents as that period is way beyond the incubation period of infection which is only two to three days.

While it is possible that some member of the Brown family unwittingly became a carrier after the stay in the first holiday camp, it is also important to appreciate that up to 25 per cent. of young adults may be carriers at any one time and that the carriage rate in the normal population is about 10 per cent. The hon. Gentleman quite properly referred to that. Doubts have been expressed about how widely the treatment should be given among possible contacts of confirmed infectious cases, but the advice of experts in the field is that antibiotic medication should be given only to the close family contact. That is brought out in the chief medical officer's letters.

Finally, the hon. Gentleman mentioned the role of the local general practitioner in the diagnosis and treatment of Anneka. Hon. Members may like to know that, under his terms of service, a general practitioner is obliged to render to his patients all necessary and appropriate personal medical services of the type usually provided by general practitioners. Such services include arrangements for referring patients as necessary to any other service provided under the Health Service.

As for the doctor's obligation to make a visit, all I can say is that it is for the doctor himself to decide in each case whether such a visit is necessary, in the light of his professional knowledge and judgment. I cannot say more than that because I understand that the family is in the process of making a complaint or has already complained to the local family practitioner committee and, given the role of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State in these matters, it would be injudicious for me to say anything more.

I hope that I have been able to give some reassurance to the hon. Gentleman and to the Brown family. We recognise the distressing nature of the disease and have taken steps to advise health professionals about the diagnosis and treatment of meningitis. I am advised that meningitis notifications are now subsiding. Peak levels were reached last year. Periodically since the war, there have been increases in the number of incidents, but as I say, notifications are now subsiding.

I have reflected on the hon. Gentleman's suggestions about how to make sure that more people, and especially those in holiday camps, are aware of the affliction and its early signs and what steps they should take to ensure that medical advice is promptly called. I assure the hon. Gentleman that I shall take steps to see that districts with large seaside holiday camps pass to those camps copies of the meningitis leaflet for the better awareness specifically of holiday camp staff.

I think that we have prepared and circulated the correct advice to professionals. The hon. Gentleman wondered how far that chain of information has gone. I assure him that, because of the circumstances of the case that he raises, I will take specific steps to ensure that districts have passed on the excellent Gloucester health leaflet to the staff of the larger camps.

I appreciate how difficult it is to accept the occurrence of such a sad event, but it should not cause parents to cancel or to postpone their arrangements for staying at holiday camps next summer. Holiday camps are no less safe than school playgrounds, and the sad truth is that that distressing affliction can in too many cases prove fatal, particularly among very young children. We are determined, through steps taken not only by the Department but in the regions and districts, and among general practitioners, to ensure that proper information is available and that the correct action is taken.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute to Three o'clock.

EMPLOYMENT

Businesses

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses are being created every week; and what was the position in the same period 10 years ago.

Mr. Tim Eggar: In 1988, the latest year for which figures have been published, the net increase in the number of VAT-registered businesses was 64,000, an average of just over 1,200 per week. In 1980, the net increase was 16,000, an average of 300 per week.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for Great Britain and each standard Training Agency region, how many individual child care allowances are being received by lone parent employment training participants; and how many were granted or refused for each of the latest available three months.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimated proportions of trainees receiving child care allowances at the end of June, the latest date for which information is available, are given in the table. The latest in training figures, at 13 October 1989, has been provided for each region. Information is not available on the number of child care allowances granted or refused for each of the latest available three months.

Employment Training Trainees in receipt of Child Care Allowances

Region	Per cent.[1]	Number[2]
South East	3	14,900
London	4	20,500
South West	3	12,100
West Midlands	2	23,500
East Midlands and Eastern	2	16,900
Yorkshire and Humberside	2	25,200
North West	2	28,800
Northern	1	24,300
Wales	1	16,600
Scotland	2	25,300
Great Britain	2	209,000

[1] Proportion receiving child care allowances 30 June 1989.
[2] Numbers in training 13 October 1989.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for Great Britain and each standard Training Agency region, what are the monthly statistics for each month since January showing the results of new client adviser interviews with people who want to register as unemployed showing (a) the number of claims not pursued at the reception stage, (b) the number of clients who do not attend for interviews, (c) the number of claims not pursued at the interview broken down into the following categories: (i) those entering employment, (ii) those not available for work and not intending to claim an alternative benefit, (iii) those appropriate to alternative benefits and (iv) other, and (d) the number of submissions to vacancies, (e) the number of referrals to employment training, (f) the number of availability referrals, (g) the number of referrals to specialists, namely DRO, CA, (h) the number of referrals to job clubs and (i) the number of referrals to EAS.

Mr. Eggar: As the information requested is contained in a large number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member, and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Special Employment Measures (Swindon)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people benefiting from special employment measures at the latest available date in the Swindon constituency; and what is the average cost per person supported under each measure.

Mr. Eggar: The following programmes help to increase the opportunities available to unemployed people either to take up work or to start their own business. The figures indicate the number of people supported in the Gloucester and Wiltshire area, which includes Swindon, during August/September:

	Number
Enterprise allowance scheme	1,242
Job start	34
Job release scheme	80

The average cost per person on job start is £382. Average costs per person are not available for either the enterprise allowance scheme or the job release scheme. Job release pays people either £79·25 or £65·25 a week, depending on their circumstances, up to age 65. The net cost to the Exchequer of the enterprise allowance scheme is £1,846 per person taken off the unemployment count.

There are a number of other programmes available in Swindon which help unemployed people. These include the job club programme which provides training and support to help long-term unemployed with their job search activity. In September, 294 people were in a job club in the Gloucester and Wiltshire area.

Job Clubs

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how long a claimant must be out of work before being eligible to join a job club.

Mr. Eggar: Claimants should normally be out of work for six months before being eligible to join a job club. There are relaxations to the six month rule for people with disabilities, ex-offenders and people leaving YTS or employment training without a job to go to.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what facilities are available at his Department's job clubs to assist unemployed people trying to secure work.

Mr. Eggar: Every job club has telephones, paper, pens, typewriter or word processors, envelopes, stamps, photocopiers, newspapers and directories which members can use free of charge. A trained job club leader helps members draw up a curriculum vitae and shows them the best way to look for jobs, make job applications and prepare for interviews. Fares to attend the job club are reimbursed.

Job clubs continue to be very successful and provide valuable help to all those who join. Over 54,000 members have found work so far in 1989. Many others have gone on to training, self-employment or education. Overall, 69 per cent. of all job club members leave with a positive outcome.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will consider making job club facilities immediately available to unemployed people as soon as they become unemployed.

Mr. Eggar: Job club membership is generally available only to people who have been unemployed six months or longer. This is because long-term unemployed people are generally less well motivated and have greater difficulties in applying for and securing jobs than those recently unemployed.

However, there are some important exceptions to the six-month eligibility rule which are designed to help groups who do need extra help, including those with disabilities, ex-offenders and those leaving YTS or ET without a job. I have no plans to change the eligibility rules at present.

Job Interviews (Travel Costs)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of travel warrants for unemployed people attending job interviews in 1988.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of travel warrants is not separately available. The cost to public funds of unemployed people attending job interviews under the travel-to-interview scheme in 1988 was £980,000.

Training Schemes

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many agreed action plans have been drawn up at employment training agents on a monthly basis (a) nationally and (b) by training agency area since May.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 23 October 1989]: The figures are provided in the table.

Accidents (Radiation)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what comprehensive plans have been made, and what programmes for implementation of procedures, for the fire service to deal with accidents on railway or road involving external emissions of gamma radiation, and for police officers and other workers immediately affected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply, and will write to the hon. Member.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Today" Newspaper Story

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South, of 3 July, Official Report, column 14, what action he has now taken with regard to the Today newspaper for its front page story on 11 May headed, "Maggie IRA Bomb Squad Seized", concerning the arrest of three Irishmen who were later released without charge.

The Attorney-General: I have considered the matter, but have concluded that there is no realistic prospect that any prosecution would result in a conviction. Accordingly, I do not propose to take any further action.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr Shersby: To ask the Attorney-General whether he proposes any changes to the serious fraud offices cash and running cost limits for 1989-90.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit on class XI, vote 12 will be increased by £250,000 from £5,514,000 to £5,764,000. Within this total the running costs limit will remain at £5,372,000. This change is to enable the serious fraud office to meet the costs of capital works relating to its new accommodation at Elm house, some of which although initially provided for in 1988-89 have, due to unexpected delays in completion of the work, now slipped into 1989-90. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

PRIME MINISTER

Environmental Protection

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will set out the details of the policy options for global co-operation on environmental protection and environmental improvement she presented to the Inter-Parliamentary Union meeting on 6 September in London.

The Prime Minister: My speech to the Inter-Parliamentary Union last month set out the principles which I believe should govern our efforts to improve the environment. There are four: first, that proper protection for the environment is not possible without adequate growth; secondly, that we need a sound scientific base to enable us to adopt policies and remedies which will be effective; thirdly, that the demand for a better environment means accepting the costs involved and that action must work with the grain of the market and of human nature; and fourthly, that many of the key environmental problems cannot be addressed by one nation alone—they need international co-operation. The Government have followed these principles in the detailed actions it has taken to improve the environment domestically and to take the lead in international co-operation, notably in the London ozone layer conference earlier this year and in the proposal we have made in the United Nations for an international framework convention on global climate change.

Poverty

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if she will now consider convening an inter-departmental ministerial committee to consider the problem of poverty in Great Britain.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. The Government will continue to take account in all their policies of those with particular needs. The recent statement on benefits by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has directed further substantial help to the less well-off pensioners, the lower income families with children and the long-term sick and disabled.

Sir Alan Walters

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether Sir Alan Walters has signed the Official Secrets Act;

(2) whether Sir Alan Walters is subject to the same conditions of service as other special advisers; and if she will make a statement;

(3) whether Sir Alan Walters is subject to the same conditions of service as civil servants at a comparable grade; and if she will make a statement;

(4) whether Sir Alan Walters is subject to the same rules of conduct as civil servants at a comparable grade; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Sir Alan Walters was employed as a fee-paid consultant. His conditions of service were based on those of a special adviser which differ slightly from those of permanent civil servants. He is subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Acts.

Council of Europe

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Prime Minister what changes have been made in the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the consultative assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: I have appointed my hon. Friend the Member for Poole (Mr. Ward) as a substitute member in place of my hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale), and I have appointed my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) as a substitute member in place of my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart).

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes have been made in 1989-90 cash limits for expenditure by the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit on the overseas aid vote (class II vote 5) will be increased by £74,613,000 to £1,365,579,000. The increase reflects adjustments to the aid programme during the year, including significant new commitments for Nigeria of £49,600,000—Official Report 6 December 1988 column 90 —and for the Commonwealth Development Corporation of £20,000,000—Official Report, 21 May 1989, column 38. The increase also includes £2,500,000 for the estimated costs in 1989-90 of training and advice under the know-how fund for Poland—Official Report 18 October 1989, column 149—originally to be incurred on class II vote 2, "Other External Relations". Pending approval of the supplementary estimate, urgent expenditure of £1,500,000 for this new service will be met by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund. The running costs cash limit for the ODA has also been increased by £300,000, from £43,831,000 to £44,131,000. The net effect of these changes has been charged to the reserve, and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not readily available in the form requested. The Department received 11,157 letters for ministerial reply between January and September this year; 4,798 were replied to within four weeks. Approximately two thirds of this correspondence was from hon. Members.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures to support the statement made by the hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) on 15 September, that teachers' pay has increased over the past three years by 40 per cent.

Mrs. Rumbold: Teachers have received the following pay increases since March 1986:

Date of settlement	Increase Per cent.
31 March 1986	1·6
1 April 1986	5·7
1 January 1987 and 1 October 1987	[1]16·4
1 April 1988	4·75
1 April 1989	6·3

[1] Paid in two instalments of 8·2 per cent.

The cumulative effect has been a rise in teachers' pay of some 40 per cent.

Mr. Raison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the figures for average teachers' earnings for each year from 1981 to the latest year for which figures are available at 1985 prices.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follows:

Average teachers[1] salaries 1981-89

Year (April)	Average salaries (Cash) £	Average salaries real terms[2] (1985 prices) £
1981	8,031	10,275
1982	8,618	10,087
1983	9,119	10,255
1984	9,652	10,327
1985	10,391	10,391
1986	11,216	10,883
1987	13,100	12,200
1988	13,670	12,249
1989	14,762	12,244

[1] Teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Wales.

[2] Using the Retail Prices Index.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the referral of the interim pay award for teachers to the teachers' interim advisory committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a substantial number of letters commenting on the remit given last month to the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions.

GCSE

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide details of what examination fees can be recovered by schools and colleges from pupils who fail to complete the course work requirements of the GCSE examination.

Mrs. Rumbold: If a pupil fails without good reason to complete the requirements, including coursework, for any public examination for which the LEA or school has paid an entry fee, it is open to the LEA under section 108 of the Education Reform Act 1988 to recover the fee from the parent or guardian.

Crack

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has distributed fact sheets on crack to teachers in Warrington.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Bulk copies of a fact sheet on crack were issued by the Department on 29 August to all drugs education co-ordinators in England. It is for each co-ordinator to decide how the fact sheet should be distributed locally.

National Curriculum (Special Needs)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has made any estimate of the extra resources needed to enable children with special needs to participate fully in the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The cost of implementing the national curriculum will be met from the redirection of existing resources. However, the Government are making specific grants available to local education authorities to support the introduction of the national curriculum. In this financial year, there will be support for over £100 million expenditure. It is for authorities to decide how much to spend within this total in order to enable children with special educational needs to participate fully in the national curriculum, where appropriate.

Local Authorities' Cash Plans

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, 24 April, column 421, why information on local education authorities' cash plans is not available for the years 1981 to 1984; and what relevant information is held by his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: Cash plans were not requested in the period 1981-84 and information comparable with that provided for later years could not be made available without disproportionate expense. For the period in question the Department sought estimates from local education authorities of the cost of certain elements of their capital programme, but not in respect of new places to meet basic need for areas of population growth. Where numbers were expected to increase pupil projections were converted to allocations by means of standard cost multipliers per pupil place.

Infertility Research

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give current Government funding into infertility research.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 26 October 1989]: The Medical Research Council is the main agency through which the Government support medical research. The council spent £2·3 million on research specifically into infertility in the financial year 1988-89 and also supports a range of basic research which may be of relevance to infertility.

Additionally, research on infertility may be pursued by university departments and medical schools with support from UFC block grants, and by health authorities; information on this is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list establishments where research into infertility is currently being carried out.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 26 October 1989]: The Medical Research Council funds research into infertility at the following establishments:

I. MRC Establishments

1. Clinical Research Centre, Clinical Sciences Division, Harrow

Project Title

(i) Ultrasound and hormonal analysis of ovarian follicular growth in infertile women.
(ii) A population survey of ovarian morphology.
(iii) Urine Steroid profiling in patients with ovulatory dysfunction.

2. Clinical Research Centre, Division of Sexually Transmitted Diseases, Harrow

Project Title

Study of efficacy of antimicrobial therapy in male infertility.

3. MRC Human Genetics Unit, Edinburgh

Project Title

Cytogenetic and physiological aspects of meiosis in man and other mammals: male infertility; Spontaneous and mutagen—induced aneuploidy.

4. MRC [illegible]xperimental Embryology and Teratology Unit, London

Project Title

Factors affecting in-vitro fertilisation and embryo transfer in laboratory animals and man.

5. MRC Mammalian Development Unit, London

Project Title

Genetic, molecular and hormonal factors affecting gonadal differentiation in the mouse.

6. MRC Reproductive Biology Unit, Edinburgh

Project Title

(i) Role of neuropeptides, inhibin and gonadal steroids in the differential secretion of pituitary gonadogtrophins.
(ii) Lactational amenorrhoea in women. Implications for contraception and family planning.
(iii) Neural mechanisms governing the secretion of LHRH and functionally-related peptides.
(iv) Application of neuropeptide analogues and steroid antagonists in the regulation of the pituitary gland.
(v) Molecular analysis of sperm function in normal and infertile men. Effect of oral contraceptives and putative therapeutic agents.
(vi) Identification and characterization of gamete specific antigens. Immunological infertility and contraceptive vaccines.
(vii) Endocrine, paracrine and autocrine regulation of the ovary, with reference to physiology of the follicle and corpus luteum.
(viii) Prostaglandins in human semen. Role in sperm physiology and immunosuppression.
(ix) Endrocrine, paracrine and autocrine regulation of the testis. Application of chemotoxins in the study of hormone kinetics and gametogenesis.
(x) Neuroendocrine regulation of development, puberty and sexual behaviour.
(xi) Studies of physiological mechanisms controlling erection in primates.
(xii) Sexuality and well being of women. Relationship of the menstrual cycle, lactation, contraception and disorders thereof.

7. MRC Biostatistics Unit—Cambridge

Project Title

Predictive indices of fertilization capacity.

II. Grant-holders in University Departments, etc.

(a) Dr. C. W. Coen, Department of Anatomy and Human Biology, King's College, London.
Biogenetic amines and the control of luteinizing hormone secretion.

(o) Dr. R. J. Post, Department of Medical Entomology, School of Tropical Medicine, Liverpool.

Information is not gathered centrally about research into infertility supported by block grants from the Universities Funding Council, by health authorities, or by the private sector.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Advice Centres

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Government have any plans to establish a national network of advice centres.

Mr. Forth: No. However my Department funds by means of grant-aid the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, and Citizens Advice Scotland which provide administrative, training and other services to the national network of over 1,000 citizens advice bureaux. This funding amounts to nearly £10 million per annum for England and Wales, and some £1 million for Scotland.

My Department has a network of 37 regional offices and sub-offices in England which give advice on its activities, and a number of other Government Departments also have regional networks.

British Overseas Trade Board

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the chairman of the British Overseas Trade Board; and what was discussed.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade last met the chairman of the British Overseas Trade Board on 24 October. They discussed a range of issues relating to the work of the board.

Labelling

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new plans for the labelling of consumer goods.

Mr. Forth: Additional labelling requirements will come into force over the next year for toys and all-terrain vehicles. The Government have made clear their support for the early introduction of a Community-wide voluntary eco-labelling scheme. In addition my Department is supporting work designed to establish a certification trademark which could be awarded to goods that consistently meet high specifications, although launch of such a scheme would depend on adequate support from industry.

Import Penetration Statistics

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the delay in publishing his Department's figures for import penetration.

Mr. Redwood: In 1988 a new commodity coding system was introduced by Customs and Excise resulting in a complete revision and renumbering of the existing Customs tariff codes.

Each of these new codes had to be allocated, whole or in part, to industries of the standard industrial classification before import penetration figures could be derived. The size and complexity of this task has resulted in an interruption to the normal publication timetable.

Pembridge Investments

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the implications for policy on takeovers of the financing arrangements of Pembridge Investments through short-term, high-interest borrowing, for the sale by auction of DRG businesses to market competitors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The proposed acquisition of DRG by Pembridge Investments is currently being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will take his decision on the question of reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the light of the director general's advice and of his own consideration of all the relevant issues.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to announce his decision on whether or not to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the Pembridge Investments bid for DRG plc before the next closing date of the offer on Friday 3 November.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce his decision as soon as possible after he has considered the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading, as is usual.

Recycling

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives from the British Plastics Federation and when he next plans to meet the British Plastics Federation to discuss the implementation of recyclable plastic bottles and containers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: I met representatives of the British Plastics Federation at the "Plastics Recycling—Future Challenges" conference dinner in September. However, the question of how to achieve optimum recycling levels of plastic bottles and containers is not a matter solely for the British Plastics Federation. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 17 October at column 12 which lists a number of inititatives that are relevant to increasing the proportion of these products which is recycled. The British Plastics Federation is a member of the advisory group referred to in the reply.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has made any recent study on the benefits to United Kingdom industry of raw materials recycling from commercial, domestic and industrial wastes; and if he will make a statement on the current status of the United Kingdom national recycling programme.

Mr. Forth: There has been no recent study, but it is estimated that last year our reclamation industries recovered about 27 million tonnes of recyclable materials worth about £2 billion. United Kingdom industry traditionally recycles about 95 per cent. of its process scrap, and we also recover more than 80 per cent. of the ferrous metal, 75 per cent. of the copper, 65 per cent. of the lead, and 60 per cent. of the aluminium from our scrap and waste resources. The Department has recently formed an advisory group of individuals with special expertise on, or responsibilities for, recycling, to assist in developing a national recycling strategy.

Marine Licensing

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline the latest procedures for the enforcement of VHF marine licences.

Mr. Forth: My Department's radio investigation service (RIS) responds to complaints of interference to marine radio channels. The RIS also randomly inspects marine licences and installations to ensure that licence conditions are met and that only approved equipment is used.

Coastal Waters (Digital Selective Calling)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out the timetable for the introduction of digital selective calling for all United Kingdom coastal waters.

Mr. Forth: The Secretary of State for Transport, who is responsible for maritime distress and safety matters, has established an MF distress and safety digital selective calling (DSC) service at five stations in the United Kingdom. This service, operated by Her Majesty's Coastguard, provides coverage for most of the coastal waters around the United Kingdom. When two further stations are established in the Republic of Ireland in 1992, all United Kingdom coastal waters will be adequately covered by DSC for distress and safety purposes.

A DSC service for commercial purposes would be provided by British Telecom, but it has no plans at present to install either MF or VHF DSC equipment at its coast stations. However, it is evaluating automated MF and VHF radiotelephone systems which have various DSC-based facilities.

Marine Distress Service

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure British manufacturers are ready to take advantage of the global marine distress service.

Mr. Forth: British manufacturers are aware of the requirements of the global maritime distress and safety system (GMDSS) and the opportunities that it offers through their representation on a number of national and international committees.

Much of the radio equipment which will be needed to operate the GMDSS is already required to be fitted to merchant shipping under an international agreement known as the safety of life at sea convention (SOLAS). Already British industry plays an important role in supplying this equipment to the international shipping community.

For certain types of equipment there are still some technical and operational details to be finalised and international discussions are continuing on these outstanding topics. British manufacturers are fully involved in decision-making, through the appropriate committees such as the maritime radio technical committee.

Broadcasting

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what additional measures are being taken to reduce the burden of licensing requirements under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts.

Mr. Forth: My Department laid on 10 October 1989 a set of regulations under section 1 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 which will further reduce licensing requirements in line with intentions expressed in the White Paper "Releasing Enterprise" (Cm. 512), published in November 1988.

The regulations will exempt the testing or development of radio devices on certain frequency bands under suppressed radiation conditions. This mainly affects those businesses which carry out the development of new radio devices and those that are involved with the servicing and repair of radio devices.

A requirement of the exemption is that no interference is caused to other authorised wireless telegraphy services by the exempted apparatus.

The regulations will affect over 400 current licensees. They are due to come into force on 1 November 1989.

Fan Clubs

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what regulations exist to cover the operation of fan clubs, and what action can be taken against the organisers of such bodies when they are found to be bogus.

Mr. Forth: There are no specific regulations that control the operation of fan clubs. The action that can be taken against the organisers of such bodies when they are found to be bogus would depend on the circumstances of each case.

Laboratory of the Government Chemist

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what will be the future status of the laboratory of the Government chemist.

Mr. Ridley: Today the laboratory of the Government chemist is being established as an executie agency of DTI. The freedom and flexibility that the laboratory is to gain will further improve its efficiency and help it to provide a better service to its customers. The LGC is the fourth agency to be created in the DTI under the next steps initiative.

The relationship between the LGC and the DTI will be governed by principles laid down in its policy and resources framework. Management of the agency will be the responsibility of the chief executive, Mr. Alex Williams, the Government chemist. The agency will operate within policies determined by DTI Ministers. It will recover its full economic cost from services rendered through arm's-length customer-contractor relationships with all its customers. From April 1990, the LGC will be exempted from gross cost control. These arrangements will ensure that there will be open competition for analytical services, that the size and shape of the laboratory will depend on the orders it can win from customers and that customers will achieve better value for money.

In my foreword to the agency framework document, a copy of which has been placed in the library of the House, I undertake as part of the corporate planning process, to set targets that will require the laboratory to achieve demanding incremental improvements in overall efficiency and quality of service.

The main link between the LGC and the DTI will be a steering board chaired by Dr. R. Coleman, the chief engineer and scientist of the DTI. In addition to Mr. Williams, the chief executive, the board will include the following members drawn from the private sector:

	Company
Mr. H. B. Berridge	Berridge Environmental Laboratories Ltd.
Dr. L. B. Davies	Lyndon Davies Associates
Dr. D. R. Williams	BOCM Silcock

New EC Regulations

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many European Community Commission 83/189 cases have been notified since 30 December 1988.

Mr. Redwood: A total of 257 notifications have been received between 1 January and 26 October 1989.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how long it takes Her Majesty's Government to respond to European Community Commission 83/189 cases on average; and what has been: (a) the shortest and (b) the longest time;

(2) how many European Community Commission 83/189 notification cases have been received in English; and how long it takes Her Majesty's Government to have those that were not, translated;

(3) how many times Her Majesty's Government have objected to European Community Commission 83/189 cases; from which countries, on which subjects and on which grounds;

(4) how many times Her Majesty's Government have used the Committee procedure provided for in the regulation to raise objections to European Community Commission 83/189 cases; and what was the reason.

Mr. Redwood: Notifications are received in the language of the notifying member state. The European Commission provides the translation. The other information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the mechanism for inter-departmental co-ordination in relation to European Community Commission 83/189 cases involving more than one Government Department.

Mr. Redwood: The Department with the primary interest in any particular notification is responsible for any necessary consultation and co-ordination with other Departments, using the usual formal and informal mechanisms.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who is responsible for receiving, processing and formally replying to notification by the Commission of 83/189 cases.

Mr. Redwood: My Department.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what procedure there is, in relation to European Community Commission 83/189 cases, for notifying and consulting the industries affected by these notifications; how it works; and how long it is reported to take a Department to notify the affected industry.

Mr. Redwood: My Department, as well as making summaries of notifications available through the Spearhead database, consults the interests falling within its sphere of responsibility that seem likely to be affected and circulates details to other Departments to enable them to do likewise. Information is not held centrally on the time taken to dissemminate that information, and could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

The Association of British Chambers of Commerce now prints summaries of notifications in its weekly publication "Business Briefing", as does the European Commission in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing (a) the current degree of import penetration and (b) that in December 1978 for (i) radios, (ii) black and white televisions, (iii) video recorders, (iv) colour televisions, (v) telephone receivers, (vi) refrigerators, (vii) passenger motor vehicles, (viii) microwave ovens, (ix) calculators, (x) desk top computers, (xi) computer printers, (xii) word processors, (xiii) microchips, (xiv) irons, (xv) commercial vehicles, (xvi) x-ray machines, (xvii) dental instruments and appliances, (xviii) shoes, (xix) sewing machines, (xx) excavators, (xxi) lawn mowers, (xxii) public transport type motor vehicles, (xxiii) burglar alarms, (xxiv) built-in-ovens, (xxv) hovercraft, (xxvi) lasers, (xxvii) vending machines, (xxviii) dishwashers, (xxix) medical instruments and appliances, (xxx) paper, (xxxi) wallpaper, (xxxii) printed matter and (xxxiii) furniture.

Mr. Redwood: The import penetration ratios given in the table refer to the activity heading to which the individual products are classified. Ratios for the individual products are either not available or not readily available.

Monthly Digest of Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why the figures in table 15-10 of the monthly digest of statistics have not been updated with the 1988 figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 23 October 1989]: The delay has been caused by the introduction in January 1988 of the new harmonised system for overseas transactions, entailing a thorough revision and renumbering of the Customs tariff headings.

All tariff codes had to be reassessed and reallocated, in whole or in part, to the industries of the standard industrial classification before the import penetration and export sales ratios presented in table 15.10 of the monthly digest of statistics could be derived.

This classification has proved to be more complex and to have taken longer than expected. The ratios for 1988 will be published in the next edition of the monthly digest of statistics.

ENERGY

Offshore Installations (Safety)

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to ensure that the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 will be applied to offshore installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Requirements for the control of hazardous substances on offshore installations have been in force since 1976 under the Offshore Installations (Operational Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations 1976. These requirements are to be supported by guidance notes which will be produced in 1990.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been made to test the effectiveness of comprehensive plans to ensure that experts with special knowledge of nuclear energy would be on the scene of an accident in adequate time to take preventive measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The operators of nuclear installations have on site at all times staff who are fully trained to take preventive action in the event of a nuclear emergency. The operators also have additional specialist staff who are always available on standby and would immediately go to the site. A deputy chief inspector of nuclear installations would also be appointed by the Government as a Government technical adviser to preside over the off-site centre. He would become the authoritative source of advice to the police, local authorities and central Government on the course of the accident and the need for countermeasures to protect the public. He would be assisted by experts with special knowledge including representatives from the Department of the Environment, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the National Radiological Protection Board and the operator. These arrangements are approved by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate and are regularly tested in exercises in order to ensure their effectiveness.

Coal Mining

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps the Government are taking to protect the indigenous coal mining industry; and if he will make a statement on the special report from the committee on the Associated British Ports No. 2 Bill, HC 258.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is not this Government's policy to restrict imports of coal. Restricting competition will not bring long-term security to the British coal industry. The best protection is to produce reliable supplies which are competitive on the world market.

It is not for Government to make a formal response to the special report but for the House to take it into account on Third Reading.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of the recent report of the Severn barrage study group.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Copies of the report summarising the work of the Severn Tidal Power Group, published by HMSO in the Department of Energy paper series, were placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament on 23 October.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the privatisation of the electricity industry; and if he will indicate when the flotation of the two Central Electricity Generating Board successor companies is to proceed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Both generating companies will be brought to the market in the first half of 1991. The precise timings are still to be decided.

Electricity Boards (Appointments)

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many individuals have been appointed to electricity boards over the last two years; and from what industries they came.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since 1 October 1987, a total of 57 individuals have been appointed to electricity boards in England and Wales. They have a wide range of backgrounds.

Electricity Industry (Capacity Deficiency Scheme)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the terms of the new capacity deficiency scheme proposed for the electricity industry.

Mr. Wakeham: The rules on which the new electricity market will operate will be published in good time before vesting of the restructured industry.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans exist for fitting special filtered containment venting systems into the designs for the four pressurised-water reactors to be built by the Central Electricity Generating Board in England and Wales for the prevention of over-pressurising station containment buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Consent has been granted for only one new nuclear power station: Sizewell B. The design and construction of this station is a matter for the CEGB. I have therefore asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will constitute a planning inquiry commission, as specified in sections 47-49 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, to consider the possible construction of a nuclear power station at Wylfa.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As the Gwynedd county council and the Anglesey borough council have objected to the CEGB's applications for my right hon. Friend's consent to construct a PWR nuclear power station to be known as Wylfa B and to modify the transmission lines in the vicinity of the existing power station at Wylfa, he must now arrange for public inquiries to be held into the applications pursuant to section 34(1) of the Electricity Act 1957. My right hon. Friend will announce the arrangements for these inquiries in due course.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates his Department has of the likely costs of decommissioning (a) AGR and (b) PWR nuclear power stations.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the present estimated cost of decommissioning each advanced gas-cooled nuclear reactor, indicating what cost is to be borne by National Power and what by the taxpayer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Decommissioning costs for AGRs and PWRs are matters for the CEGB or SSEB. The accounts of these bodies will include appropriate provisions for AGR decommissioning costs as presently estimated. The Government have taken powers, under schedule 12 to the Electricity Act 1989, to contribute towards decommissioning costs, and the way in which these powers will be used is under consideration.

Mr. Blair To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the cost per kwh, or on another basis of appropriate calculations, to be charged by National Power for electricity generated by the Sizewell B power station under the contracts negotiated with the distributors.

Mr. Wakeham: The contract for electricity from Sizewell B is currently under negotiation.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest calculation of his Department of the cost of electricity generated by Sizewell B.

Mr. Wakeham: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I shall ask the chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member.

HEALTH

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been given by his Department to health authorities about the development of strategies for the prevention of coronary heart disease.

Mr. Freeman: Planning circulars from the Department of Health to the NHS have repeatedly emphasised the importance the Government attach to the prevention of disease and the promotion of health. Authorities have been asked to identify needs and develop programmes to meet them and to focus on specific programmes on diet, smoking and exercise. Such work is central to coronary heart disease prevention. Furthermore, the joint Department of Health and Health Education Authority "Look After Your Heart" campaign is intended to provide links between national and local initiatives for health authorities to build on and the regional review and operational planning processes have emphasised that authorities should be developing programmes for prevention in line with the national campaign. This year's planning guidelines refer to the intention to issue general guidance on health promotion and disease prevention during the planning year. This will include specific references to coronary heart disease prevention. I hope that my hon. Friend will also not forget the important role played by the voluntary sector in this area.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give for each district health authority, regional health authority and special health authority the number of acute hospital beds and the total number of beds in each year since 1979;

(2) if he will give for each district health authority, the percentage decrease or increase in acute hospital beds between 1982 and the latest available date; and if he will rank the district health authorities according to the percentage change;

(3) if he will give for each district health authority, the percentage decrease or increase in the total number of hospital beds between 1982 and the latest available date; and if he will rank the district health authorities according to the percentage change;

(4) if he will give for each district health authority, the percentage increase or decrease in the number of deaths and discharges per annum between 1982 and the latest available year; and if he will rank the district health authorities according to the percentage change;

(5) if he will give for each district health authority, the total number of deaths and discharges in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested has been placed in the Library and I have written to the hon. Member with a copy of such information.

Family Planning

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) National Health Service family planning clinics and (b) general practitioner health centres are designated as training centres for family planning in the United Kingdom for 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The following information is recorded by the joint committee on contraception which is concerned with family planning training for doctors and on which the Department of Health is one of several bodies represented. The figures refer to the number of approved premises for family planning training.

United Kingdom Totals at 30 September

Community and hospital clinics	1,065	1,092
General Practitioners' premises	32	32

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown of the numbers of individuals receiving contraceptive advice and treatment by contraceptive method (a) through National Health Service family planning clinics in England for the year 1987 and 1988 and (b) from general practitioners in England for the years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is contained in the tables. Community and hospital clinic figures for 1988-89 are not yet available. A detailed analysis of contraceptive services provided by general medical practitioners is not held centrally.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of family planning clinics and family planning clinic sessions in each regional health authority in England for 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available centrally in precisely the form requested. The number of premises in regular use for family planning sessions and the number of sessions, by regional health authority, are shown in the table. Figures for 1988-89 are not yet available.

Infant Deaths

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for the latest year for which records exist and for each of the preceding three years, what was the number of infant deaths in the United Kingdom as a whole and the rate per 10,000.

Mr. Freeman: Infant mortality (deaths under one year), numbers and rates per 10,000 live births, in the United Kingdom, 1985-88, were

Year	Number of Deaths	Rate[1]
1985	7,030	93·6

Abortion

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review compliance with section 4 of the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Freeman: The Chief Medical Officer wrote on 11 October to remind health authorities in England about the national guidance issued in 1975 and 1979 about the appointment of hospital doctors to posts which involve termination of pregnancy or advice on termination. The Department will respond to any report of the Social Services Select Committee which is currently investigating this subject.

Medical Damage (Compensation)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list representations which he has received concerning the introduction of mechanisms for the payment of no-fault compensation to victims of medical damage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A number of representations have been received. There are no plans to introduce any kind of no-fault compensation scheme. We consider that the basis for seeking compensation for injuries alleged to have been suffered as a result of medical negligence should continue to be through the courts, as recommended by the Pearson commission in 1978.

Irradiated Casualties

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospitals where training has been introduced for medical or nursing personnel in dealing with irradiated or contaminated casualties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Following is a list of hospitals which have been designated by the relevant regional health authority as being prepared to accept contaminated casualties and to advise on and assist with decontamination of personnel. The list is provisional and represents a preliminary compilation of responses to a health circular issued earlier this year giving guidance to the NHS on accidents involving radioactivity. I shall let the hon. Member have the definitive version as soon as possible.

Substance Misuse Services

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the financial resources allocated for substance misuse services; if he will list priority issues in this field; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Since 1984 the Department has committed nearly £65 million of new money to preventing drug misuse and providing services. This includes £17·5 million on pump priming, 188 local drug projects, over £35 million to HAs to develop and expand services, over £8 million on campaigns of information and education and £3 million on funding the headquarters costs of major voluntary organisations.

The Government's objectives have been to prevent, as far as possible, people from using drugs in the first place; to reduce the physical harm of those who do use drugs, and to provide users with advice and treatment services to help them live without drugs.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of moneys paid out of the trust fund set up to assist those haemophiliacs infected with the HIV virus who are in the greatest need; how many such applications have been made to the fund and granted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that in the period to 31 August 1989 the trust made 1,600 single payments totalling around £0·9 million and 578 regular payments totalling around £1 million. The Macfarlane Trust is an independent charitable trust and it is a matter for the trustees to allocate funds in the way which they consider best meets the needs of those eligible for assistance within the provision of the trust deed.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities have so far been issued with writs by haemophiliacs infected with the HIV virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As health authorities are separately represented, the Department does not routinely receive this information. However, I understand that most regional and district health authorities and some special health authorities have been issued with writs.

Nuclear Flask Accidents

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans have been made by health authorities to deal with nuclear flask accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Arrangements for dealing with the response to an accident involving the transportation of irradiated fuel are set out in consignors' contingency plans and the irradiated fuel transport flask emergency plan, a copy of which is in the Library. Radiation protection advice would be provided by health physicists specified in the emergency plan, not by the NHS.

However, in the unlikely event of this advice not being available at the time, the police could invoke the national arrangements for incidents involving radioactivity (NAIR) scheme. This scheme is intended to ensure that, for accidents involving the transportation of radioactive materials, appropriate resources are available to the police for providing protection to the general public. The NAIR scheme is co-ordinated by the National Radiological Protection Board and its participants include appropriately staffed and equipped National Health Service hospitals that are designated for NAIR purposes.

In addition, Regional Health Authorities are required to designate hospitals within their regions which are equipped and staffed to provide treatment and decontamination facilities in the unlikely event of an incident leading to the release of radioactivity.

Benzodiazepine

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals there may be to monitor counselling given by pharmacists to patients on long-term and medium-term prescriptions for benzodiazepine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have no such proposals. This is a matter for the pharmaceutical profession.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is conducted into the effects on patients receiving medium or long-term prescriptions for benezodiazepine when sudden reduction or stoppage is made by general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We are not aware of any such current research. It is now generally accepted that a sudden reduction or stoppage in taking benzodiazepines can have an undesirable effect on patients. The British National Formulary, which is supplied free of charge by the Department to all prescribing doctors, carries advice on benzodiazepine withdrawal.

National Tranquilliser Advice Centre

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken to ensure the future of the national tranquilliser advice centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Etterick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 25 October.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from the London ambulance service on what has been the average response time for a 999 call in its area by (a) London ambulance service vehicles, (b) police vehicles used as ambulances and (c) other voluntary ambulances per week since 1 September.

Mr. Freeman: During the period 1 September to 22 October the London ambulance service's average response time for 999 calls was 11·9 minutes from the receipt of the call by central ambulance control. The average time taken from the crew receiving the call to their arrival on the scene was nine minutes.

Similar information is not available in respect of Metropolitan police and British Red Cross vehicles deployed on 23 and 24 October. St. John ambulance service vehicles were also deployed on those dates and their average response time was 8·8 minutes from receipt of a call from control.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from the London ambulance service on the number of ambulances that have been taken off the road by the London ambulance service management whilst crews were available to staff them during the current dispute.

Mr. Freeman: The details for the two days of the action are as follows:

	Early	Middle	Night
Monday 23 October 1989
Manned[2]	127	110	67
Not used[3]	52	86	34

	Early	Middle[1]
Tuesday 24 October 1989
Manned[2]	122	113	—
Not used[3]	83	73	—

[1] Up to 1700 hours when an agreement was reached and front line vehicles went back "on the run".

[2] Manned = the number of fully staffed ambulances available.

[3] Not used = those ambulances not used due to the industrial action, as crews would not work to London ambulance service management requirements.

Care in the Community

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to include a code of conduct for the care of the elderly for residential care in private homes as part of the White Paper on care in the community.

Mr. Freeman: General guidance on the running of these homes is contained in "Home Life" a code of practice for residential care, endorsed by the Secretaries of State for Social Services and for Wales. This guidance remains valid.

Additionally, we have recently put in hand a three-year programme of development projects aimed at demonstrating how the quality of life for people in residential care can be improved.

Kidney Dialysis

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the present ratio of kidney dialysis machines to renal patients; and what is the ratio of renal units to patients.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the number of dialysis machines is not collected centrally.

According to data for 1988 reported to the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the ratio of patients to renal units in the United Kingdom is 224 to one if those with a functioning transplant are included. The ratio is 108 to one if patients are defined to include only those receiving dialysis for example, either from dialysis machines or continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis.

WALES

EC Aid

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what agreement has been reached with the four county councils of south Wales for financial compensation to authorities who have lost eligibility for European regional development fund grant for major infrastructure projects due to delayed submission of integrated development operations to the European Commission.

Mr. Peter Walker: There was no such delay. The integrated development operations programme for industrial south Wales was submitted in advance of the date specified by the European Commission.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he held with the four county councils of industrial south Wales and the European Commission on the proposal for an integrated development operation.

Mr. Peter Walker: My officials held discussions during the summer of 1987 with the relevant local and public authorities following the European Commission's identification of industrial south Wales as a potential candidate for an integrated approach. The four county councils, along with the local authorities and interested bodies have been fully involved in the subsequent formulation of an integrated development operation programme which was submitted to the European Commission in May 1988. Against the background of the reform of the European structural funds the programme has since been the subject of discussions with the Commission which have involved representatives of the county councils.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he held with the four county councils of south Wales and the European Commission on the timing of submission of proposed integrated development operations to the European Commission.

Mr. Peter Walker: All the bodies involved in the formulation of the integrated development operations programme for industrial south Wales, including the four county councils, were fully aware that the European Commission required submission of the document by May 1988 and worked energetically to meet that requirement.

Roads

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, following the consultation undertaken by his Department on the impact of the A55 trunk road improvements programme on Gwynedd, whether any new policy initiatives are being taken by his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: The continued fall in unemployment, spreading industrial investment and new job creation in north Wales all underline the effectiveness of the Government's policies in regenerating the area's local economy.

Following my statement to the Welsh Grand Committee in December 1988, my hon. Friend the Minister of State has sought views on how the opportunities afforded by the massive investment in the A55 improvements can best be used to the advantage of north Wales. I expect to make an announcement before the end of the year.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the original cost estimate of dualing the A55 trunk road between Conwy and Bangor, together with the original target completion date for this work; what is the latest cost estimate and latest estimated completion date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In "Roads in Wales 1980" the estimated cost was £166 million, including the cost of the Conwy crossing and the Bangor bypass. Estimated completion was towards the end of the decade. The cost estimated in "Roads in Wales" 1989 is £322 million. Completion is now expected in the early 1990s.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations have been received by the Welsh Office during the past six months calling for new legislation relating to the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Around 25 from individuals and organisations.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is shown in the following table:

Under 4 weeks	89	91	92
Within 4 to 6 weeks	9	7	6
Within 6 to 8 weeks	1	1	1
Over 8 weeks	1	1	1

[1] To 27 October 1989.

Vicarages and Manses

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provisions will apply from April 1990 in respect of grants for home improvements for vicarages and manses in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Subject to parliamentary approval, the provisions of part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Bill will apply in respect of vicarages and manses in Wales.

Contraception

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown of the number of individuals receiving contraceptive advice and treatment by contraceptive method (a) through National Health Service family planning clinics in Wales for the years 1987 and 1988 and (b) from general practitioners in Wales for the years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Grist: The information is shown in the following table:

Family planning clinic services

Method[1]	Number of patients 1987	1988
Oral contraceptives	36,324	34,545
IUD	9,138	7,936
Cap/Diaphragm	4,459	3,835
Sheath	14,075	12,589
Chemicals	589	645
Rhythm	9	38
Female sterilisation	76	47
Vasectomy	86	64
Other	2,910	2,794
None	4,753	5,019
Total	72,419	67,512

[1] If the patient was already using a birth control method the method in use at the time of the first visit during the year was recorded unless another method was chosen at the visit in which case the new method was recorded.

General medical practitioners contraceptive service

	[1]Number of patients 1987	1988
Intra-Uterine Devices	4,651	3,934
Other than Intra-Uterine Devices	120,887	131,015
Total	125,538	134,949

[1] Number of patients at 1 October for whom payment was due at the end of the quarter.

Family Planning

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total cost for 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988 in Wales for (a) general practitioner provision for family planning servies and (b) district health authority family planning clinic services.

Mr. Grist: The available information, shown in the following table, relates to (a) the contraceptive fees paid to general practitioners plus the estimated net ingredient cost of contraceptive drugs and appliances precribed by general practitioners and dispensed by retail pharmacists and appliance contractors, and (b) expenditure, including overheads, on family planning services provided through health authority community health services.

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
(a) Family Practitioner Services	2,175	2,443	2,575	3,429
(b) DHA Community Health Services [1] [2]	1,308	1,434	390	432

[1] The figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 exclude Gwynedd Health Authority whose Community Health Services expenditure in those years is only available in total for all services.

[2] Due to restructuring of Health Authority accounts the figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 include support service costs for clinics but exclude costs of drugs and medical supplies issued by nursing and medical staff.

Regional Aid

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give (a) the number of applications for regional selective assistance received between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Peter Walker: A total of 417 applications for regional selective assistance grants were received by my Department between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989. In the same period, 310 offers of grant[1] were made to the value of £127 million.

Total expenditure[2] in 1988-89 was £42·5 million (£44·8 million at 1989-90 prices). I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 20 March 1989 for details of the vote provision for 1989-90 and planned provision for 1990-91 to 1991-92.

[1] RSA project and training grants.

[2] Gross expenditure comprises project and training grants, exchange risk losses on European loans and payments under the Business Improvements Service scheme.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give (a) the total number of applications for regional development grants outstanding at 31 March 1988, (b) the total number of applications processed by 30 September 1989, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Peter Walker: A total of 1,911 of the 1,935 applications for regional development grants outstanding at 31 March 1988 had been processed by 30 September 1989, involving offers of grant to the value of £98·3 million. Total expenditure in 1988-89 was £58·6 million[1] (£61·8 million at 1989-90 prices). I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 20 March 1989 for details of the vote provision for 1989-90 and planned provision for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give (a) the total number of applications for investment grants and innovation grants from 1 April 1988 to 30 September 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for 1988-89 and 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Peter Walker: A total of 655 applications for regional enterprise (investment and innovation) grants were received by my Department between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989. Of these, 337 applications had been approved by 30 September involving grant offers of over £2·8 million.

Total expenditure in 1988-89 was £0·218 million (£0·230 million at 1989-90 prices). I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave him on 20 March 1989 for details of the vote provision for 1989-90 and planned provision for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact on the proposed Cardiff bay barrage of the Severn estuary barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Cardiff bay barrage will be designed to withstand the present full tidal range. A barrage across the Severn estuary would serve to reduce the tidal range and therefore result in a lower loading on the Cardiff bay barrage.

NHS Treatment Centres

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many patients he expects to use each National Health Service treatment centre for each of the first three years; what proportion of the total in-patient waiting list for each specialty this represents; and by what date he expects the current in-patient waiting lists to be cleared;

(2) what financial resources are to be allocated for treatment centres; and what proportion of that figure will be used for (a) administration, (b) wages and salaries and (c) clinical use.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office staff are currently finalising the details of operation of treatment centres in discussion with managers and clinicians in the NHS. When these discussions are complete I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

NHS Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional staffing requirements he anticipates due to the implementation of the proposals contained within the National Health Service White Paper.

Mr. Grist: A considerable amount of work is currently being undertaken within the NHS in Wales in the field of manpower planning and management. District health authorities have recently completed the second round of a continuing manpower resource planning exercise introduced last year to identify future manpower requirements in terms of numbers and skills. The manpower implications of a number of initiatives, including the proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients", are being addressed as part of that ongoing process.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest available figures for each year and by Welsh health authority for the number of hospital admissions due to post-operative infections, for (a) general surgery, (b) orthopaedics, (c) ophthalmology and (d) all specialties.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not centrally available.

NHS Property (Maintenance)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of backlog maintenance for National Health Service properties in Wales, and by health authority, for the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not held centrally. However, district health authorities in Wales are required to review the condition of their stock annually and for 1988-89, it was estimated that it would cost about £132·7 million to bring the whole of the NHS Estate in Wales to a standard where it was exhibiting only minor deterioration. This sum may be broken down by district health authority as follows:

DHA	£ million
Clwyd	19·2
East Dyfed	4·5
Gwent	14·6
Gwynedd	10·0
Mid Glamorgan	26·4
Pembrokeshire	0·7
Powys	1·2
South Glamorgan	45·0
West Glamorgan	11·1

HOME DEPARTMENT

Racial Harassment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many perpetrators of racial or anti-semitic harassment have been charged by the police under (a) section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 and (b) section 47 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 21 July 1989 at column 401.

Malicious Communications

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place under the Malicious Communications Act; and how many of those relate to racist and anti-semitic material.

Mr. John Patten: Data is not yet available on the number of offences committed under the Malicious Communications Act 1988, which did not come into force until September 1988. Information as to whether prosecutions specifically relate to racist and anti-semitic material is not being collected centrally.

Local Government Grants

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his intention to implement the report entitled "A Scrutiny of Grants Under Section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966" published on 3 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The report entitled "A Scrutiny of Grants Under Section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966" has been welcomed by the Government for its thorough analysis of the problems surrounding section 11 grant. Ministers are presently considering the changes needed in order to improve the effectiveness of assistance provided for ethnic minorities by section 11 grant.

The Government hope that it will not be too long before an announcement can be made.

Mr. Lorrain Osman

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been held on remand in Her Majesty's prisons for a period exceeding three and a half years; if he will list all such prisoners; what steps he proposes to take to bring to an end such extended remands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: On 31 August 1989 one unconvicted prisoner had been held in Pentonville prison for more than three and a half years. Mr. Lorrain Osman was committed to custody pending completion of extradition proceedings and remains in cutsody awaiting the final outcome of the succession of appeals that he has lodged. He may not be surrendered for extradition while appeal proceedings are pending. A judicial review and further habeas corpus proceedings began on 4 October. Extradition proceedings are not subject to the custody time limits contained in the regulations made under section 22 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available in the Library those communications he has had from the Governor of Hong Kong since May 1989 in relation to the case of Mr. Lorrain Osman; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has received none.

Fugitives

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last five years he has used his discretion under the Fugitive Offenders Act (a) to order or (b) to refuse the return of a fugitive in extradition cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Secretary of State signed 28 surrender warrants in extradition cases under section 9(1) of the Fugitive Offenders Act 1967, during the period from 1 January 1984 until 26 September 1989, when the Act was replaced by the Extradition Act 1989. In the same period no requests were refused.

Arrest Warrants

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether deputy clerks in the magistrates courts have authority to issue arrest warrants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In magistrates courts warrants of arrest may be issued only by magistrates.

Commonwealth Immigrants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure in each of the last three years under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966, as outlined in his Department circular 72/1986, relating to expenditure for Commonwealth immigrants by local authorities; and of those sums how much was spent on education.

Mr. John Patten: The amount of grant paid out under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for the most recent three year period for which actual figures are available is as follows:

1986-87	104
1987-88	93
1988-89	89

The figures represent 75 per cent. of total section 11 expenditure. The remaining 25 per cent. is a matter of local authority contribution.

In each of the three years education provision has accounted for approximately 80 per cent. of total grant.

Conservative Party Conference 1989

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Lancashire on the policing implications for the rest of Lancashire of police deployment during the Conservative party 1989 conference.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. This is a operational matter and, as such, the responsibility of the chief constable.

Civil Defence

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provision of civil defence in Swindon.

Mr. John Patten: Responsibility for civil defence planning rests with county councils who are assisted by district councils. We are satisfied that Wiltshire county council, and the district councils within the county, are making good progress towards meeting their statutory obligations.

Wiltshire Constabulary

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the figures for the authorised establishment of the Wiltshire constabulary for the last 10 years for which figures are available; what was the actual strength of the force in post in each year; and if he will express both as a proportion of the population of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Wiltshire constabulary

31 December	Authorised establishment Number	Authorised establishment As proportion of population of England and Wales (per cent.)	Strength Number	Strength As proportion of population of England and Wales (per cent.)	England and Wales population figures[1] (thousands)
1979	1,032	0·002	1,007	0·002	48,870
1980	1,033	0·002	1,032	0·002	49,162
1981	1,035	0·002	1,042	0·002	49,222
1982	1,042	0·002	1,031	0·002	49,573
1983	1,042	0·002	1,030	0·002	49,608
1984	1,042	0·002	1,029	0·002	49,657
1985	1,045	0·002	1,028	0·002	49,767
1986	1,049	0·002	1,037	0·002	49,923
1987	1,074	0·002	1,096	0·002	50,079
1988	1,074	0·002	1,093	0·002	50,244

[1] The population figures are mid-year figures and relate to the previous year in each instance.

Details of the police/population ratio for Wiltshire and for the other police force areas in England and Wales for the last 10 years can be found in the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary (appendix 7) copies of which are lodged in the House of Commons Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Waddington: The available figures relate to ministerial correspondence, the great majority of which represented correspondence with hon. Members, and are as follows:

Turn-round time in calendar days

	up to 30 days per cent.	31-60 days per cent.	more than 60 days per cent.
1986	14·5	46	39·5
1987	33	41	26
1988	35	47·5	17·5

Wymott Prison (Suicides)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides there have been at Wymott prison since 1 January 1986.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 1 January 1986 one verdict of suicide has been returned on an inmate who died at Wymott prison.

Fire and Police Services

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the latest year for which records exist and for the preceding three years, what was the average length of involuntarily separated or unaccompanied tours of duty for personnel in (a) the fire service and (b) the police service.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not held centrally.

Gaelic Broadcasting

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of his consideration on television broadcasting in the gaelic language.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy) on 26 October.

Deaths (Metropolitan Police)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the names, dates and circumstances of all deaths of persons in the custody of the Metropolitan police since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the deaths of persons in custody of the Metropolitan police, including the date, place and cause of death, and the circumstances surrounding the death, has been published, since 1980, in the annual report of the Metropolitan Police Commissioner. Information prior to 1980 is not available. To provide the names of the persons concerned could cause distress to their families.

Public House Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Surrey listing the Surrey police officers who visited Birmingham during the pub bombings investigation;

(2) what liaison took place between officers of the Surrey and West Midlands police forces during the Guildford and Birmingham pub bombings investigations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A full list of all Surrey police officers who visited Birmingham in the period referred to cannot be provided. Criminal and other records not part of a major inquiry are destroyed by the Surrey police after at most five years, and by the West Midlands police after seven years. Details of precise liaison between the two forces at that date are similarly unavailable, although there is no reason to think that normal liaison arrangements were not in force.

However, I understand that a team of nine Surrey officers was working in the west midlands area at the time of the Birmingham pub bombings investigation. As the hon. Member knows, the actions of the Surrey officers who investigated the Guildford bombings are the subject of inquiries by the Avon and Somerset police. It would be inappropriate for me to identify the individual officers.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from (a) the chief constable of Surrey and (b) the chief constable of the West Midlands as to whether Surrey police officers visited Queen's Road police station in Birmingham between 22 to 25 November 1974.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that according to the records of the investigation conducted on behalf of the West Midlands police by the Devon and Cornwall constabulary, no Surrey police officers visited Queen's Road police station on the dates in question.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to establish the whereabouts of the non-material evidence in the Birmingham pub bombings case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. I understand that the Devon and Cornwall police attempted to find these documents at the time of their investigation in 1987 and were unable to do so. As far as they could establish, the documents had been destroyed.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what actions he has taken to provide compensation to Carol Richardson, Gerard Conlon, Patrick Armstrong and Paul Hill for their wrongful imprisonment; and if he will make an interim payment.

Mr. John Patten: The solicitors representing the four persons have been informed that interim payments will be made. The amount has been assessed by the independent assessor appointed under the provisions of section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988. We have also invited them to supply any information they would wish the assessor to take into account in assessing the total amount of compensation that should be paid.

Mr. Wisnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has had the views of Lord Denning on the convictions of those found guilty of the Birmingham pub bombings brought to his attention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have considered a number of views, from Lord Denning and others, on the convictions of those found guilty of the Birmingham pub bombings. My right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) referred this case to the Court of Appeal on 20 January 1987 and after a thorough investigation by the Devon and Cornwall police the court heard the case in November and December 1987. In its judgment, announced in January 1988, the Court concluded that it had no doubt that the convictions were safe and satisfactory.

I am always ready to consider new evidence or other information which has not been before the courts and which appears to cast doubt on the safety of the conviction.

Computer Hacking

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking to make hacking, including the laying of viruses, a criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have received a report from the Law Commission (Law Commission 186, Cm 819) recommending new criminal offences of unauthorised access to a computer and unauthorised modification of computer material. The Law Commission, the Home Office and the Department of Trade and Industry have all received various representations urging legislation on these lines. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has indicated that he is inclined to accept the Law Commission's recommendations, subject to comments from interested parties upon them.

Jamie Lloyd Stewart

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report on the death in custody of Jamie Lloyd Stewart who died at Holloway police station on 4 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The circumstances of Mr. Stewart's death are being investigated by the Metropolitan police under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority. An inquest has been opened and adjourned until January 1990. The case is therefore sub judice.

Shooting Clubs

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce regulations prohibiting the use in shooting clubs of targets depicting human beings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister of State gave him on 26 October at column 1031. I recognise that some targets used in non-international disciplines may be regarded as being in poor taste, but I am not aware of any risk to public safety arising from their use. We have no plans, therefore, to prohibit their use.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce regulations to provide for vetting by the police of persons seeking temporary membership of shooting clubs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no statutory power under the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1988 to introduce regulations for this purpose. As my hon. Friend the Minister of State informed my hon. Friend on 26 October at column 1031 we are looking most closely at the issue of temporary membership of gun clubs to see whether further controls are necessary.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police vehicles were used during the current ambulance dispute in place of London ambulance service vehicles.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that, between 7 am on Monday 23 October and 9 pm on Tuesday 24 October, 104 Metropolitan police vehicles were used to provide emergency ambulance cover.

Serious Crime Squad (West Midlands)

Mr. Chris Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the west midlands as to how many officers were serving with the serious crime squad at the time it was disbanded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 18 October 1989, c. 125]: I greatly regret that the figure of 29 quoted therein is incorrect. The correct figure is 25.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Lord President of the Council what information he has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cash Limits

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any changes to announce to the cash and gross running costs limits for the Privy Council Office for 1989-90.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XX vote 10 will be increased by £290,000 from £1,242,000 to £1,532,000. The Privy Council Office running cost limit will be increased by £290,000 from £1,262,000 to £1,552,000. This increase reflects additional expenditure being incurred by the Privy Council Office in respect of recommended security improvements and the acquisition of additional staff following changes in ministerial responsibilities. This increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Television

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Lord President of the Council what arrangements are being made for Members to have access to the signal from the television cameras in the Chamber before the end of Session.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Select Committee on televising have agreed that the "clean feed" from the Chamber, as it will be provided to the broadcasters after the State Opening, will be shown on two television sets in the Voting Lobbies between 2.30 and 10 pm on Mondays to Thursdays with effect from 1 November. Arrangements are also being made through the usual channels for access to taped material covering proceedings between 2.30 and 5.30 pm.

DEFENCE

Tours of Duty

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, for the latest year for which records exist and for the preceding three years, what was the average length of involuntarily separated or unaccompanied tours of duty for service personnel in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force, (c) the Royal Navy, (d) the Royal Marines and (e) the women's services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Statistics on the average lengths of involuntarily unaccompanied tours of duty are not maintained. The practice in the Army and the Royal Air Force is that postings where personnel are required to serve unaccompanied should not normally exceed six months. For the Royal Navy and the Royal Marines, unaccompanied tours arise mainly when personnel are at sea. The average length of sea postings is about two years, although not all that time will be spent away from home.

Medical Services

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) consultant radiologists and (b) consultant paediatricians there are in each of the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of service and civilian consultant radiologists and paediatricians in each of the three services, as at 30 September 1989, are as follows:

	Consultant radiologists	Consultant paediatricians
Royal Navy	3	1
Army	5	5
Royal Air Force	[1]3	1
TOTALS	[1]11	7

[1] Plus 1 part time.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average number of patients per military doctor (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in the British Army of the Rhine and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested.

Cambodian Guerrillas

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of British armed forces are engaged in training Cambodian guerrillas; where they are based; what is their rank; when the programme commenced; and what has been the cost to public funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to provide information of this nature.

EC Components Tariff

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards a European Community tariff on defence parts and components; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Commission last year published a proposal concerning the suspension of import duties on certain weapons and military equipment (European Community Document No. 8461/88, COM(88) 502). We are currently discussing this proposal with the Commission and with NATO Allies. An explanatory memorandum was submitted to the House on 2 December 1988.

Anti-submarine Weapons

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the development of a low-cost submarine weapon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Since existing anti-submarine weapons have an effective life extending into the next century, and since we have yet to be convinced that an effective low-cost anti-submarine weapon could be produced, we currently have no plans to develop such a weapon. We are, of course, keeping developments in this area under review.

Air-to-air Missiles

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the development of the advanced short-range air-to-air missile in the light of the decision of West Germany on 13 July to withdraw from the programme to develop it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The RAF has a requirement for an advanced short range air-to-air missile, and the United Kingdom remains committed to the four power family of weapons arrangements for the next generation of air-to-air missiles. Following the German withdrawal, we are considering with Norway and Canada revised proposals from the prime contractor, British Aerospace, for the next stage of the advanced short range air-to-air missile programme.

Anti-tank Ammunition

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the development of the Merlin anti-tank ammunition by British Aerospace; and what financial support has been given by his Department in every year since the project commenced.

Mr. Alan Clark: The MOD has, at present, no formal requirement for the Merlin anti-tank ammunition. It remains our policy to encourage United Kingdom companies to undertake private venture developments which may have relevance to our future requirements, and we are continuing to take a close interest in the completion of the development of Merlin. The MOD contributed £3·4 million in 1983-84 and £2·2 million in 1984-85 by way of financial support towards the feasibility and systems definition phases of the British Aerospace work.

NATO Air Base, Italy

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the funding of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation air base at Crotore, Italy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO agreed last year to fund the construction of a new air base at Crotone, Italy, from the Alliance infrastructure budget. The United Kingdom fully supports this decision.

Modular Stand-off Weapon Programme

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the considerations which led to the withdrawal by the United Kingdom from the modular stand-off weapon programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United States and the United Kingdom jointly withdrew from this programme because the differing national requirements were considered to be too difficult to reconcile even within a modular programme. The United States wanted a short-range lightweight weapon for use primarily on F16 aircraft; we wanted a heavier longer-range weapon for use on Tornado.

Type 2057 Sonar

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the results of the project definition studies for the type 2057 passive towed array sonar.

Mr. Neubert: Contracts for the competitive Sonar 2057 project definition phase have been let and results are expected by the end of 1990.

Cavalry Officers

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the importance of equestrian skills for cavalry officers in units which do not have a mounted ceremonial role; and if he will list those units which have such a role.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Cavalry officers in regiments which do not have a ceremonial role are not required to ride, although they are encouraged to do so. The Household Cavalry Mounted Regiment and The King's Troop Royal Horse Artillery have mounted ceremonial roles.

Sea Rescue Services

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to have overnight at RAF Chivenor a helicopter such as the Sea King with night radar capacity; and if he will list the number of incidents resulting in death by drowning off the north Devon coast during the current year to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have no plans to alter the present arrangements for the provision of search and rescue cover at RAF Chivenor. I understand that three people have died through drowning off the north Devon coast this year.

Arms Treaties

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, during his discussions with United States Defence Secretary Cheney on 25 October in London, he raised the issues of (a) the implications for United Kingdom and United States commitments to article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty of new nuclear weapons systems deployments and (b) the status of the Fylingdales facility in Yorkshire in regard to the provisions of the anti-ballistic missile treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend discussed a range of matters of mutual interest when he met the United States Defence Secretary on 25 October, but it is not our practice to reveal the details of confidential bilateral discussions of this kind.

Procurement

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on procurement from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) European and (c) United States-owned defence industries.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on procurement from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) European and (c) United States-owned defence industries.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on procurement from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) European and (c) United States-owned defence industries.

Mr. Neubert [pursuant to the reply, 7 February 1989, col. 666]: The following should have appeared in the Official Report:

Whilst we have regard for other factors including the location of the manufacturer and the ownership of suppliers, our prime consideration is to obtain the best value for money.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

European Agriculture Council

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Agriculture Council meeting of Ministers on 23-24 October in Luxembourg.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 25 October 1989.

Organic Farming

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to evaluate the applicability to the United Kingdom of organic farming methods recommended in the report on alternative agriculture, released by the United States National Research Council in September.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 18 October 1989 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) at column 132 which outlined ways in which the Government are encouraging British farmers to respond to demand for organic produce. My Department will also consider the recent American report.

Less Favoured Areas

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the United Kingdom Government's response to the European Commission's proposal to limit the amount of total compensatory payment to individual farm holdings in lesss favoured areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Government remain strongly opposed to the principle of limits based on farm size. Such limits are particularly difficult to justify in less favoured areas, since there is no correlation between the size of a farm and the degree of severity of the permanent natural handicap. I have left the Agriculture Council in no doubt as to the strength of my views on the Commission's current proposals for hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Grant Claims

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what requirements are stipulated by his Department in respect of the submission of receipts and invoices accompanying claims for payment under agricultural grant schemes operated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The principal farm capital grant schemes currently operated by my Department are the farm and conservation grant scheme and the farm diversification grant scheme. For both, claims for grant must be supported by appropriate documentation which normally consists of a properly receipted invoice. We reserve the right, however, to seek additional information where this is thought necessary to ensure that public money is being properly disbursed.

Food Safety Directorate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many staff will be employed in his food safety directorate; how many of these will be food inspectors; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement about the remit of his food safety directorate;

(3) whether he intends to consult outside organisations on the establishment of a food safety directorate; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether he will create any new posts in setting up his food safety directorate; and if he will make a statement;

(5) whom he will appoint as the director of his food safety directorate.

Mr. Gummer: I shall make a further announcement shortly.

Food Imports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries from which the United Kingdom imports (a) coffee, (b) sugar, (c) bananas, (d) orange juice concentrate, and (e) African palm oil; and if he will give the amounts of each product imported in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The quantities of each product imported are given in the following table:

Tonnes (except where shown)

	1984	1985	1986	1987	[1]1988
Coffee	117,239	110,998	108,475	120,203	121,303
Sugar	1,410,291	1,330,614	1,309,997	1,254,863	1,290,446
Bananas	309,445	323,728	343,107	359,569	388,154
Orange juice concentrate[2]	102,510	102,342	125,095	139,487	137,007
African palm oil	162,608	217,823	276,730	288,935	286,443

Details from Overseas Trade Statistics.

Details of the countries from which the United Kingdom imports these commodities are in a table which I will be depositing in the Library of the House as soon as it is available.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any meat for human consumption is currently being imported from the United States of America.

Mr. Curry: Imports of beef for human consumption from the United States of America since January 1989 have been as follows:

	Tonnes
January	147
February	46
March	59
April	0
May	12
June	6
July	6
August	13

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the report on the work in 1988 of his advisory committee on pesticides.

Mr. Maclean: The 1988 report of the advisory committee on pesticides is expected to be published in the first quarter of 1990.

Potato Planting

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safeguards there are to ensure that targeted potato acreage is actually planted.

Mr. Curry: The Potato Marketing Board is required, under the terms of its financial agreement with Government, to ensure that plantings by registered producers are as close as possible to the target area. It set quota area as a percentage of producers' basic area accordingly, and producers who underplant are penalised in subsequent years because their basic area is reduced.

Levy Schemes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names of all the levy schemes which he operates and for each one the industry it is imposed upon, and the use to which the money levied is put and the amount collected for which most recent figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 24 October 1989]: The list includes levy schemes for which I have statutory authority excluding marketing board levies. The organisation originating or operating these schemes is included in the list as I do not have responsibility for operating every scheme.

Organisation	Levy	Industry	Purpose	Amount collected	Period
European Community	Milk Co-responsibility Levy (EC)	Milk Producers	80 per cent. likely to go to market support measures, rest on promotion of dairy products and improvement of milk hygiene	£52·8 million	1988-89
European Community	Milk Supplementary Levy (EC)	Milk Producers	Levied on over-quota milk production proceeds used to finance disposal of EC dairy surplus	£15·6 million	1988-89
European Community	Cereals Co-responsibility Levy	Cereals Industry	Contributes to the costs involved in disposing of surplus production	£50·8 million	1988
European Community	Sugar Production Levies	Sugar Processors who pass back 60 per cent. to beet growers	Used to offset cost of export refunds on quota sugar	£31·65 million	1988-89
European Community	Storage Levy	First marketing of sugar by producers and merchants	Used to offset costs of storage refund scheme	£26·37 million	1988-89
MAFF	Sugar Beet (Research and Education) Fund	Growers and Processors of Home Grown Sugar Beet	Research and Education in matters affecting the growing of home grown sugar beet	£1·7 million	1987-88
Meat and Livestock Commission	Meat and Livestock Commission Levy General levy 3 species promotion levies on beef, sheep and pork	Slaughters and exporters of live animals. Slaughters recover ½ general levy and all promotion levy from seller	General activities on livestock, meat and meat production	£17·7 million	1987-88
Meat and Livestock Commission	Pig Industry Levy Scheme[1]	Pig Industry	Eradication of Aujeszky's disease	£4·3 million	1988-89
Home Grown Cereals Authority	Home Grown Cereals Authority Levy Scheme 1987	Cereals Industry	Market information service, R & D contribution to Food From Britain and promotion of British cereal exports	£3·58 million	1988-89
Horticultural Development Council	Horticultural R & D Levy	Horticulture Industry	To finance R & D levy is at the rate of ½ per cent. on sales	£1 million
Apple and Pear Development Council	This body is being wound up; a successor body which will operate under new rules is planned
Sea Fish Industry Authority	Sea Fish Industry Authority (Levy) Regulation 1988 Confirmatory Order 1989	Sea Fish Industry	Promotion of the efficiency of sea fish industry	£3·4 million	1988-89
MAFF Veterinary Medicines Directorate	Annual Fees for product licences for Animal Medicines	Animal Health Industry	Contributes to the cost of the licensing system for animal medicines	£442,000	1988-89
MAFF	Pesticides Levy Scheme	Pesticides Industry	Monitoring use and residues in foodstuffs, human tissues and the environment	£2·45 million	Beginning of 1989
International Cocoa Agreement	$30 per tonne	Cocoa importers	Finance price stabilising measures	$1·8 million	1 October 1988 to 30 September 1989

[1] Levy suspended on 2 October 1989.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the member states of the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation which still allow monofilament drift net fishing in their waters, and those which do not, indicating in each of the latter cases, the date on which such nets were banned and the reasons given for the ban.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 27 October 1989]: We understand that of the nine contracting parties to the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation, drift netting for salmon takes place in the USSR, Finland, the European Community and Greenland (which is represented in the organisation by Denmark as a separate contracting party for this purpose). The remaining contracting parties (Canada, USA, Iceland, Sweden and Norway) have either not used drift nets or have ceased to do so. Drift nets can be made of monofilament, multi-monofilament, or multi-filament material; we do not have definite information as to which of these types of net are used in each of the contracting parties specified although I understand that monofilament netting is in use in Greenland as well as in parts of the European Community. NASCO has made no recommendations on drift netting for salmon. We have no comprehensive records of the dates when action was taken by some contracting parties or of the reasons advanced at the time. Both are clearly matters for the contracting parties themselves.

Food Irradiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 27 June, Official Report, column 443, how he intends to consult the public on his proposals to lift the ban on food irradiation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I intend that there will be ample opportunity for all those matters affected by proposed regulations on food. Under the proposals shoppers would of course be able to make up their minds on irradiation as it is intended that food which has been irradiated will be clearly labelled.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Personal Pensions

Mrs Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have taken out personal pension schemes; what is the estimated cost to the national insurance fund for 1989-90 and 1990-91; and how much of this cost is accounted for by the 2 per cent. inducement under section 1 of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mrs Gillian Shephard: A total of 3·5 million people have so far applied for an appropriate personal pension. The most recent estimate of the revenue forgone by the national insurance fund in respect of minimum contribution to personal pension schemes is £2,580 million in 1989-90 and £2,020 million in 1990-91. Of these amounts £720 million and £520 million respectively relate to the cost of the incentive.

Industrial Injury and Disease

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publicise fully in the media and by leaflets section 22 of the Social Security Act 1989 to avoid unnecessary hardship to claimants awaiting compensation for industrial injury or disease.

Mr. Scott: A fully comprehensive guide to recovery from compensation awards of amounts equivalent to benefit will be available early next year. It is intended for both those paying compensation and solicitors and others advising victims. Officials are in close touch with the insurance industry, The Law Society, The Law Society of Scotland and the TUC amongst others on both the content and distribution of the guide to ensure maximum coverage. A separate leaflet will be available in local offices to explain the scheme to claimants.

National Insurance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information his Department has with regard to problems arising on benefit claims due to failure to pay or late payment of national insurance contributions by employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No records are kept of the number of persons whose employers have either failed to pay contributions or have paid them late. However, we have an established procedure which is used where benefit is claimed and the non-payment or late payment of contributions is caused through no fault of an employee. In such cases the employee's correct contribution position is urgently established and his record is credited with the relevant contributions, which in turn allows benefit to be paid. These contributions are treated as paid on time, and this ensures that individual benefit rights are not affected.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of crisis loans are estimated to be paid out by his Department's officials to bridge the periods when claimants are left without money after transferring from sickness benefit to unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement about the effect of benefits paid in arrears on crisis funds.

Mr. Scott: I regret that information relating to the situation described is not available. However £5 million, representing 3·5 per cent. of the loans budget was paid in 1988-89 in circumstances where payment of benefit in arrears was a factor.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will review the arrangements which leave claimants transferring from unemployment benefit to sickness benefit without any money for two weeks.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Unemployment benefit is paid fortnightly in arrears, and sickness benefit is paid weekly in arrears. There should therefore be no gap in payment when transferring from unemployment to sickness benefit.

Travel Warrants

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will review the regulations preventing his Department's officials from meeting the cost of travel warrants of claimants travelling for job interviews outside the area where they reside.

Mr. Scott: No. Where employers do not provide for such costs, the travel-to-interview scheme administered by the employment service is available. This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

War Widows

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each of the years 1973, 1976, 1979, 1982, 1985 and 1988 the number of women designated as war widows.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The numbers are as follows:

	Number
1973	96,181
1976	86,854
1979	78,621
1982	71,592
1985	64,859
1988	57,751

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers by the last serving rank, for Army equivalent, of men who died or left the services before 31 March 1973 and whose widows are at present in receipt of the state war widow's pension.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information in the form requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. There are, however, 56,176 widows currently receiving war widow's pension (at quarter ending 30 September 1989) of whom it is estimated about 1,200 are the widows of men who served in the Armed Forces on or after 31 March 1973.

Cash Limits

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether there have been any changes to the cash limits or running costs limits of his Department for 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit for class XV vote 6 (housing benefit administration) will be increased by £3,000,000 from £128,904,000 to £131,904,000. The revision provides for payments to local authorities towards the costs incurred in preparing to implement changes to the housing benefit scheme and the community charge rebate scheme which provides for new premiums for poorer pensioners, more generous rules for certain 16 and 17-year-old claimants and the inclusion of hostel dwellers in the housing benefit scheme.

The cash limit for class XV vote 7 (administration and miscellaneous services) will be increased by £13,770,000 from £1,581,348,000 to £1,595,118,000. The revision takes account of the abolition of the earnings rule and national insurance contribution changes announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement, namely £16,787,000, the ministerial decision to provide extra help to poorer pensioners, £7,800,000, an increase in the grant to the independent living fund who make payments to very severely disabled persons, £6,000,000, and a reassessment of requirements resulting from the division of the Departments of Social Security and of Health, £59,000. These additional requirements are partially offset by an increase in receipts of £16,876,000 to the vote. The balance of the increase apart from the £59,000 transferred from class XIV vote 3, will be charged to the Reserve and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure. As a result the running cost limit of the Department of Social Security is increased by £24,646,000 from £1,711,885,000 to £1,736,531,000.

Child Benefit

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is (a) the number of eligible claimants for child benefit in Wales and (b) the total child benefit paid in Wales for each of the last five years in (i) cash prices and (ii) constant prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figure is for December 1988, when about 348,000 claimants in Wales were receiving child benefit in respect of some 623,000 children. The estimated proportion of child benefit expenditure for Wales in each year from 1984-85 was:

	Cash prices	1988-89 prices
1984-85	220·5	271·1
1985-86	230·6	268·8
1986-87	234·3	264·6
1987-88	238·3	255·7
1988-89	234·0	234·0

Computer Programme (Norcoss)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security from how many companies his Department intends inviting bids for the running of its ACC programme at Norcoss, Blackpool.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The arrangements for the running of the Department's area computer centre at Norcross will be announced in due course.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Stillborn Children

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will arrange for the regulations existing in England regarding the registration of stillborn children to be applied to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Since May last, the same arrangements as those existing in England in relation to still-birth registration have applied in Northern Ireland.

Hospital Cleaning

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the chairman of each area health and social services board as to (a) the number of staff in each board area who will be redundant after competitive tendering for hospital cleaning services has been completed, (b) the estimated number of man hours required in each area board to ensure high standards of cleaning following competitive tendering contracts for hospital cleaning, and (c) the estimated percentage of hospital cleaning which will be carried out by the private sector following acceptance of current tenders by each board stating the figures for each board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No. The health and social services board will not be in a position to provide information on the implications for staff or the mix of public and private sector contracts for hospital cleaning services until after the competitive tendering exercise has been completed. No prior estimate is made of man hours required.

National Health Service (Competitive Tendering)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the progress of his plans to encourage competitive tendering in the National Health Service in Northern Ireland stating for each health and social services board in Northern Ireland the services which have been contracted out, together with the amounts of the tenders submitted and the savings to be achieved in each case; and if he will list the services which were tendered for by in-house teams and the outcome of such bids, together with reasons given by boards for accepting or rejecting such bids.

Mr. Needham: To date 12 per cent., by value, of domestic, catering and laundry services have been market tested and 10 contracts have been awarded (three contracted out and seven retained in-house). A further 22 per cent., by value, of these services are out to tender.

The services contracted out are as follows:

Board and service contracted out	Amount of tender £	Net estimated savings £
Eastern Board
Domestic services—Lisburn unit of management
Lagan Valley hospital	343,000	140,000
Community facilities	41,000
Western Board
Catering services—Londonderry, Limavady and Strabane unit of management	1,881,000	1,160,000

In-house teams have tendered for 11 contracts and have been successful in seven as follows:

Catering

Omagh and Fermanagh units of management

Domestic services

Antrim hospitals
Antrim—other facilities
Ballymena hospitals
Ballymena—other facilities
Magherafelt and Cookstown hospitals
Magherafelt and Cookstown—other facilities

The identity of tenderers for particular elements of their services is essentially a matter for the boards themselves. The reasons given by boards for accepting or rejecting such bids reflect the criteria set out by the Department, which emphasised the importance of maintaining a high-quality service.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has about penalty point systems for private contractors undertaking work in the National Health Service; and if he will call for a report from the area boards as to their policies in this respect.

Mr. Needham: No penalty point systems are in operation in any of the contracts awarded by the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland. However, contracts do contain default clauses that enable boards to take preventive measures if the contractor fails to meet the contracted standard. Boards will be establishing formal systems to monitor contract compliance and ensure a high-quality service is provided.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will call for a report from the chairman of the Eastern health and social services board as to his board's policies for consultation with the work force about competitive tendering issues.

Mr. Needham: No. We are confident that the board has consulted with representatives of the work force, in keeping with normal practice.

Contraception

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the breakdown of the number of individuals receiving contraceptive advice and treatment (a) by contraceptive method and (b) through health and social services boards or general practitioners in Northern Ireland in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 October 1989]: The information cannot be provided in precisely the form requested. The figures available are given in the table:

Health and social services boards[1]	73,378	74,093
General practitioners[2]
Oral contraceptives	47,820	51,673
Intrauterine devices	1,919	1,928
Total	49,739	53,601
TOTAL	123,117	127,694

[1] Numbers of individuals attending for advice and treatment.

[2] Numbers of individuals for whom contraceptives prescribed.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total cost of (a) general practitioner provision for family planning services and (b) family planning clinic services through health and social service boards in Northern Ireland for (i) 1985, (ii) 1986, (iii) 1987 and (iv) 1988, respectively.

Mr. Needham (holding reply 23 October 1989): The information requested is: a. The total cost of general practitioner provision for family planning services is as follows:

Year ended	£
31 March 1985	398,190
31 March 1986	454,674
31 March 1987	511,238
31 March 1988	587,189
31 March 1989	680,216

b. The total cost of family planning services through health and social services boards in Northern Ireland is as follows:

Year ended	£
31 March 1985	480,720
31 March 1986	566,102
31 March 1987	603,078
31 March 1988	721,664
31 March 1989	770,843

Secular Education

Mr. Graham Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made since July on the development of secular education in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: None. The law requires that religious instruction is given in all grant-aided schools other than nursery schools.

Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current pupil to teacher ratio in Northern Ireland; what it was five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The 1988 pupil-teacher ratio is 18·4:1 which is the lowest on record. The comparable figures for five, 10 and 15 years ago are 18·7, 19·5 and 22·4 respectively.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is not held in this form and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, every effort is made to reply to letters from hon. Members as soon as possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Lorrain Osman

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he has received any representations from the Government of Malaysia since May concerning the case of Mr. Lorrain Osman; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what communications he has had with bodies and individuals in Hong Kong in relation to the case of Lorrain Osman, in the past 12 months; what was the substance of those communications; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what communications he has received from the Governor of Hong Kong in relation to representations on behalf of the Malaysian Government concerning the case of Lorrain Osman; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what communications his Department has had with the Government of Malaysia concerning Mr. Lorrain Osman, a remand prisoner in Pentonville prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Since this matter is currently sub judice, it would not be appropriate for us to comment.

Death Sentence (Hong Kong)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that prisoners in Hong Kong gaols in 1997 will not be made subject to the death sentence for offences committed before the transfer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Persons imprisoned in Hong Kong will, in accordance with the provisions of the joint declaration relating to the continuity of laws, remain subject to Hong Kong law. The joint declaration also provides that the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights as applied to Hong Kong shall remain in force after 1997. In this connection it is noteworthy that article 15 of the covenant prohibits the imposition of a heavier penalty than that applicable when the offence was committed.

Hong Kong

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he now proposes to enter into with the People's Republic of China in relation to his legal and treaty obligations to prisoners extradited to Hong Kong and in prison there in June 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The joint declaration makes provision for us and the Government of the People's Republic of China to ensure the continued application of international rights and obligations affecting Hong Kong. The Chinese authorities have agreed that before 1997 we should authorise Hong Kong to conclude its own extradition agreements, designed to continue in force after 30 June 1997. These agreements will contain traditional safeguards for fugitive criminals. In addition, Hong Kong's domestic law will continue to provide traditional safeguards for fugitive criminals.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific arrangements and safeguards have been agreed with the Peole's Republic of China in relation to prisoners in Hong Kong gaols at the time of the transfer of sovereignty in 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Persons in prisons will be the responsibility of the Hong Kong authorities then as they are now. The prisoners will continue to be treated in accordance with Hong Kong's own criminal laws and legal system. No specific arrangements have been agreed.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of the provision in the law of the People's Republic of China that allows any person to call for the retrial of convicted persons, he has taken or proposes to take steps to protect prisoners in Hong Kong in 1997 from the use of this law against them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Under the provisions of the joint declaration and the draft Basic Law, Hong Kong will retain its own separate criminal laws and legal system after 1997. Annex III of the Basic Law specifies six Chinese national laws which will be extended to Hong Kong after 1997. The law mentioned in the question is not one of them.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that prisoners extradited from the United Kingdom to Hong Kong and in gaol at the time of the transfer to sovereignty, will be able to leave the colony at the end of their sentence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The freedom of all persons to leave the future special administrative region, if they have valid travel documents, is established by the joint declaration. The draft basic law reflects the joint declaration in this respect.

Hong Kong (Juries)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has taken any steps to examine the possible dangers of prejudice by juries in Hong Kong against non-local nationals facing trial in the Crown colony; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We are not aware of any complaints of this nature. In practice a considerable number of jurors are themselves non-local nationals.

Punjab

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protests his Department has made about the renewal by the Indian Government of martial law in the Punjab.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. Martial law is not in force in the Punjab.

Nuclear Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received a copy of the report by the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research on the prevention of geographical proliferation of nuclear weapons; nuclear-weapon-free zones and zones of peace in the southern hemisphere.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

"Science and Global Security"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that his departmental library subscribes to the journal "Science and Global Security".

Mr. Sainsbury: We understand that the journal "Science and Global Energy" will not be available for another four weeks. Issues of new journals are considered only after publication.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, of 17 October, Official Report, column 78, he will set out the names of all United Kingdom-based non-governmental organisations which have written to his Department on the non-proliferation treaty indicating those which have expressed concern over the United Kingdom's policy for the 1990 non-proliferation treaty fourth review conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: During the last six months, the only such organisation to have written in the terms described by the hon. Member is the European proliferation information centre.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what opportunity he took at the Commonwealth summit meeting in Kuala Lumpur to raise with the representatives of Guyana the matter of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the NPT fourth review conference, to be held next August, and the possibility of Guyana joining the NPT;

(2) what opportunity he took at the Commonwealth summit meeting in Kuala Lumpur to raise with the representatives of Tanzania the matter of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the NPT fourth review conference, to be held next August, and the possibility of Tanzania joining the NPT;

(3) what opportunity he took at the Commonwealth summit meeting in Kuala Lumpur to raise with the representatives of Zambia the matter of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the NPT fourth review conference, to be held next August, and the possibility of Zambia joining the NPT;

(4) what opportunity he took at the Commonwealth summit meeting in Kuala Lumpur to raise with the representatives of Vanuatu the matter of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the NPT fourth review conference, to be held next August, and the possibility of Vanuatu joining the NPT.

Mr. Waldegrave: This subject was not discussed.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether during his recent visit to Washington DC, he raised with his American counterpart joint strategies to strengthen the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and increase membership.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. But such matters are regularly discussed bilaterally in appropriate fora, most recently in the margins of the second preparatory committee, which took place on 11-15 September.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he raised at the Commonwealth summit meeting in Kuala Lumpur the matter of the Nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the possibility of (a) Pakistan, (b) India and (c) Zimbabwe signing the treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Science and Peace

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government's policy is towards the Costa Rican resolution and proposal at the United Nations for a Government-sponsored and supported international week of science and peace each November.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no wish to obstruct the measures envisaged in the resolution concerned, but doubt their value. We do not intend to allocate to them resources better employed elsewhere.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to encourage universities and other institutions of advanced studies, scientific academies and institutes, professional associations and individuals in the scientific community to hold during the week 11 to 17 November lectures, seminars, special debates and other activities conducive to the study and dissemination of information on the links between science and technology and the maintenance of peace and security, as agreed upon in United Nations General Assembly Resolution A/RES/43/61.

Mr. Sainsbury: Initiatives of this sort at the United Nations are no substitute for the serious endeavours in which Britain plays a leading part. We therefore see no advantage in taking specific steps to encourage institutions to participate in these initiatives.

Derek Smith

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses concerning the arrest in Athens on 11 October of Derek Smith, a United Kingdom citizen, on charges of trying to sell uranium to a Greek nuclear research centre.

Mr. Sainsbury: Mr. Smith was arrested in Athens on 10 October 1989. He was subsequently charged with possession of radioactive material and smuggling and is remanded in custody. The case is under investigation by the Greek authorities. Mr. Smith is legally represented. Consular access has been granted.

General Affairs Council

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed at the Meeting of European Community Foreign Ministers on 14 and 15 October; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting.

Mr. Maude: There were informal discussions on a range of Community and European political co-operation issues, including eastern Europe.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he took to ensure the factual accuracy of information released by the United Kingdom embassy in Oslo in regard to the proposals to examine the off-shore sub-seabed disposal of radioactive wastes off Sellafield and Dounreay.

Mr. Waldegrave: Her Majesty's embassy in Oslo was fully briefed on this matter by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department of the Environment.

Global Resource Information Database

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the United Kingdom has given or offered towards the establishment by the United Nations of a global resource information database.

Mr. Sainsbury: The global resource information database is a powerful computer-based system designed to present a variety of natural resources information in a way that planners can easily use. It is based in Switzerland and funded by the United Nations environmental programme (UNEP). Britain has not only supported UNEP from its inception under the usual UN budgetary formula, but this year made a substantial voluntary donation which more than doubled our contribution to £3 million.

Hong Kong Register of Shipping

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the transitional arrangements for shipping on the Hong Kong register.

Mr. Maude: Section VIII of annex I to the Sino-British joint declaration provides for the HKSAR to maintain Hong Kong's previous systems of shipping management and regulation and to continue to maintain a shipping register. Work is well advanced on the introduction of the new Hong Kong register which will remain in place after 1997. On its introduction, as a transitional arrangement, vessels then registered in Hong Kong will have the right to transfer to the new register.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the sale of Government houses in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Executive Council decided on 15 August 1989 to sell a number of its 164 houses and flats because it wanted to encourage owner occupation, and because shortage of manpower made maintenance of Government houses difficult. The proceeds of the sales would be used to help finance new projects designed to reduce Stanley's housing shortage.

Offers to purchase these houses were made to 59 sitting tenants on 15 September.

A general election was held in the Falklands on 11 October and the newly-elected councillors are currently reviewing FIG's housing policy including the disposal programme.

Cambodia

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support the proposal for an international mission to visit Cambodia to verify the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our objective remains a comprehensive political settlement in Cambodia. An effective international control mechanism to verify Vietnamese troop withdrawal would be an important element of such a settlement.

Leonid Stonov

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Leonid Stonov of Moscow.

Mr. Waldegrave: Leonid Stonov is among those cases on which we press the Soviet authorities. Most recently my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised this case among others with Mr. Shevardnadze in New York on 29 September. We will not let up until Leonid Stonov is given permission to leave the USSR.

Kelman Family

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Boris and Alla Kelman and their sons Efim and Maxim of Leningrad.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have raised this case frequently with the Soviet authorities, most recently when my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Mr. Shevardnadze in New York on 29 September. We understand that Boris Kelman's secrecy restrictions have now been removed and the family should be free to emigrate. We will maintain our pressure until they actually leave the USSR.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the management of hazardous, toxic and industrial wastes in Gibraltar has been in full compliance with the 1980 Athens protocol to the Barcelona convention for the protection of the Mediterranean.

Mr. Maude: The information required is not immediately available. A reply to the hon. Member's question will be sent to him in due course.

Iraq (Aircraft Sales)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his colleagues in the European Community over the sale of jet aircraft to Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. We keep in close contact with our European partners over the situation in the Gulf. But policies on defence sales are a matter for the judgment of individual Governments.

Kurds

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports Her Majesty's Government have received on the conference on Kurdish culture held in Paris on 14 and 15 October; and if he will make a statement on recognition of Kurdish national claims.

Mr. Maude: We have received a number of reports about this conference and the attitude towards it of the Turkish and Iraqi Governments. The Government do not recognise any claim to an independent Kurdish state, although we acknowledge the Kurds' cultural identity.

Defence and Disarmament Talks

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the non-governmental organisations present at the meeting on defence and disarmament developments held at the Foreign Office on 18 October; and if he will set out the main areas of non-governmental organisation concerns and disagreements with his Department's policies.

Mr. Waldegrave: I held a meeting with non-governmental organisations interested in arms control and disarmament issues on 18 October. The major topics discussed at the meeting, held under Chatham house rules, were nuclear non-proliferation, START, the partial test ban treaty, conventional arms control, chemical weapons, international arms transfers, and East-West relations.

The Council for Education in World Citizenship, Church of England Board for Social Responsibility, the European Atlantic movement, the National Peace Council, Peace Through NATO, Quaker Peace and Service, Scientists Against Nuclear Arms, the United Nations Association, Verification Technology Information Centre, the Medical Campaign Against Nuclear Weapons, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, World Disarmament Campaign, International Peace Bureau, European Proliferation Information Centre, British Atlantic Committee, British Council of Churches, Campaign Against the Arms Trade, Centre for International Peace Building Studies, Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, Coalition for Peace Through Security, Committee for International Justice and Peace, Council for Arms Control, Families for Defence, Greenpeace International, British Pugwash Group, Programme for Promoting Nuclear Non Proliferation Safer World Project, Institute for European Defence and Security Studies.

Regular bi-annual meetings between Foreign Office Ministers and non-governmental organisations on arms control and disarmament issues began in 1983 and are continuing.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information was given to the group of non-governmental organisations specialising in defence and disarmament issues in the meeting held on 18 October at the Foreign Office on the subjects of (a) Her Majesty's Government's policies and initiatives for the fourth review conference of the 1970 nuclear non-proliferation treaty, and (b) the forthcoming amendment conference for the 1963 partial test ban treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: There was a general discussion of both subjects at the meeting which was one of a regular series held under Chatham house rules.

Export Controls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting in Paris on 25 October of the Co-ordinating Committee on Multilateral Export Controls.

Mr. Maude: The co-ordinating committee (COCOM) held its annual high level meeting in Paris on 25 and 26 October. The meeting reviewed progress in COCOM's work and reached agreement on a work programme for the coming year.

Against the background of current international and industrial developments, partners recognised the need to maintain the process of streamlining COCOM controls whilst protecting their fundamental strategic security interests. The next high level meeting will be held in 1990.

British Citizens (Detention Overseas)

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are in detention overseas; how many of these are on drugs charges; what were the comparable figures last year; what action Her Majesty's Government is taking on this problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: A total of 1,318 British citizens were in detention overseas on 30 June 1989, the latest complete figures available; 592 (45 per cent.) were on drugs charges. On 30 June 1988 the figures were 1,175 with 521 (44 per cent.) on drugs charges. Penalties for drug trafficking are becoming more severe—a number of countries now impose the death penalty. We have already taken measures to draw attention to the dangers of carrying and using drugs overseas in consular advice leaflets issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Short films have been distributed to television stations, tour operators and other outlets, each carrying a consular message. The drugs film has been widely broadcast. In addition drugs warnings are given in pamphlets issued with all passports and British visitors passports. The Department has engaged a firm of consultants to advise on carrying forward our consular information campaign, including the drug message. We continue to seize every opportunity to obtain free publicity for the dangers of carrying and using drugs abroad.

Cash Limits

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he proposes to make any changes to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic wing cash limits and running costs limit for 1989-90.

Mr. Sainsbury: The cash limit and running costs limit for class II, vote 1 (overseas representation) will be reduced by £85,000. The cash limit will be reduced from £453,855,000 to £453,770,000 and the Department's running costs limit will be reduced from £434,606,000 to £434,521,000. These reductions reflect a transfer of FCO payroll costs to Her Majesty's Treasury.

The cash limit for class II, vote 2, (other external relations) will be decreased by £500,000 from £171,998,000 to £171,499,000 which also reflects a token increase in provision of £1,000. The token supplementary allows for the transfer of savings to the Overseas Development Administration to finance aid to Poland, partly offset by an increase to finance the United Kingdom's assistance to Colombia in the fight against drugs.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has happened to the 58·9 kg. of ivory tusks seized by the Hong Kong authorities as detailed in his reply of 27 July, Official Report, column 861, and what information he has on the second case referred to therein.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 18 October 1989]: The 58·9 kg. of ivory tusks were confiscated and retained in safe custody by the Agriculture and Fisheries Department, the CITES management authority in Hong Kong. In the second case, in accordance with legal advice, no prosecution was initiated, but the owner voluntarily surrendered the 15 kg. into the custody of the Agriculture and Fisheries Department.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Servants (Overseas Service)

51. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants are currently serving overseas; in what categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: At 1 April 1989 there were some 6,200 civil servants serving overseas, of whom about 2,700 were members of Her Majesty's diplomatic service. Additionally, there were some 700 contract technical co-operation officers employed by the Overseas Development Administration.

CIVIL SERVICE

Cash Limits

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if there are any proposals to change the 1989-90 cash limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) will be increased by £1,370,000 from £33,819,000 to £35,189,000. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The increase is required to cover the additional cost of making physical security improvements to the Downing street complex and other buildings; the cost of further refurbishment and maintenance in 10 Downing street (this cost is partially offset by appropriations in aid from the Property Services Agency); the cost of expanding the Office of the Parliamentary Counsel as recommended in Sir Robert Andrew's review of the Government legal services; and the initial cost of improving the accommodation at the Civil Service college, Sunningdale park. The supplementary estimate also includes a transfer of provision between the Central Office of Information and the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service to reflect the transfer of responsibility for the information officers management unit to the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service along with an increase in provision to cover the cost of expanding the unit. In addition the supplementary estimate takes account of a reduction in provision as a result of transferring responsibility for conducting language allowance examinations to the Home Office and a reclassification of certain receipts.

Some of the increases have a consequent effect on the Department's running costs limit which will increase by £898,000 from £30,350,000 to £31,248,000.

Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee

76. Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service which reports of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee, relating to the Civil Service, have been the subject of a Government response during the current session; and what further responses to such reports he expects will be published in the near future.

Mr. Luce: The Government have made one such reply relating to the "Next Steps" initiative, published today (Cm. 841). The reply reports good progress in implementing "Next Steps". A total of ten agencies have been established and some 40 further activities have been announced by Departments as candidates for agency status, with more to come. I am grateful to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee for the positive and helpful interest which it has taken in this most important initiative.

SCOTLAND

Rents into Mortgages Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any information of the number of tenants who may wish to participate in his rents into mortages scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since my announcement of the outline of the scheme earlier this year, there have been several hundred inquiries from people interested in purchasing under the scheme. We expect up to 5,000 participants during the three-year pilot scheme announced today.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the operation of his proposed rents into mortgages scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland today announced the issue by Scottish Homes of an explanatory leaflet which gives details of the rents to mortgages scheme and advises tenants how to apply. Copies of this leaflet have been placed in the Libraries of the House of Lords and of the House of Commons.

Factory Accommodation

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance the Government propose to give in order to ease the demand for affordable factory accommodation in the Borders region in the light of the decision by the Scottish Development Agency that it could not develop prize sites due to a shortage of finances.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Development Agency has not decided to curtail its involvement in the development of factory sites in Borders region. The agency is actively involved in targeting its resources to meet the requirements of industry in the area. This year, the agency has completed a 12,000 square foot block at Tweedbank industrial estate near Galashiels at a cost of £250,000. A further block of similar size is under construction and the agency has plans to develop another 15,500 sq ft of accommodation on this site. Other developments for specific companies are underway and the agency, in partnership with the regional council, is committed to considering the potential for developing a number of sites within Borders region.

Protected Birds

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state for each of the last five years, and for 1989 to date (a) the number and locations of special protection areas designated under European Community directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds and (b) the amount of public money in constant 1989 prices spent in each of the last five years on meeting the United Kingdom's responsibilities and obligations in Scotland under that directive; and if he will make a statement on the further implementation of the directive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following special protection areas in Scotland have been designated since 1984:

Site	District	Date designated
Priest Island (Summer Isles)	Ross and Cromarty	1 October 1986
Loch of Skene	Gordon	1 October 1986
Loch Eye	Ross and Cromarty	1 October 1986
Gruinart Flats	Argyll and Bute	14 July 1988
Eilean Na Muice Duibhe (Duich Moss)	Argyll and Bute	14 July 1988
Bridgend Flats	Argyll and Bute	14 July 1988
Laggan Peninsula	Argyll and Bute	14 July 1988
Gladhouse Reservoir	Midlothian	14 July 1988
Din Moss—Hoselaw Loch	Roxburgh	14 July 1988

The information sought in part (b) of the question is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The Government hope to be able to announce further designations soon.

Listed Buildings (Orkney)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the principal inspector of historic buildings last visited Orkney to view listed buildings in the islands area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 14 and 15 August 1989.

Contraception

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the breakdown of numbers of individuals receiving contraceptive advice and treatment by (a) contraceptive method and (b) source of treatment, clinic or general practitioner, in Scotland for the years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is as follows:

Family planning (clinic services) [1] [2]
People attending	126,955	117,118
Contraceptive method chosen
Oral contraceptive	68,222	64,342
IUD	16,099	14,268
Cap/diaphragm	8,911	7,597
Condom	15,622	13,077
Other/not known/not applicable	11,755	11,458
None	6,346	6,376
Family planning (domiciliary) services
Women seen	2,994	2,651
General practitioner contraceptive services (as at 31 December)
Women registered with a GP for ordinary contraceptive services or IUD fitting[3]	272,598	276,232

[1] Includes all clinic services provided including hospital, and including any provided on an agency basis. Excludes any non-clinic services which might be given to hospital inpatients or day patients.

[2] Excludes data from 1 December 1987 for Fife Health Board where the relevant information is not available.

[3] Excludes temporary residents.

Family Planning

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cost for 1987 and 1988 in Scotland of (a) general practitioner provision for National Health Service family planning services and (b) family planning clinic provision by area health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the years ended 31 March 1988 and 31 March 1989 the cost of fees to general medical practitioners for family planning services was £2,915,401 and £3,325,000 respectively. The level of provison of family planning clinics (and the cost of this provision) is a matter for individual health boards to determine within the resources available to them. Information about expenditure by boards on these clinics is not held centrally.

Correspondence

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how quickly his Department aims to reply to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department aims to reply as soon as possible to all correspondence from hon. Members and others.

Regional Aid

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give (a) the number of applications for regional selective assistance received between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Lang: The figures requested for regional selective assistance are as follows:

	Number
Applications received between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989:	430
Offers made between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989:	346
Total value of these offers	£117 million

Total gross expenditure on regional selective assistance (RSA) in Scotland in 1988-89 was £38 million (equivalent to around £40 million at estimated constant 1989-90 prices). Gross provision for 1989-90 is £52 million. Planned net provision for regional selective assistance and related schemes (including regional enterprise grants) consistent with figures given in "Public Expenditure to 1991-92, A Commentary on The Scotland Programme" for each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is approximately £80 million. Actual expenditure, both this year and in these future years, will depend on the extent to which companies come forward with good projects and also on the extent to which they submit claims on existing offers. We shall continue to encourage Scottish businesses to take full advantage of the provision available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will give (a) the total number of applications for regional development grants outstanding at 31 March 1988, (b) the total number of applications processed by 30 September 1989, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash at constant prices.

Mr. Lang: The figures are for the revised regional development grant (RDG2) scheme.

	Number
Number of applications outstanding at 31 March 1988:	5,117
Number of these processed by 30 September 1989:	5,117
Total value of approvals on these applications	£189 million

Total gross expenditure on the RDG2 scheme in 1988-89 was £51 million (equivalent to around £54 million at estimated constant 1989-90 prices). Estimated gross expenditure on the RDG2 scheme in 1989-90 is expected to be around £53 million. Planned net provision for both the old and revised regional development grant schemes consistent with figures given in "Public Expenditure to 1991-92, A Commentary on The Scotland Programme" for each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is approximately £30 million.

Development Agencies

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give (a) the total income and expenditure of the Scottish Development Agency, (b) the total public expenditure contribution to the Scottish Development Agency and (c) the total expenditure and the number of staff of Locate in Scotland for each of the years 1979-80 to 1988-89 inclusive and in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Lang: The information on Scottish Development Agency income and expenditure is set out in the table.

	Cash	1988-89 prices	Cash	1988-89 prices	Cash	1988-89 prices
1979-80	80·7	151·6	15·8	29·7	65·0	122·1
1980-81	97·7	154·8	17·8	28·2	79·9	126·6
1981-82	97·6	140·9	21·4	30·9	76·2	110·0
1982-83	122·7	165·4	21·8	29·4	100·9	136·0
1983-84	115·9	149·4	27·4	35·3	88·5	114·0
1984-85	117·8	144·7	38·7	47·5	79·0	97·0
1985-86	131·1	152·6	36·5	42·5	94·6	110·1
1986-87	130·9	147·4	41·7	47·0	89·2	100·5
1987-88	135·4	145·2	41·5	44·5	93·9	100·7
1988-89	142·7	142·7	51·6	51·6	91·1	91·1

The agency's outturn of expenditure (as distinct from budgeted provision) is based on the net presentation employed in public expenditure White Papers, which excludes the agency's expenditure of income received on its investment function. Such income has been more substantial in recent years.

I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible in response to his questions about expenditure by Locate in Scotland and its staff numbers.

Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give (a) the total number of applications received for investment grants and innovation grants from 1 April 1988 to 30 September 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash at constant prices.

Mr. Lang: The figures requested for investment grants and innovation grants, within the regional enterprise grant scheme, are as follows:

	Number
Number of applications received between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989	797
Number of offers made between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989	445
Total value of these offers	£4 million

Total gross expenditure on regional enterprise grants in 1988-89 was £282,000 (equivalent to around £300,000 at estimated constant 1988-89 prices). Gross provision for 1989-90 is £6 million although we do not expect this to be fully taken up. Planned net provision for regional selective assistance and related schemes (including regional enterprise grants) consistent with figures given in "Public Expenditure to 1991-92, A Commentary on The Scotland Programme" for each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 is approximately £80 million.

Hospitals (Self-governing Status)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the timetable for implementing his plans for self-governing status; and if he has a particular date by which expressions of interest have to be registered.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1989]: If the hon. Gentleman studies the White Paper he will find that on page 79 we indicated that we aim to establish at least two National Health Service trusts in Scotland by 1992. No deadline has been set for the receipt of expressions of interest in self-governing status.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to the implementation of the recommendations of the Nature Conservancy Council's report of August on the genetic impact of farmed Atlantic salmon on wild salmon stocks.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 27 October 1989]: The Nature Conservancy Council's report is a valuable contribution to the increasing body of work on the genetics of farmed and wild salmon.

DAFS fisheries scientists are already studying various aspects of the genetic relationships in farmed and wild salmon populations in Scotland. Scottish fisheries research report No. 42, "Genetic Protein Variation in Farmed Atlantic Salmon in Scotland: Comparison of Farmed Strains with their Wild Source of Populations" was published in August. Further studies on both wild and farmed populations of salmon have been completed. Others are in progress. The results of these studies will be made available as soon as possible. The suggestions in the Nature Conservancy Council report and elsewhere for future research will be taken into account in planning the Department's programme of scientific work in this field.

It is too early to predict what generally accepted scientific conclusions might emerge from current studies. At an international level, there have been discussions in both the International Council for Exploration of the Sea (ICES) and the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation (NASCO). Further discussions are planned and scientists from DAFS and MAFF will continue to contribute to these.

THE ARTS

Regional Arts

55. Mr. Cormack: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last discussed regional priorities with the chairman of the Arts Council.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) earlier today.

P. G. Wodehouse

56. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received seeking recognition of P. G. Wodehouse's contribution to the literary heritage of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: I have not received any such representations, although I am of course aware of P. G. Wodehouse's immense contribution to the literature of this country.

Museums (Grants)

58. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what grants are available to museums during the current year; and what were available five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Over the last 15 years central Government expenditure on museums and galleries has risen as follows:

1974-75, £17 million; 1979-80, £54 million; 1984-85, £98 million; 1989-90, £158 million. (All figures except 1974-75 include building expenditure.) The real terms increase since 1979-80 is 25 per cent.

British Library

59. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has had with the director of the British library with regard to its future as a copyright library.

Mr. Luce: I last met the chief executive of the British Library on 14 March 1989 to discuss the Library's strategic plan for 1989-94, "Gateway to Knowledge." I shall be meeting the British Library board on 1 November.

Museums (Fire Precautions)

60. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what fire precautions have been taken at national museums and their stores.

Mr. Luce: The reviewing and upgrading of fire precautions at national museum and gallery premises is a continuous process.

Following untying from the Property Services Agency in April 1988 this work is now being undertaken by the institutions with the advice of local fire authorities. Several institutions are working towards the introduction of new fire alarm systems. These include the Tate gallery, the National gallery and the British museum.

Greater London Arts

61. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of Greater London Arts to discuss the level of arts funding in London.

Mr. Luce: I have not done so recently.

Business Sponsorship

62. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the budget commitment for the Office of Arts and Libraries for the business sponsorship incentive scheme for the current financial year and what sum is yet to be awarded.

Mr. Luce: The budget for the business sponsorship incentive scheme for 1989-90 is £3 million to which I have allocated an extra £½ million to meet an increased demand for awards.

Commitments have now used up all the available funds and I have reluctantly suspended the scheme until April 1990 when it will be resumed.

Leicester Theatre

63. Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next proposes to pay an official visit to the city of Leicester to inspect the work of its theatre.

Mr. Luce: I have no present plans to do so. I last visited arts organisations in Leicester in September 1988.

National Museums

64. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the level of maintenance and staffing in the national museums.

Mr. Luce: The current year's provision for the national museums and galleries building and maintenance programme is £48 million. The number of staff in post at these museums and galleries was 5,399 on 1 April 1989.

Business Sponsorship

65. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the progress of the business sponsorship incentive scheme in the north-west.

Mr. Luce: The business sponsorship incentive scheme continues to be highly successful. In the north-west over £1 million of new money has been brought to the arts since the scheme's inception in 1984. Forty-eight arts organisations have won awards and 51 first-time and 20 existing sponsors have supported the arts.

66. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much has been raised by the Government's business sponsorship incentive scheme in the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Over the last two years the business sponsorship incentive scheme has raised £13·34 million new money for the arts. Nearly £9 million has come from new sponsorship and over £4·3 million in awards has been added by the Government.

The demand for awards under the scheme has been such that I have increased the budget by an extra £250,000 to £3·25 million this year.

Museums (Funding)

67. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has recently met the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission to discuss the future funding of museums.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman of the Museum and Galleries Commission quite frequently and discuss a wide range of subjects, which have included museum and gallery funding.

Yorkshire Arts Association

68. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of Yorkshire Arts Association to discuss the future of arts funding and administration in the region.

Mr. Luce: I have not done so.

Local Museums and Galleries

69. Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many local museums and galleries there are currently in the United Kingdom; and how many there were in 1983, differentiating between publicly and privately funded institutions.

Mr. Luce: The Museum Association database indicated that of the 1,750 museums and galleries in 1984, 116 were national and Government Department-funded museums, 717 were in the charge of local authorities and 917 were privately funded. I understand that the Museums and Galleries Commission presently estimates that the number of institutions has risen to 2,500 in 1989.

South Bank Centre

70. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he will next meet the directors of the South Bank centre.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so. However, I meet the chairman of the South Bank centre regularly.

Royal Festival Hall

71. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received concerning the future of the Royal Festival hall and the South Bank.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of representations about the future of the South Bank centre which I have drawn to the attention of the Arts Council as the body responsible for allocating Government funding to the centre.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total spending and the total number of full-time equivalent staff employed by (a) all local authorities in England and (b) all local authorities within the counties of Somerset, Avon and Gloucestershire, taken together, for the years 1971-72, 1972-73, 1973-74, 1974-75 and 1988-89, respectively.

Mr. Chope: The available information is as follows:

a. All local authorities in England (thousands)

	Expenditure[1] £ million	Total f.t.e.	Staffing position in June Total no	Full-time no	Part-time no
1971-72	3,123	n.a.	2,103	1,411	692
1972-73	3,661	n.a.	2,205	1,472	733
1973-74	4,218	n.a.	2,310	1,526	784
1974-75[2]	5,531	n.a.	2,299	1,493	806
1988-89[3,4]		1,862	2,440	1,486	954
1988-89[4,5]	25,403	1,930	2,514	1,548	966

b. All local authorities within the counties of Avon, Somerset and Gloucestershire[6] (thousands)

	Expenditure[1] £ million	Total f.t.e.	Staffing position at June Total no	Full-time no	Part-time no
1974-75[2]	188	n.a.	n.a	n.a.	n.a.
1988-89[4,5]	909	n.a.	95	55	39

n.a. = Not available.

[1] Available information about net spending in 1974-75 and earlier is defined as Rate Fund Revenue Account service expenditure on employees and running expenses, less sales, fees, charges, specific grants and other income. Other income excludes rate support grant and rate/precept income. The information for 1988-89 is, as far as possible, on the same basis as earlier years.

[2] Local authority responsibility for water, sewerage and health were transferred to regional water and regional health authorities. An estimated 90,000 employees were transferred to these authorities and to passenger transport executives.

[3] For comparability with data for earlier years (where available) these staffing figures cover local authority general services and police; all other law and order staff and agency staff are excluded since these figures were not collected before 1975.

[4] During 1986 and 1987 approximately 21,000 employees were transferred out of the local authority sector following the abolition of the metropolitan county councils and the GLC, and the change in status of local authority bus and municipal airport staff.

[6] Expenditure information is not readily available for individual authorities before 1974-75 and staffing information for individual authorities is not available centrally prior to 1979. Comprehensive full time equivalent figures for individual authorities are not held locally.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what is his estimate of (a) the cost and (b) the number of the extra staff and other expenditure arising from the changes to the community charge announced in October.

Mr. David Hunt: My officials are in discussions with the local authority associations about the costs of preparing for transitional relief and about the costs of administration. In addition we are commissioning a study by consultants of these costs. Estimates of the costs will be made in the light of the discussions with the associations and the findings of the study. It is the Goverment's intention that a reasonable level of costs will be met in full.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide updates of tables J. 5 to J. 9 on pages 124 to 127 of Cmnd. 9714 "Paying for Local Government", for England only, incorporating the latest announcements on safety nets and transitional relief.

Mr. Chris Patten: Updated estimates of the distributional impact of the new system of local government finance will be provided next month after I have announced my proposals on the distribution of standard spending grant for 1990-91. These will include the impact of safety nets and transitional relief.

ENVIRONMENT

Skillnet Courses

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of trainees on skillnet courses in London Docklands achieved recognised qualifications.

Mr. Moynihan: Skillnet is an independent charity largely funded by the London Docklands Development Corporation. I understand that it has not been the practice to analyse the success rate of students sponsored by skillnet with reference to their achievement of recognised qualifications.

Skillnet provides a wide range of training and counselling services aimed at helping some 5,000 local people each year to find work. Information about individuals accepted into all forms of training and counselling is routinely collected.

As part of these activities skillnet funded 1,370 formal training places in the last financial year, almost entirely through other institutions. These courses are as much directed at securing training leading to early employment, or at basic foundation level, or in preparation for further education, as at obtaining recognised qualifications.

In common with other funders of training, skillnet experience difficulty in regularly monitoring the results of such training courses for individuals, but a survey was undertaken recently. I am arranging for copies of the results to be placed in the Library of the House. Procedures for monitoring the performance of skillnet-assisted trainees are currently under review.

Unlicensed Moneylenders

Mr. David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to increase funding to local authority trading standards departments, so as to enable them to combat unlicensed moneylenders.

Mr. Christopher Patten: The main avenue for Government support for local authority services will be revenue support grant, which is in aid of services generally. It is for local authorities to decide how much to spend on any particular activity.

Birchfield Estate, Birmingham

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department expects to make a decision on the request by Birmingham city council for grant aid for the Birchfield estate security project.

Mr. Moynihan: The scheme has been approved for funding under this year's Birmingham inner city partnership programme.

Housing Action Trusts (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, as part of his consultation process, he has taken note of the recent public opinion poll on proposed housing action trust estates in the London borough of Lambeth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Yes. I hope to discuss the proposals for the two estates comprising the proposed housing action trust with tenant and borough representatives soon. It is important that the proposals for the housing action trust should be fully understood.

Housing Completions

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the numbers of houses completed (a) in Burnley and (b) in each region in England by (i) local authorities, (ii) housing associations, (iii) private sector and (iv) housing co-operatives in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: Numbers of new housebuilding completions by local authorities, housing associations and the private sector in standard statistical regions in England, appear in table 6.4b, of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988". Figures reported by Burnley district council appear in table 1 of "Housebuilding in England by local authority areas 1980 to 1987", with figures for 1979 and 1988 being published in tables 4(b) and 1(b) of volumes 59 and 90, respectively, of "Local Housing Statistics".

Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Information separately distinguishing completions by housing co-operatives is not available.

Green Belt, Bramley

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations about encroachment on green belt for housing development at Bramley, Surrey; and if he will make a statement of Government policy towards such development.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend is considering representations from the Surrey Society asking him to call in for his own decision a planning application for residential and other development on a site at Bramley, Surrey. The Government's policies on development in the Green Belt and on the provision of low cost housing in the Green Belt are set out respectively in planning policy guidance note No. 2 and in the reply which my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning gave to the hon. Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson) on 9 June at col. 259.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is not available for the last three years. Since last October, my Department has replied to some 24,000 letters from right hon. and hon. Members, of these 64 per cent. were sent within four weeks of receiving the letter, 21 per cent. within four to six weeks, 8 per cent. within six to eight weeks and 7 per cent. in over eight weeks.

EHOs

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to visit any local authority environmental health departments to familiarise himself with the extent and nature of the work and difficulties currently facing environmental health officers.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. and hon. Friends and I are made well aware of the work, achievements and problems of environmental health departments—as of all other local authority departments—in the course of our many visits to local authorities.

Unleaded Petrol

50. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many petrol stations in the United Kingdom are selling unleaded petrol.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Unleaded petrol is now widely available. More than 16,000 outlets stock the fuel.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures available for the amount of rent arrears and the number of people with arrears for each local authority in Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire.

Mr. Chope: A list of local authorities showing reported cumulative rent arrears at 31 March 1988 was placed in the Library on 1 March 1989. Information about the number of tenants in arrears with rent, rates or other charges (where reported) is contained in the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy publication "Housing Rents Statistics at April 1988", a copy of which is in the Library.

Nuclear Accidents (Water Contamination)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list what representations he has received concerning adequate information within the water industry with respect to water resource consequences of a nuclear event; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have received no such representations.

Ashford Great Park

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the result of the public inquiry into the NEDA planning application for Ashford Great park.

Mr. Moynihan: Shortly.

Litter

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he will undertake to reduce the problems posed by litter.

Mr. Trippier: Our aim is uncompromising—to eradicate the litter problem once and for all. In order to achieve this we propose to take action against those who drop litter and ensure that any litter which is dropped is speedily cleared up.

Our proposals include an increase in the maximum fine for littering from £400 to £1,000, an extension to all district and borough councils of the power to operate a fixed penalty scheme for littering, and the placing upon local authorities, some statutory undertakers and certain owners of other land, of a duty to keep their land clear of litter. We also propose to give aggrieved citizens the right to seek redress in the magistrates court if a body under the duty fails to discharge it. However, we realise that, ultimately, the only lasting solution to the problem lies in changing the attitudes of those who persist with their inconsiderate and dirty habits.

Radon Gas

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his intention to publish full details of the distribution incidence and precise locations in relation to emissions of naturally occurring radon gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The results of the survey of radon in houses, which is currently being carried out for the Department by the National Radiological Protection board, will be published in summary form on completion. Results for individual dwellings are confidential to the householder.

London Pensions Fund Authority

Sir Rhodes Boyson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to establish the London Pensions Fund Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The London Pensions Fund Authority—the "London Pensions Fund"—will be formally established tomorrow by an order made under sections 67 and 101 of the Local Government Act 1985. The order transfers to the London Pensions Fund on 1 April 1990 the superannuation fund and associated functions, rights and liabilities which the London Residuary Body inherited on the abolition of the former Greater London Council.

The establishment of this independent superannuation administering body is based on proposals received from the LRB under section 67 of the 1985 act and follows extensive consultations with the London boroughs and other interested parties over the future of the former GLC fund. The fund is the second largest in England operating under the local government superannuation scheme, with assets of some £1·5 billion at the end of 1988-89. The LRB has successfully managed and administered the fund since abolition, and the establishment of this new body will continue to safeguard the interests of contributors and pensioners alike.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today made the following appointments to the board members of the London Pensions Fund after consultations with organisations representing London local government:

Sir George Blunden (Chairman)
Mr. Michael Roberts (Deputy Chairman)
Sir Nigel Althaus
Councillor E. D. Barkway, OBE
Professor R. N. Franklin
Councillor A. King, JP
Councillor A. S. Lourie
Mr. C. J. Messer

One further appointment will be made as soon as possible which will represent local London government.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research is sponsored by his Department at Cambridge university, in conjunction with the United States National Science Foundation, into the soil mechanics and stability of geological sites to assess the migration possibilities from toxic waste disposal sites.

Mr. Trippier: The Department is currently sponsoring research on radiochemical waste disposal at the University of Cambridge. It is understood that the United States army corps of engineers has sponsored research in the area described by the hon. Member.

Development (Road Access)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants or other financial assistance developers may apply for to pay for providing road access to residential development sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 26 October 1989]: No such grants are generally available. In the 57 urban priority areas, however, city grant may be paid to assist developers with residential projects, and this may include the provision of access roads.

EC Drinking Water Directive

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the timetable for ensuring Britain's compliance with the European drinking water directive.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 25 October 1989]: The Government are wholeheartedly committed to complying with the requirements of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations as quickly as possible, having regard to practicalities. Those regulations incorporate the standards of the EC drinking water directive. Most supplies already comply with the requirements and the water companies in England and Wales will be spending £1,400 million over the next five years alone for dealing with current failures. Those water supplies which currently fail to comply with the directive's standards are nevertheless of a quality suitable for drinking. If this were not so, water companies would take remedial action immediately. It is widely accepted that full compliance with the directive is extremely difficult to achieve and we believe that in some respects the directive itself requires amendment. We understand that no other member state has complied fully with the directive or drawn up comprehensive compliance programmes in the way that we have.

Water supplies which at present regularly exceed the requirements of the regulations will be brought progressively into compliance by the end of 1995. It may take longer to achieve full compliance for some other supplies which marginally fail to meet those requirements. For example, a longer period will be needed in some places to achieve full compliance with the standards on pesticides while water companies investigate the opportunity for reducing pesticide usage in their catchments and develop appropriate technology for pesticide removal. Current pesticide levels represent minute exposures, far lower than any which would be likely to present a threat to health.

National Rivers Authority

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the memorandum of understanding with regard to the working relationship between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 25 October 1989]: Details of the working relationship between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the National Rivers Authority will be published when the memorandum of understanding has been completed.

Water (Disconnections)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing how many people were disconnected from their water supplies for each year between 1978-79 and the latest date available.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 23 October 1989]: The number of household supplies disconnected for non-payment of charges by the nine English water authorities since 1984-85 is shown in the following table. Information on the number of disconnections by water authorities made prior to 1984-85 and those to household supplies by statutory water companies is not held centrally.

	Total for England
1984-85	2,052
1985-86	4,212
1986-87	6,450
1987-88	7,120
1988-89	8,091

I believe that in the great majority of cases reconnections are made within 48 hours.

Cash Limits

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits for 1989-90.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes. I propose the following changes subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates.

The cash limit for class X, vote 2 (central environmental services, etc.) will be increased by £32,174,000 from £280,423,000 to £312,597,000 principally to cover additional grant in aid to the National Rivers Authority of £30,325,000, increased funding for the United Nations environment programme of £1,750,000, and increased grant in aid to the Sports Council of £600,000 in respect of take up of entitlement to carry forward underspending in 1988-89 under the end year flexibility scheme for capital expenditure.

The cash limit for class X, vote 4 (royal palaces, royal parks, historic buildings, ancient monuments and the national heritage) will be increased by £430,000 from £103,437,000 to £103,867,000 towards a compensation payment by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission to the developers of the Rose theatre site, to enable preservation of the site for the public.

The cash limit for class X, vote 5 (Department of the Environment: administration) will be increased by £5,995,000 from £153,864,000 to £159,859,000 to provide for public information on lead-free petrol and further public information to increase awareness of the community charge system, in particular eligibility for community charge benefits and transitional relief.

The non-voted cash limit for DOE/UA1 (urban aid and derelict land reclamation) will be increased by £72,800,000 from £650,454,000 to £723,254,000 to cover increased grant-in-aid to London Docklands Development Corporation of £79,000,000 (of which £11,000,000 reflects the take up of entitlement to carry forward underspending in 1988-89 under the end year flexibility scheme for capital expenditure). The cash limit increase includes £4,000,000 covering the transfer of responsibility for city action teams from the Department of Trade and Industry to my Department. This has been offset by an equal reduction in the cash limits for class V, vote 2. There are some offsetting savings within the cash block.

The non-voted cash limit for DOE/NT1 (new towns) has been increased by £14,889,000 from minus £435,535,000 to minus £420,646,000 reflecting take up of entitlement to carry forward underspending in 1988-89 under the end year flexibility scheme for capital expenditure.

The cash limit for class IX, vote 2, (miscellaneous housing administration and grants) will be reduced by £5,535,000 from £84,952,000 to £79,417,000 reflecting principally reduced expenditure on housing action trusts and grant to the Housing Corporation for the reclamation of land in Merseyside.

The cash limit for DOE/HC1 (capital expenditure by the Housing Corporation) will be reduced by £6,750,000 from £701,000,000 to £694,250,000. This includes full take up of entitlement to carry forward underspending in 1988-89 of £3,250,000 under the end year flexibility scheme for capital expenditure offset by a £10,000,000 reduction reflecting the fact that certain receipts formerly surrendered to the Consolidated Fund will now be retained by the Housing Corporation. The cash limit reduction does not imply a reduction in planned gross expenditure.

The increases above will also be partly offset by decreases in non-cash-limited expenditure. The net increase in my Department's programmes will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

I have also to announce on behalf of the director general of the Office of Water Services that the cash limit for class X, vote 10 (Office of Water Services) will be increased by £1,105,000 from £2,334,000 to £3,439,000, and the running costs limit for the Office of Water Services will be increased by £575,000 from £2,200,000 to £2,775,000. The increases will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

TRANSPORT

Roads (London)

13. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a statement on the London road assessment studies.

Mr. Parkinson: I expect the results of the consultants' work to be published in early December and I aim to make a statement at that time.

Leicester Bypass

15. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the proposed construction of a western bypass for the city of Leicester.

Mr. Atkins: The public inquiry into the orders for this scheme was held in May 1988. The inspector's report was received on 1 February. The Secretaries of State for the Environment and Transport are considering it and hope to announce their decision as soon as possible.

Air Traffic Control

16. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many instances of industrial action there have been amongst air traffic control officers during the current year.

Mr. McLoughlin: There has been none in the United Kingdom during the current year. We do not collect data on industrial action in other countries.

British Rail

14. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects he expects to discuss with him.

Mr. Parkinson: I shall be meeting the chairman of British Rail tomorrow to discuss the board's future plans.

17. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he has met the chair of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I last met the chairman of British Rail on 17 October when we discussed a variety of railway matters.

27. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chair of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

28. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chair of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

29. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend regularly meets the chairman of British Rail to discuss a variety of railway issues. The last such meeting took place on 17 October.

42. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on proposals to denationalise British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: Studies are continuing but it will be some time before any decisions are taken.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for West Bromwich, East (Mr. Snape) earlier today.

Channel Tunnel

18. Mr. Gerard Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and if they discussed the Channel tunnel high-speed rail link.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I last met the chairman on 17 October when we discussed a variety of railway issues including the proposed Channel tunnel rail link.

31. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the Channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has continued to receive a large number of representations about the proposed rail link.

Inner City Transport

20. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to improve transport infrastructure in inner city areas.

Mr. Atkins: We are improving trunk roads and helping local road improvements financially. I have today announced an Industrial Development Act grant of up to £1·77 million towards a road scheme in Rotherham, which will open up land for development, providing a boost for the area and reducing local unemployment. We are also improving public transport infrastructure in London's docklands. We have approved grant towards phase 1 of Manchester's metrolink and are helping the development costs of a proposed light rail scheme in Sheffield.

Roads (London)

21. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the London road assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

38. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the London road assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: There have been numerous representations from Hon. Members, local councillors, interested groups, and members of the public. All views expressed will be taken into account.

Road Works (Leeds)

22. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many calls have been received at the Leeds road works information telephone number of his Department in each of the last four months.

Mr. Atkins: The number of callers to the road works information telephone service for the A1 in Yorkshire has been:

	Number
June	264
July	406
August	353
September	358

Bus Deregulation

23. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the working of the Transport Act 1985.

Mr. Portillo: I have no plans to amend the 1985 Act. Bus deregulation has encouraged a greater diversity of services, with more bus miles being provided by more operators at lower cost to local authorities.

45. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review the workings of the Transport Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I have no plans to review the working of the Transport Act 1985. Bus deregulation has encouraged a greater diversity of services, with more bus miles being provided by more operators at lower cost to local authorities.

Dartford Bridge

24. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the privately financed Dartford bridge will be opened.

Mr. Atkins: The new crossing, and the improvements to the approach roads, are expected to be open by early summer 1991.

Road Safety Schemes

25. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much spending on local road safety schemes has increased in 1989-90.

Mr. Atkins: Over £10·5 million is being spent on local safety schemes on the Department's trunk roads this year compared with nearly £5 million in 1988-89.

Our information about local authority expenditure on such schemes is not comprehensive. Information from the latest transport policy and programme submissions suggests that authorities plan to spend just over £10 million this year which is about the same as they did in 1988-89.

North Devon Trunk Road

26. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the dates and number of fatal accidents along the route of the north Devon trunk road from Tiverton to Bideford bridge, indicating the number of prosecutions relating to these accidents and (b) the reported number of speeding incidents and prosecutions since its opening date.

Mr. Atkins: Four accidents, each resulting in one death, have occurred on the road since the first section was opened in November 1988. These were on 11 January, 5 May and 7 July, all in the Loxbeare area, west of Tiverton, and on 16 August at Bish Mill, east of South Molton. I understand that no prosecutions are pending in relation to these accidents.

Up to 1 September 1989, over 1,000 traffic offences have been reported by the police, which have resulted in either the issue of fixed penalties or prosecutions in the courts.

Bypasses

30. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses are included in the new road programme.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 173 schemes in the expanded trunk road programme are designated as bypasses or relief roads. A large number of other schemes, although not designated as bypasses, also help to take through traffic away from unsuitable roads.

Disqualified Drivers

32. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions have been reached regarding the recommendation in the North report that disqualified drivers should be retested.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's response to Dr. North's recommendations was set out in the White Paper "The Road User and the Law" (Cm. 576). It is proposed that certain road traffic offenders should be required to take an extended driving test before their licences are restored. The views of interested organisations are being sought on the details of the proposals. A copy of the consultation paper has been placed in the Library.

Severn Crossing

33. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the county councils in south Wales concerning the Severn crossing.

Mr. Atkins: Meetings of the Severn Bridge Consultative Committee take place every six months, while the Severn crossing traffic management liaison committee meets every two months. Representatives of Gwent county council attend both sets of meetings, while South Glamorgan and Mid-Glamorgan attend the former. The most recent meetings took place on 1 June and 20 September respectively.

Buses (Deregulation)

34. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many areas are now served by minibuses following the deregulation of buses.

Mr. Portillo: The latest research shows that at the end of 1988 there were over 7,000 minibuses serving bus users in over 600 places.

47. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new operators have resulted from the deregulation of buses.

Mr. Portillo: It is estimated that by 1 May 1988, there has been a net increase of 465 operators running local bus services since deregulation.

Women and Transport

35. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has undertaken or plans to undertake into women and transport; and if he will make a statement.

41. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has undertaken or plans to undertake into women and transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) earlier today.

New Roads

36. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many responses he has received to the Green Paper "New Roads by New Means".

Mr. Portillo: Over 160.

Road Maintenance

37. Mr. Ames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to reduce delays to road users caused by maintenance work.

Mr. Atkins: Existing measures include programming of roadworks to avoid where possible having works too close together, or during peak traffic periods; improved contraflow layouts and video monitoring to enable prompt responses to traffic incidents at road works; the use of mobile lane closures for some works, in which a convoy of specially marked vehicles protect workmen instead of static lines of cones; and the use of lane rental contracts. Since these contracts were introduced in 1984, they are estimated to have saved over 2,000 days of lane closures worth around £40 million in avoided delays to road users.

New traffic management arrangements to increase vehicle flows past contraflow sites are being tested; these include the use of narrower traffic lanes to enable more lanes to be provided, and tidal flow systems in which the number of lanes available in each direction changes to match traffic demand. The Department is also developing a computer system to assist in optimising the planning and scheduling of maintenance and improvement works on trunk roads, including motorways, to minimise disruption to road users.

Docklands

39. Mr. Neil Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to improve transport in docklands.

Mr. Portillo: London Regional Transport is planning to double the capacity of the Docklands light railway from Tower Gateway early next year by the introduction of two-unit trains, which will be followed by further new sets in 1991, raising the capacity of the Tower Gateway service from the present 1,750 passengers to 6,500 passengers per hour. Completion of the first tunnel to the Bank is now scheduled for late 1990, with the second one to follow in late 1991, and I have asked LRT to do everything it can to advance the opening dates for the new services through them. We have also enabled LRT to let the first contracts for the DLR extension to Beckton, and in the meantime the reliability of the existing railway is being improved by an urgent programme of remedial measures.

The British Railways Board has this month introduced improved services and rolling stock on its North London line service to North Woolwich, and has commenced work on a new station at Silvertown, which will give easier access to the London City airport. I hope to make an announcement shortly on the recommendation arising from the east London rail study as to an extension of the Jubilee line to Stratford.

Docklands minibus have introduced a fifth service, and an improved LRT bus network is in place to serve the docklands. The riverbus now provides a weekend service and runs through to Greenwich, and is installing monitors on piers so as to improve passenger information.

The London Docklands Development Corporation has a programme for the construction of a development road network through Limehouse, the Isle of Dogs and the royal docks. Work is well advanced and expected to be completed in 1993. As part of this, a £171 million contract has just been let for construction of the Limehouse link, a 1·8 km dual two-lane cut and cover tunnel from the highway to Westferry Circus and Poplar, which is due for completion by the autumn of 1993. Construction work should start on the Limehouse link by the end of this year. Work should also start on the proposed Lower Lea crossing by the spring of 1990. The Eastern Gateway access road was opened on 3 October. The opening of an extension to Aspen Way by the end of this year will provide a third major access to the Isle of Dogs from the A13, serving the island's eastern side.

The Department has a complementary programme to improve the A13 in Tower Hamlets and Newham by the mid-1990s. Three interim schemes for the Isle of Dogs are scheduled to start in 1990, two for completion in 1991 and one for 1992.

Final schemes at these locations and Cotton street are scheduled to start in 1993. At that time work should begin on the widening of the Ironbridge, including a connection of LDDC's proposed East India Dock link.

An exhibition of our proposals to replace the Beckton flyover and improve the A13-A117 junction during 1992-93 was held at Brampton Road Manor school, East Ham on 27-28 October. Improvements to the A13 junction with the A112 are scheduled for 1994-95

We have announced reopening of the inquiry into the design of the east London river crossing bridge. The reopened inquiry will clearly have to take account of the inter-relationship with the proposed future development of the London City airport, on which a planning application has now been made.

We have rationalised waiting and loading restrictions on the A13 trunk road in Tower Hamlets, and have let a contract for provision of a new east London traffic control system. We have invited tenders for the renovation of the northbound Blackwall tunnel. LDDC has in hand a study on the extension of the controlled parking zone to the Isle of Dogs. The Department and the other highway authorities have reached an understanding with the statutory undertakers on the conduct of highway works in Docklands.

Rail Investment (North-West)

40. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has received concerning rail investment in the north-west of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In July approval was given to BR's proposals to invest £26 million in a new Manchester airport rail link. BR is already spending a total of nearly £50 million on new locomotives and driving van trailers on the west coast main line, and another £35 million on the Windsor link and the resignalling and remodelling of Piccadilly station in Manchester. The area is also benefiting from BR's substantial rolling stock investment.

A41 Bypass

43. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the A41 bypass inquiry.

Mr. Atkins: Public inquiries into the A41 Berkhamsted and King's Langley bypasses finished in September 1988 after 48 sitting days. The considerable volume of evidence put forward is being carefully considered in the light of the independent inspector's report and recommendations. The Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport will announce their joint decision as soon as possible.

Aviation (Single Market)

44. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards completing the single market in aviation.

Mr. McLoughlin: A first stage of aviation liberalisation was agreed in December 1987. The EC Commission has recently made proposals for a second major package, which would encourage greater competition and should bring down fares. The Council is due to decide on these proposals by the end of June 1990. Particularly bearing in mind the interests of consumers, my right hon. Friend has pressed hard for further liberalisation. I am glad that the commission has taken up the United Kingdom's ideas in framing its proposals. We will continue to press for measures based on these proposals to be adopted by the Council.

Glasgow Abbotsinch Airport

46. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to give Glasgow Abbotsinch airport gateway status before 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend announced on 13 September that he was to review Scottish lowland airports policy. A consultation document was issued on 27 September and respondents have until 29 November to comment. All views put forward will be considered carefully.

Manchester Airport

48. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to visit Manchester airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so. I visited the airport myself on 23 October.

London Underground

49. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what extensions of the current London Underground have been agreed but not completed; and what schemes have been submitted but still await approval.

Mr. Portillo: There are no outstanding proposals for extensions to the Underground which have been approved but not built. We are considering with the operators the new lines proposed in the central and east London rail studies.

Road Signs

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take additional steps to (a) improve the standard of road signs, (b) ensure speedier repair of damaged and faded road signs and (c) ensure road signs are not obscured on motorways and trunk roads.

Mr. Atkins: Yes.

British Rail and Scotrail

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress towards the privatisation of British Rail and Scotrail.

Mr. Portillo: Studies into the possible privatisation of British Rail, including Scotrail which is one of British Rail's six regions, are continuing.

Municipal Ports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any information on the management costs expressed per ton at municipal ports.

Mr. McLoughlin: Regulations under section 42 of the Harbours Act 1964 require all statutory ports whose turnover is £250,000 or more to send their annual accounts to this Department, which also collects data on the trade which passes through ports. Because of the wide variety of goods handled, comparisons of costs per ton would not be meaningful.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will carry out a financial and managerial appraisal of all municipal ports.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. Any such appraisal would be the responsibility of the local authorities concerned or for the Audit Commission, in the case of a broader comparative survey.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those ports together with their tonnage for the last five years operated by municipal management.

Mr. McLoughlin: Freight tonnage handled over the last five years by those ports in Great Britain where the local authority is the harbour authority, and where traffic exceeded 100,000 tonnes a year, is given in the following table.

There are another 14 ports in Great Britain where the local authority is the harbour authority but traffic was less than 100,000 tonnes per year.

Million tonnes

Statistics of freight tonnage through British ports are published in an annual report "Port Statistics", published jointly by the Department of Transport and the British Ports Federation. "Ports Statistics 1988" was published on 27 October and a copy has been placed in the House Library.

Marine Rescue Services

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has had any representation on the cost of switching from Decca to Loran C for the marine rescue services;

(2) if he will list the representations he has had about Loran C;

(3) if he will publish his response to the paper submitted by Racal Decca on the Loran C proposals;

(4) if he will publish the basis for his costings for updating the Decca transmitters.

Mr. McLoughlin: Representations about the future choice of marine radionavigation system have been received from the following:

Andrew Weir Shipping
Brightlingsea and District Fishermen's and Boatmen's Association
British Marine Industries Federation
British Motorship Owners Association Ltd
British Offshore Support Vessels Association
British Ports Federation
British Shippers' Council
British Telecom (Marine) Ltd
Brooks and Gatehouse Ltd
Caledonian MacBrayne
Coe Metcalf Shipping
Comite International Radio Maritime Commissioners of Irish Lights
Cruising Association
Department of Agriculture for Scotland
Department of the Environment
Department of Trade and Industry

Royal Yachting Association
Royal Yachting Association for Scotland
Scottish Development Department
Scottish Fishermans Federation
Sea Fish Industry Authority
Shell UK Exploration and Production
STC Defence Systems
Trinity House
United Marine Aggregates Limited
Wild Goose Association

Some 12 individuals have also made representations.

The RNLI has drawn attention to the cost of re-training marine rescue personnel and of re-equipping with receivers if a changeover were to be made to Loran C.

These representations are all now being considered, and the Department proposes to publish a response in due course to the paper submitted by Racal Decca Marine Navigation Ltd. The costings for updating the existing Decca transmitters are based on an offer made by RDMNL to the general lighthouse authorities in November 1988, under which the company would finance the work in return for an extension of their contract with the authorities to the year 2004.

Ships Officer Manning Levels

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those countries that propose a reduction in ships officer manning levels, including radio operators, in the next 12 months; and if he will list and tabulate the United Kingdom's manning levels as against those of other EEC countries.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department has no information that other countries propose to reduce ships officer manning levels, including radio operators, in the next 12 months. The United Kingdom's manning levels are assessed on an individual ship basis in accordance with the principles of safe manning established by the International Maritime Organisation. The Department has not attempted to tabulate manning levels but a record of the safe manning certificates issued is maintained.

Short Sea Prospects

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the estimated short sea prospects for the next two years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not forecast prospects for the shipping industry, but I have noted that British ship operators in the short sea sector have recently been more confident about future prospects, reflected in improved freight rates and some increased investment in new tonnage. British operators are among the most entrepreneurial and cost-effective and I will continue to argue vigorously in the Community for the liberalisation of cabotage markets and for the elimination of subsidies which distort competition and put British interests at a competitive disadvantage.

Shipping Tonnage

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current percentage reduction of United Kingdom registered shipping tonnage over the same figure in 1988.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of vessels registered at ports in the United Kingdom and their deadweight are given in the table.

All United Kingdom registered vessels of 100 grt and over

	Number of vessels	Deadweight tonnage ('000 tonnes)	Percentage reduction in total deadweight
September 1988	2,030	7,253	—
September 1989	1,929	6,544	9·8

Seafarers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated reduction in the number of seafarers in the first six months of the current year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of seafarers on the General Council of British Shipping register at 31 December 1988 and at 30 June 1989 was as follows:

	Officers	Ratings	Cadets	Total
31 December 1988	9,322	12,860	447	22,629
30 June 1989	8,989	12,593	411	21,993
Per cent. reduction	−3·6	−2·1	−8·1	−2·8

Port State Control

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that the memorandum of understanding on port state control is strictly enforced to a uniform and high level throughout the EEC.

Mr. McLoughlin: Each signatory country of the memorandum of understanding should achieve an annual total of inspections corresponding to 25 per cent. of the estimated number of individual foreign merchant ships which enter its ports during a 12-month period. The United Kingdom has always exceeded the 25 per cent. figure of inspection of foreign flag vessels since the memorandum became operational. United Kingdom representatives have always endorsed the efforts of the secretariat of the port state control committee to encourage signatories of the memorandum, which include all littoral EEC countries, to achieve the 25 per cent. inspection rate.

Cycling

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from cycling organisations in England and Wales regarding (a) full provision for cyclists in new road schemes, (b) increases in local authorities' cycle budgets, (c) promotion of traffic-calming measures and (d) special funding for British Rail for cycle provision on trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Cyclists' Touring Club wrote in July proposing a series of measures including the four included in the question. I have replied pointing out that cycling does not need to be stimulated by public funding. Interest in cycling is high. Sales of new machines have been buoyant. Unfortunately cycling is one of the least safe means of transport, so the emphasis of the Government's work must be on making it safer. Cycle provision on trains is a matter for British Rail.

Council of Ministers

Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the recent European Council of Transport Ministers meeting in Luxembourg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I was pleased that the Council reached agreement on a new directive to ban the addition of certain types of older, and noisier, jet aircraft to Community fleets. This is a useful step in the process of moving towards an era of quieter aircraft.

The Council also agreed, subject to receiving the opinion of the European Parliament, to a regulation removing recommended road haulage tariffs between member states. We welcome this as part of the process of abolishing tariffs and reducing bureaucracy across the Community.

There was discussion but no agreement on the Commission's proposals for shipping "positive measures"; a proposed short-term road haulage cabotage experiment; a draft directive on training for drivers of dangerous goods vehicles; a proposal by the Commission for a programme of transport infrastructure funding; and fiscal harmonisation in road haulage. The Commission reported the current position in the Community's negotiations with Austria, Switzerland and Yugoslavia. Notes by the Presidency presented proposals on road safety, and on the development of railways in the Community.

I also attended an informal meeting of the Council in Paris on 6 October which was mainly devoted to a discussion of the Commission's recent proposals in the field of aviation.

"The Road User and the Law"

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress in implementing proposals contained in the White Paper "The Road User and the Law".

Mr. Atkins: Many of the proposals announced on 7 February in the White Paper "The Road User and the Law" (CMD 576) will require legislation.

The further consultation outlined in the White Paper on the details of the legislative changes and administrative arrangements for key proposals is well advanced. Copies of the papers on driver retesting, vehicle prohibition and the use of technology for enforcement have been placed in the Library.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the total cost of the east London river crossing taking into account the changes in bridge design and the widening of the road to dual three lanes between the A13 and the Thamesmead spine road.

Mr. Portillo: The latest estimate of the total cost of the scheme at average 1984 prices is approximately £195 million. When converted to mid-1989 prices the estimate becomes £300 million.

Motorcycle Tests

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the budget allocated by his Department for the current financial year for motor cycle tests; whether that budget figure has been reached; and what arrangements are being made to ensure satisfactory delivery of the service for the remainder of the financial year.

Mr. Atkins: The new part 2 motorcycle test was estimated to cost £644,000 in 1989-90 (starting 2 October) on the assumption of 26,850 tests to be conducted and an average waiting time of four weeks. This remains our forecast. Following the pre-September surge to avoid the fee increase (to £24), both the new arrangements and demand are now settling down as forecast.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current waiting time for a motorcycle riding test in Leicestershire; what is the existing waiting list; and what action is taken to ensure that applicants are tested before their provisional licences expire after two years.

Mr. Atkins: Six weeks planned to reduce to four weeks by the end of the financial year. There are 300 tests at present booked for dates up to 15 December. Waiting times of this order should not present difficulties for motorcycle riders seeking test within the two years' term of their provisional licence; applicants with specific needs may ask to be given priority bookings.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of test inspectors for motorcycle tests in Leicestershire; how many tests they have carried out since the new test was introduced on 2 October; and what arrangements will be made to hold tests in venues other than the city of Leicester.

Mr. Atkins: Two examiners are available to conduct part 2 motorcycle tests in Leicestershire; 45 tests have been conducted in the county since 2 October and 50 tests a week have been booked to be conducted in November and into December. Additionally, it is proposed to conduct tests at Melton Mowbray from December and at Hinckley in the new year.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what type and cubic capacity of motorcycle is made available to test examiners of his Department; what is the approximate purchase price of these machines; and what steps have been taken to ensure public economy in this regard.

Mr. Atkins: 450cc to 800cc. The machines are lease hired at an average annual cost of £1,816 per machine following competitive tender.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what type of one-way radio equipment has been provided to motorcycle test examiners of his Department; what is the approximate purchase price of this equipment; and what steps have been taken to ensure public economy in this regard.

Mr. Atkins: Examiners have been provided with UHF FM 1·5 watt single-channel portable radios and ancillary equipment. Following extensive trials to identify the most suitable and cost-effective equipment these were purchased at a cost of £2,106 per set following competitive tenders.

Nuclear Fuel Train Journeys

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many waste nuclear fuel train journeys have been completed (a) with no accidents involved, and (b) with accidents involved, for each year since 1982 in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: There are at present about 350 loaded fuel flask movements per year. It is not practical for British Rail to provide statistics of all movements since 1982, but in that period there have been eight incidents during transport, all of which were minor.

In more than 25 years of nuclear fuel flask movements, not one incident has occurred which led to a release of even the smallest quantity of radioactivity, or to injury to any person caused by the nature of the contents.

Road Standards

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on his plans to put on a sound, long-term basis expenditure on maintenance and minor improvements to bring classified roads up to reasonably modern standards over the next decade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We are catching up with the backlogs of maintenance on motorways and other trunk roads as quickly as programming and traffic management considerations allow and in line with the targets announced in April. Once the backlogs have been eliminated, a steady programme of major maintenance will be required to keep pace with ongoing deterioration. We have greatly improved the strength of motorways and other trunk roads built in recent years to increase their life before reconstruction becomes necessary.

Other classified roads are the responsibility of local highway authorities, who determine their own maintenance priorities.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what support he is giving to research about aircraft noise reduction, and what financial support is available for the implementation of measures aimed at reducing the level of aircraft noise (a) near the main Scottish airports and (b) generally.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry expects to spend some £1·8 million in the current financial year on research on reducing aircraft noise at source. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has made schemes for Heathrow and Gatwick airports under section 79 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 whereby the airport company makes grants for noise insulation of dwellings; it is also intended to make a scheme for Stansted. At other airports, not designated under section 79, such measures are for the airport management.

Public Transport Proposals

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the public transport proposals currently under consideration by his Department for grant or investment approval in London and the south-east.

Mr. Portillo: The majority of investment decisions are taken by the public transport operators, the passenger transport authorities and executives, and county councils.

The Department of Transport is considering the case for new rail lines identified by the central and east London Rail studies; for an extension of the docklands light railway to Greenwich and Lewisham; and for the investment required to improve the existing BR rail lines and to buy new rolling stock to carry Channel Tunnel traffic in 1993. Channel-tunnel-related investment is not eligible for grant.

London Assessment Studies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has received the consultants' reports on stage 2b of the London assessment studies;

(2) when he intends to publish the results of stage 26 of the London assessment studies.

Mr. Atkins: We expect to receive reports from the consultants for all four London assessment studies in the next month or so. Arrangements for printing will be put in hand as soon as possible for publication early in December. The reports will be available for purchase and there will be free summaries. Displays will be offered at town halls and public libraries throughout the study areas.

In order to reduce uncertainty, we intend to announce at the time the reports are published which options will not be considered further. We shall be inviting comments from local authorities, other organisations and members of the public before reaching firm decisions on the remaining options.

Public Transport Fares (EC)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the comparative fares for a standard public transport journey in each of the European Community capital cities.

Mr. Portillo: There is no agreed definition of a "standard public transport journey", and the nature and circumstances of public transport in European Community capital cities vary.

Injuries and Deaths (Trunk Roads)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department has for use on trunk roads in order to prevent injuries or deaths to pedestrians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government attach great importance to making trunk and local roads safer for pedestrians. In April 1989 following a thorough review of pedestrian safety on all roads we published a leaflet entitled "Pedestrian Safety" which outlined a number of initiatives aimed at making walking safer. The implementation of the proposals on local roads, where the great majority of pedestrian casualties occur, is primarily for the local authorities. The proposals also apply as appropriate to trunk roads, standards for which already incorporate requirements to protect pedestrians. In addition, the trunk road construction programme will continue to take traffic away from roads in towns and villages which are heavily used by pedestrians, thus making a significant contribution to safety.

M1

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the terminal date for completion of the road works near junction 12 on the north-bound carriageway of the M1; what financial incentive has been provided to the contractor to complete the work ahead of schedule; and what quantification he has made in financial terms of the cost to business and industry from the daily congestion and delay there.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 27 October 1989]: The works are likely to finish in mid-November, about a month ahead of the original programme. The contract was let on a lane-rental basis with the contractor paying a fee to the Department related to the amount of carriageway space he uses. The fee in this case is a maximum of £25,000 per day. This provides considerable incentive to complete the works early. The lane rental fee is based on the estimated cost of delays to the travelling public. Calculations take into account the range of vehicles and whether business or leisure use is involved.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will specify any action taken by his Department to minimise the delay and inconvenience caused to road users by the major road works near junction 12 on the north-bound carriageway of the M1 since July; and why there has been no use of contraflow techniques.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 27 October 1989]: Lane rental has been used to encourage the contractor to complete the works in the shortest possible time consistent with quality and price. The traffic management arrangements use the minimum road space necessary for safe and efficient working on the site. In the current phase of lane closures the cones are removed during peak hours to enable three lanes to be open. Contraflow has, where appropriate, been used throughout the contract.

A1

19. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend dual carriageway on the A1 north of the Morpeth bypass.

Mr. Atkins: An improvement scheme for dualling a section of the A1 at Cawledge, south of Alnwick, commenced on 10 April 1989 and is expected to be completed early 1990.

Other dual carriageway proposals in the road programme for the A1 north of Morpeth are the Brownieside improvement and Marshall Meadows to the Scottish Border improvement. On current planning the start of works on these schemes is scheduled for the spring 1991.

A56-M63

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will review urgently the road safety position with respect to the A56 Chester road, between the intersection with the M63 motorway and Warwick road north;

(2) what information he has about the number of accidents involving motor vehicles and pedestrians on the A56 Chester road between the intersection with the M63 motorway and Warwick road north which resulted in (a) fatalities, (b) serious injury, (c) minor injury and (d) other over the last three years.

Mr. Atkins: I understand the hon. Gentleman's concern in the light of the recent tragic accident there. However, these are matters for Trafford metropolitan borough council as highway authority for that stretch of the A56.

Search and Rescue (North Devon)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will accept the invitation of the hon. Member for Devon, North to visit the north Devon coastline and the Swansea coastguard station in order to assess the efficiency of the emergency services concerned with search and rescue.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend thanks the hon. Member for his invitation. He is, however, content that there is adequate provision of services for maritime search and rescue in the area and has no immediate plans for any such visit.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Location

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to change the current arrangements for encouraging the location of industry across the whole of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Where industry locates in the United Kingdom is a matter for commercial decision. Regional industrial policy provides incentives to encourage industry to invest in the assisted areas of the country. There are at present no plans to change this policy.

I am however considering the possibilities for realising the property assets of the English Industrial Estates Corporation. Jointly with the board of the corporation, I have commissioned a study to advise on this and also to report on the most effective mechanisms for promoting private sector investment in speculative industrial and commercial space in the assisted areas. This is consistent with our policy that English Estates' first priority is to encourage and facilitate greater private sector activity while focusing its own direct provision in areas where, for the time being, that cannot be achieved.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on payments made to those affected by the collapse of Barlow Clowes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I refer my hon. Friend to my letters of 16 August and 30 October to all Members, copies of which are placed in the Library.

Chemical Exports

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what volumes of (a) chloroethanol, (b) dimethylamine, (c) potassium fluoride and (d) dymethylamine hydrochloride have been exported, and to which respective countries, since May 1979; when exports of each respective chemical were halted; and for what reasons.

Mr. Redwood: Statistics on the export of these chemicals are not available.

A licence has been required to export chloroethanol, dimethylamine and potassium fluoride to Iran and Iraq since 12 April 1984 when these items became subject to control under the Export of Goods (Control) Order. The Export of Goods (Control) (Amendment No. 4) Order 1989 which came into force on 31 July 1989 extended the control on exports of these chemicals to Libya and Syria. It also brought the export of dimethylamine hydrochloride under control to Iran, Iraq, Libya and Syria.

Controls on the exports of these chemicals have been introduced because of the Government's concerns about the proliferation of the capability for producing chemical weapons. Applications for a licence to export these chemicals to the destinations for which they are controlled are considered on a case-by-case basis in the light of stringent criteria.

Marine Licensing

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which EEC countries charge a fee for a VHF marine licence for private pleasure craft.

Mr. Forth: Details of EEC countries' radio licence fees are not collected centrally. Inquiries made to a number of administrations indicate that fees are charged for the use of maritime radio by private pleasure craft.

Measurement Accreditation

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that other EEC countries are complying with the Euro-norm agreement on measurement accreditation.

Mr. Forth: The United Kingdom's national measurement accreditation service (NAMAS) is co-operating with other Community member states to ensure the implementation of the European standards, the EN 45000 series, which define the criteria for laboratories, the accreditation of laboratories and for the accreditation bodies. These standards are expected to be increasingly used by the Commission in new approach directives and each member state will be responsible to ensure that the requirements of the directives are fully met.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which EEC countries have a national measurement accreditation service to the same standard as the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The EEC Commission has placed a contract with the French Reseau National d'Essais (RNE) to carry out a study of accreditation systems operated by member states with the aim of establishing their compliances with international codes of practice and in particular the European standards for accreditation based on the EN 45000 series standards. It is expected that this report will be available in December 1989 and the national measurement accreditation service (NAMAS) will examine the report in detail.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which EEC countries have sought the advice of his Department on measurement accreditation.

Mr. Forth: Many of the EEC countries have discussed with the Department's national measurement accreditation service (NAMAS) the development of their own accreditation systems. Additionally representatives of seven member states have attended the NAMAS assessor training course to gain experience of assessment techniques and to assist in setting up their own training courses.

Consumer Goods (Imports)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the principal categories of consumer goods imported into the United Kingdom, by value, for the years 1986, 1987, 1988 and the first half of 1989.

Mr. Redwood: The figures are as follows:

United Kingdom Imports (£ million)

Takeover Bids

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what procedure is followed by the Office of Fair Trading in its examination of takeover bids.

Mr. Redwood: The procedures are conveniently set out in a booklet produced by the Office of Fair Trading entitled "MERGERS—a guide to the procedures under the Fair Trading Act 1973". I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Beer

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what decisions he has reached in the light of representations on the draft orders on the supply of beer.

Mr. Ridley: I have received representations from a wide range of parties including large and small brewers, tenants' associations, and wholesale and consumer organisations. All representations have been given careful consideration.

I have now reached final decisions on the orders. The main changes I have decided to make are as follows. First, I have decided that national brewers who are required to free a proportion of their properties from product ties should be able to sell such properties without disadvantage provided they are sold free of ties. This amendment will encourage a more diverse pattern of ownership. I have also decided that in view of the substantial changes brewers will be required to make to a large number of tenancy agreements to free part of their estates the period for such adjustment will run to November 1992.

Secondly, many representations have emphasised the importance of ensuring that tenants of the national brewers should not be subject to pressures to discourage them from exercising their freedom to choose to supply a guest beer. Accordingly, I have amended the guest beer provisions to block a number of possible loopholes that brewers might have used to deter tenants from exercising their choice, and to make it clearer that tenants should be entirely free to choose their supplier.

Thirdly, the position in respect of those companies, mainly small brewers, who are not subsidiaries but nevertheless fell to be regarded as parts of large brewery groups by virtue of minority shareholdings in them is amended. It will now be provided that no obligations will fall on a company solely because a member of a large brewery group has a minority interest in it. The tied estates of such companies will, however, still count towards the brewery group's limit on tied houses if more than 15 per cent. of the voting rights of the company are held, though account is now due to be taken of the extent to which control of shares is diluted through intermediary companies, if the group owns less than 50 per cent. of the voting rights. The 15 per cent. rule remains, as I believe that a group can exercise a substantial influence at this level of shareholding. The rule will act as some deterrent to further concentration in the industry.

Finally, the definition of licensed premises has been changed so that the limits on the numbers of tied houses held by national brewers will no longer bite on premises with restricted licences, such as restaurants, where the supply of beer is not a significant part of the business.

The Office of Fair Trading will be making arrangements to monitor compliance with the orders. The director general will need to collect information for this purpose, and a further order will be made shortly to cover this.

As was made clear in my right hon. and noble Friend's statement of 10 July the director general will be assessing the effectiveness of the measures in addressing the market detriments found by the MMC once the orders have had time to take effect. The Government will consider the need for further measures in the light of the director general's conclusions. If in the meantime, however, it becomes clear that further steps are necessary either to ensure compliance with the intentions behind the order, or to deal with other anti-competitive or undesirable practices, I will not hesitate to act as necessary.

In this connection, I shall be keeping under review the position of tenants in advance of enactment of legislation to put their security of tenure on the same basis as that of other business tenants. If necessary, I will consider making an interim order to protect their position. I have also asked the director general to keep under review any anti-competitive moves to limit access to the market by independent manufacturers of beer or other drinks who are without tied estates, or by wholesalers. The Government intend separately to legislate to give tenants protection under the landlord and tenant legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits.

The changes I have outlined, and other technical points raised in representations, have required a significant number of changes to the orders. Copies of the orders have today been placed in the Libraries of both House and sent to the principal interested parties.

Any representations on technical drafting points that arise from the revised texts should be submitted to my Department by 10 November. The Loan Ties, Licensed Premises and Wholesale Prices Order will then be made, and the draft Tied Estate Order, which requires resolutions of both Houses, will be laid shortly afterwards.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on proposals by certain breweries to permit tenants to sell a guest beer but to replace any sales lost to the landlord brewery by higher rent.

Mr. Redwood: I have received representations from the National Licensed Victuallers Association and others that this might occur. It is being made clear in a separate statement made today that the brewer cannot discriminate against a tenant exercising this right.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has had since the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission Report on the supply of beer specifically supporting the introduction of a sliding scale of duty; whether he now favours such a proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Well over 2,000 written representations have been received. An analysis of each one to determine whether a particular point had been made would be possible only at disproportionate cost. Officials of Customs and Excise are in the process of informally consulting with the trade on the possibility of changing to a method of charging duty based on the beer that is actually produced. The final decision is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has had since the publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of beer which regret the absence from its report of recommendations to reduce regional and subregional monopolies; whether he will extend the guest ale provision to public houses owned by regional brewers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Well over 2,000 written representations have been received. An analysis of each one to determine whether a particular point had been made would be possible only at disproportionate cost. It has been made clear that the requirement to allow tied tenants to choose a guest beer will apply only to the national brewers.

House of Fraser

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the serious fraud squad has completed its inquiries into the issues raised in the report of inspectors into the acquisition of House of Fraser; and when he now expects to publish the report.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 October 1989]: I cannot comment on the state of the inquiries to which my hon. Friend refers. Questions relating to the operation of the serious fraud office are for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General. It remains the intention of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to publish the report at the earliest possible moment consistent with the even-handed administration of justice.

CFCs

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what facilities exist for the recycling of chlorofluorocarbons from the foam in refrigerators; what percentage is currently recycled; and what steps he is taking to increase this percentage.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 30 October 1989]: Recovery of chlorofluorocarbons from the insulating foam in refrigerators is technically very difficult, and I know of no facilities operating successfully at the moment in the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friend has commissioned a wide-ranging study into the recovery, recycling and destruction of CFCs; the Government will take its finding into account when considering if any action is called for on this issue. The results of the study are expected early next year.

Jaguar plc

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on Jaguar plc.

Mr. Ridley: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement that I made in the House earlier today.

Professional Liability

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish the report of the studies on professional liability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The report of the three study teams on professional liability under the overall chairmanship of Professor Andrew Likierman is published today. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

The Government set up these studies last year because of the concern expressed by many professionals about the extent of claims for professional negligence and the cost and availability of professional indemnity insurance. This is an area in which there was a wealth of anecdote, but little hard fact. The studies acknowledge that there are difficulties in obtaining comprehensive information, but have none the less brought together much useful material.

The report finds that the same underlying changes in insurance and law have affected all three groups of professions, but that the effects of the changes on these groups have been different. The study teams have therefore recommended a different package of proposals for each profession.

We accept the broad conclusions of the report, that professionals have been faced with an increasing exposure to negligence claims, and that the cyclical nature of the insurance market means that at times costs of insurance increase sharply. The report finds that so far the changing position of professionals is having only limited effects on the quality or cost of the service they are providing to consumers. We are conscious of the need to balance the potential adverse effects on consumers against the right of consumers who are victims of negligence to recover damages to the extent possible.

The construction professionals and the surveyors study teams recommend steps which professionals, their institutions and the associations representing all parties could take to improve standards, practice and collaboration. The Government welcome these recommendations.

Several of the recommendations addressed to Government are very wide-ranging, including proposals for reform relating to joint and several liability, legal aid and time limitation periods for claims. It is recommended for example that the Law Commission should be asked to consider the case for changes in the law of joint and several liability in commercial cases. While the Government recognise the strongly held feelings that the current arrangements in these areas can in some circumstances operate unfairly against the professions, the changes suggested would have important effects well beyond the immediate context of professional liability. They will require fuller consideration before the Government can form a view.

Other proposals will be looked at as legislative opportunities become available. The current Companies Bill has already provided an opportunity to pursue two of the recommendations of the auditors study team. We accepted the proposal that the law on directors' insurance should be clarified so that a company can reimburse a director for his liability insurance. We decided against the proposal that an auditor should be able to limit his liability by agreement with the company. Consultation revealed that non-auditors were generally opposed to the idea because it could limit legal redress in the rare cases of poor audits. Some recommendations, however, can already be seen to raise practical difficulties which are such as to preclude further investigation.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Trade and Industry and other colleagues as appropriate will be considering the outstanding points.

We are very grateful to Professor Likierman, to the chairmen of the three study teams, William Morrison, Professor Donald Bishop and Ian Oddy, and to the study team members, all of whom have voluntarily put so much work into this review. We are also grateful to all those who provided evidence for the studies.

WALES

Forestry

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has considered establishing a separate forestry body for Wales, in line with his proposals to create a unified Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have seen no need to consider such a change.

Swansea Downs (Nuclear Submarines)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will commission a study on the effects on tourism in Swansea bay and the Gower peninsula of plans to create a reserve Z berth for nuclear-powered submarines at Swansea downs; and what communications he has received from Swansea leisure centre over the Z berth plans.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department has no plans to commission such a study and I have received no communication from Swansea leisure centre about the proposal.

Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue a detailed consultation paper setting out the structure of the proposed merged body of the Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission for Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department has no plans to do so. Full consultation is already taking place between Government Departments and the statutory agencies on this and other pertinent issues.

Welsh Language

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many requests for exemptions from the requirement to teach Welsh as part of the core curriculum have been received from schools in (a) Wales, (b) each local education authority and (c) Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have received requests for exemption from teaching Welsh in the national curriculum from 11 schools in Wales. These include four in Gwent; three in Clwyd; two each in West Glamorgan and Dyfed, both in Pembrokeshire.

National Health Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by what date the current maintenance backlog on National Health Service properties will be cleared on current and planned capital spending for the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Backlog maintenance is a term generally used to describe the work necessary to bring National Health Service property up to a standard of full life expectancy where no expenditure except for routine maintenance is required. District health authorities' programmes to achieve this include investment in the maintenance of buildings which are to be retained, the rationalisation of services to release accommodation which is no longer practicably suitable and the construction of new facilities. They are encouraged to give a high priority to these activities and their performance is monitored by the Department as part of its annual review process. However, in view of progressive improvements in the standards of accommodation required, the continuing need for maintenance investment and the long-term nature of some of the measures to improve the conditions of the estate, it is not possible to estimate when the current maintenance backlog will be substantially eliminated.

NHS White Paper

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money he has currently allocated for the implementation of the White Paper; what proportion of the sums allocated will be used to fund (a) information technology, (b) medical audit, (c) the Welsh Office value for money unit, (d) training, (e) family practitioner committees, (f) health authority costs, and (g) treatment centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Department has provided an additional £5 million toward the cost of implementing the White Paper proposals in the current financial year. This has been allocated as follows:

	£ million
(a) information technology (including the resource management initiative)	2·34
(b) medical audit	0·11
(c) Value for Money Unit	0·18
(d) training	0·14
(e) family practitioner committees	0·11
(f) health authorities's discretionary use	1·62
(g) treatment centres	0·50
	5·00

The provision of these additional resources reflect the importance that the Government give to the major programme of improvement now being undertaken within the NHS and their recognition of the need for adequate investment. Provision for 1990-91 and subsequent years is currently under consideration as part of the annual review of public expenditure and will be announced in due course.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of (a) the total cost of implementation of the proposals contained within the National Health Service White Paper in Wales, (b) the manpower implications for nurse staffing and (c) the manpower implications for financial, management, administrative and clerical staffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Government's broad estimates of the financial and manpower implications of implementing the White Paper will be given in the financial and explanatory memorandum of the NHS reform Bill. These estimates will relate to the NHS generally and will apply equally to Wales as to other parts of the United Kingdom. The more detailed manpower implications of the proposals are being addressed as part of the ongoing manpower planning activities being undertaken within the NHS in Wales.

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the extent of local education authority schools using (a) changes to school timetables to cover vacancies and (b) non-specialists to teach subjects for which they have minimal qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information concerning the extent to which changes to school timetables are made to cover staff vacancies or other unforeseen circumstances is not held by the Department. The results of the secondary school staffing survey undertaken this year will provide information on the teaching staff employed, their qualifications and the teaching they undertook. The results will be available towards the end of the year.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies he has undertaken on the size and characteristics of the pool of inactive teachers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There have been no recent surveys on out-of-service teachers in England and Wales although we are currently considering whether a survey would be beneficial and how best it should be undertaken. In the meantime the education support grant programme for 1990-91 provides funding for LEA pilot projects designed to encourage LEAs to maintain contact with teachers who leave the service and to attract back into the service people in their areas who left the profession some years ago.

Welsh-medium Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the number of Welsh-medium teachers needed to staff the national curriculum; what is the current number of Welsh language teachers employed by local education authorities in Wales; and what is the number of students currently training as Welsh-medium teachers.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The national curriculum is not expected to create a need for more Welsh-medium teachers overall in the short term. However its introduction will increase the number of secondary Welsh-medium teachers required for some subjects while decreasing the number required for others. Some retraining of secondary teachers may therefore be necessary to provide for the change in subject mix.

The numbers of teachers required to teach Welsh as a language will increase as a result of the introduction of the national curriculum. The future numbers are currently being discussed with LEAs. The results of these discussions will enable us to judge the scale and shape of the retraining and recruitment programmes for the years ahead.

Welsh language specialists tend to be concentrated in the secondary sector. Current information on the number of Welsh language teachers employed by LEAs in Wales will not be available until the results of the 1989 secondary school staffing survey are to hand later this year. There are 358 students currently training as Welsh-medium teachers at initial teacher training institutions in Wales.

Teacher Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of students who have received bursaries for initial teacher training in Wales; what is the total value of those bursaries; and what is the numbers of students by teaching speciality.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Between 1986-87 and 1988-89 a total of 379 students have received £526,000 from the bursary scheme as shown in the following table:

Subject	Total students
Mathematics	153
Physics	119
CDT[1]	107
	379

NHS Capital Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what will be the capital expenditure at each National Health Service treatment centre site, on (a) new buildings and (b) alterations to existing buildings; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he intends to make any financial provision for the travel costs of patients using the new National Health Service treatment centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Monday 30 October 1989.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the number of beds in Welsh hospitals in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) the current year with the annual rate of decline in the periods 1974 to 1979 and 1979 to 1989;

(2) what was the average bed occupancy in National Health Service hospitals in Wales in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) the current year.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 24 October 1989]: The information requested is shown in the following table:

	1974	1979	1st quarter 1989	Per cent change per annum
Average daily available beds:				1974-79	1979-89
Acute[1]	12,190·8	11,302·7	10,350·4	−1·5	−0·9
Long stay	12,516·7	12,153·4	9,938·0	−0·6	2·0
Percentage Occupancy:
Acute	68·4	68·3	70·4
Long stay	89·9	86·7	84·2

[1] Excludes geriatrics, younger disabled, mental illness and mental handicap.

My hon. Friend will wish to note that the rate of change of bed numbers in the long-stay sector has increased since 1979 in line with the policy of caring for such patients in the community where possible. Over the same period the increase in percentage occupancy of acute beds had been accompanied by an increase in the number of acute in-patients treated of 85,193 or 26·9 per cent., which represents an increase of 2·6 per cent. a year. The equivalent figures for 1974 to 1979 were an increase of 14,458, representing 4·8 per cent. or 0·9 per cent. a year.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of failure to complete the GCSE examination is expected now that GCSE has been introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The most recent figures show that of the 5·23 million entries for the 1988 summer GCSE examinations, 4·6 per cent. were recorded as absent. A further 3·4 per cent. were ungraded.

National Curriculum

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance has been issued on the national curriculum in relation to special schools for children with learning difficulties.

Mrs. Rumbold: The National Curriculum Council has recently published a booklet entitled "A Curriculum For All" which gives guidance on ensuring access to the national curriculum for all pupils with special educational needs, whether in maintained special schools or mainstream schools. I have placed a copy in the Library. The Department has also recently issued a joint circular with the Department of Health on assessments and statements of special educational needs which also includes guidance on the national curriculum. Departmental circulars on various other aspects of the national curriculum also include guidance on their application to pupils with special educational needs.

Leicester Polytechnic

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement of the finance available from public funds for Leicester polytechnic; and what special provision will be made (a) to re-open a building which has had to be closed on grounds of safety; (b) to prevent further closures on such grounds; to bring the general stock of buildings into a reasonable state of repair.

Mr. Jackson: The allocation of public funds to Leicester polytechnic is the responsibility of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC). I understand that the Cumberland street annexe building, which was closed on safety grounds in June 1989, has been replaced by accommodation in a larger and more suitable building with the aid of a specific allocation of £700,000 from the PCFC's contingency fund. The safety and state of repair of the buildings is essentially the responsibility of the polytechnic itself.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will express the additional sum of £600 million for teachers' pay 1990-91, stated in his remit to the interim advisory committee, in terms of percentage increases in the inter-quartile range of private sector pay settlements for the latest available 12-month period; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee's remit represents an increase of some 7·6 per cent. on the 1990-91 teachers' pay bill. the inter-quartile range of private sector non-manual basic pay movements for the 12 months ending in June 1989 was 6·3 per cent. to 8·5 per cent, with a median of 7·3 per cent.

Statemented Children

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish a table showing, for local education authorities in England in each of the last three years for which records exist (a) how many children and what proportion of children of school age have been statemented as having special educational needs and (b) what extra resources in terms of teacher-hours per statemented pupil per year have been made available by each local education authority in England, respectively.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information on teacher resources in special education is not available centrally. Information on numbers of pupils with statements will be provided as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Remand

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to take steps to bring remand limits in line with the Scottish limit of 110 days.

Mr. John Patten: No. Custody time limits are now in force in England and Wales, except in London and the south-east, where we plan to introduce them in 1990. The limits in England and Wales are 56 days to summary trial or 70 days to committal in magistrates' courts; and 112 days from committal to arraignment in the Crown court. In Scotland, the limits are 40 days to trial for summary offences and 110 days from commitment to trial for indictment cases. The different limits in England and Wales reflect the diferences in pre-trial procedures and the amount of business.

Trials

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to bring the United Kingdom in line with the prompt trial requirement of the European convention on human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The United Kingdom complies with the European convention on human rights requirements for trial for any criminal charge against a person within a reasonable time.

Crime (Investigations)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to setting up a national criminal intelligence unit along the lines of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the United States and as to what purposes it would have which are not adequately covered by existing policing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The developing challenge of serious criminal activity across local, regional and national borders requires effective enforcement counter-measures, based on the best intelligence. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) said in his speech to the Police Superintendents Association annual conference on 26 September, we need to make sure that these new needs are met. We have therefore initiated consultations with the Association of Chief Police Officers who have accordingly set up a working party on our criminal intelligence arrangements to assess the case for a national criminal intelligence unit, as part of the strengthening of police co-operation at home and internationally to deal with serious cross-border crime.

Any such unit will be necessarily different from that of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the United States of America, and will need to take account both of existing national intelligence arrangements for specific kinds of crime, notably drugs, and our system of locally based police forces and regional crime squads.

Immigration

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the scale of the abuse of immigration laws by people obtaining false birth certificates; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Detailed information is not available, but there is some evidence of abuse in individual cases, which are under consideration. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health published a Green Paper entitled "Registration: a modern service" (Cm. 531) in December 1988. The Green Paper contained proposals to limit the issue of certificates from the more recent records of the registration of births, marriages and deaths to those who have a legitimate interest in them. My right hon. Friend is considering possible restrictions on the issue of certificates in the light of responses received.

Trial by Jury

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to restrict the right of an accused person to opt for trial by jury.

Mr. John Patten: We have no present plans to do so.

Hunt Saboteurs

Mr. Ames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake a review of the law with a view to extending the criminal law to cover trespass on land in cases involving the activities of hunt saboteurs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to undertake such a review. Trespass on land is in general a matter for the civil law. There are powers to deal with those who commit criminal acts such as criminal damage, assault or causing harassment, alarm or distress while trespassing.

Guildford Four

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to write to Patrick Armstrong, Gerard Conlon, Carole Richardson and Paul Hill expressing apologies on behalf of Her Majesty's Government for the injustice they suffered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) expressed regret at this serious miscarriage of justice in his statement to the House on 19 October at columns 271-73.

Football (Arrests)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to analyse the arrests made at Football League matches in London (a) outside the ground, (b) inside the ground and (c) by the nature of the alleged offence in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the 1988-89 season at Football League matches in London there were 649 arrests inside grounds and 724 outside directly related to the matches. Figures showing the nature of the alleged offences or the outcome of these arrests are not collated centrally by the Metropolitan police or the Association of Chief Police Officers, and we have no plans to ask that this work should be undertaken.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is yet able to announce the level of the television licence fees to take effect from 1 April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: On 27 October 1987, at column 204, my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) announced that the licence fees for the three years starting from 1 April 1988 would be calculated in accordance with changes in the retail prices index, which determines the rate of increase of pensions and other state benefits. The RPI figure for September published on 13 October showed a year-on-year increase of 7·6 per cent. I have accordingly decided that from 1 April 1990 the colour licence fee should be £71 and the monochrome fee £24. The necessary regulations will be laid before the House in due course.

As was made clear in last year's White Paper on "Broadcasting in the '90s" (Cm 517), fee increases from 1 April 1991 onwards may be set at less than RPI in a way which takes account of the BBC's capacity to generate income from subscription.

Vulnerable Prisoners (Report)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet received the report of the working group on the management of vulnerable prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I have received this helpful and thorough report, copies of which are being placed in the Library. The study focused particularly on the arrangements concerning prisoners segregated for their own protection. The main improvements recommended, all of which I have accepted, with a procedural modification in respect of one, are:

(a) Rule 43 of the prison rules to be amended (i) to allow authoritative directions on its interpretation to be given by the Secretary of State; (ii) to allow governors to authorise segregation for up to three days; and (iii) to remove an anomaly affecting young persons under 21 held in prisons and remand centres Young offender institution rule 46 also to be amended as at (i) and (ii). The aim of (i) is to be achieved by administrative guidance rather than by amendment of the rules;

(b) a board of visitors, on a proposal of the governor, to be able to decide, in the light of facilities available, to dispense with rule 43 controls for a particular group of vulnerable prisoners;

(c) present guidance on the personal legal liability of individual officers to be revised in supportive terms;

(d) certain training prisons to be re-organised to take rule 43—own protection—prisoners, so that they can be allocated from local prisons in the normal way;

(e) creation of a further vulnerable prisoner unit for about 100 category B prisoners;

(f) improvements in regimes and implementation of proposed guidelines on best practice to be carried forward through governors' annual contracts for 1990-91 (earlier wherever possible), under the functional responsibility of a senior member of the management.

While certain recommendations requiring resources may take some time to implement fully, most of the 35 recommendations are resource-neutral and work on bringing them into effect has been put in hand.

Metropolitan Police Operations

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has regarding the number of occasions in the past 12 months when the Metropolitan police have invited representatives of the media to accompany police officers on major operations; at what command level decisions are taken to invite a media presence; and what criteria are used in such cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 18 October 1989]: I understand from the Commissioner that the position is as follows. Media representatives accompany police officers on a wide variety of operations about which it is not possible to generalise. Arrangements are made centrally or locally by invitation from the police or on request from the media. Figures are not collated centrally, but the number of such arrangements exceeds 750 a year.

Decisions to invite media representatives to witness raids are made by officers of chief superintendent rank or above, in consultation with the Metropolitan police directorate of public affairs.

Invitations to the media are an important part of the Commissioner's policy of encouraging greater public understanding of police operations; are part of his policy of openness; and are an example of the accountability of the police to the public, on whose behalf they operate. The resulting news coverage may act as a deterrent to criminals, and provides independent reporting of events which might, otherwise, attract false and malicious allegations.

ENVIRONMENT

Rural Development Commission

99. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many marketing consultancy grants have been made by the Rural Development Commission in the past year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Rural Development Commission made 71 marketing consultancy grants in the year ended 31 March 1989, the latest period for which figures are readily available.

Housing Expenditure (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the housing capital expenditure which Lambeth council is permitted to undertake from capital receipts in addition to the approved housing investment programme of £30·6 million.

Mr. Chope: No such estimate has been made. It would be possible to construct a theoretical estimate based on information reported by Lambeth council, but as authorities are free to vire receipts and borrowing between services in 1988-89, and to use receipts for non-prescribed capital expenditure, such a theoretical estimate would be of limited value.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Nature Conservancy Council takes non-scientific criteria into account when declaring, confirming or revoking sites of special scientific interest under the terms of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Nature Conservancy Council's "Guidelines for Selection of Biological SSSIs" gives details of the scientific guidelines currently in use. The NCC proposes also to publish guidelines in respect of geological and physiographical SSSIs in the context of its geological conservation review. In the exercise of its duty, under section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, the council has a duty under section 37 of the Countryside Act 1968 to have regard to the needs of agriculture, forestry and the economic and social interests of rural areas.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on initiatives he plans to promote in response to the conclusions of the Commonwealth expert group on climate change and sea level rise, in respect of Her Majesty's Government's policies on mitigation of the greenhouse effect;

(2) if he, or any other Minister or official of his Department, was present at, or presented a paper to, the seminar on the greenhouse effect at the Institution of Mechanical Engineers on 29 September;

(3) what departmental representation there was, and what departmental papers were presented, at the global conference on the greenhouse effect, co-sponsored by the United Nations environment programme, held in Japan in September.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We welcome the contribution that the report of the Commonwealth expert group makes to the debate on climate change, and we recognise the particular concern of some Commonwealth countries about a potential rise in sea-levels. The Langkawi declaration on the environment which followed the recent Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting supported the work of the intergovernmental panel on climate change and endorsed the United Kingdom's call for an international convention on climate change. We are fully committed to the work of the IPCC, in which the United Kingdom is playing a leading role, and we will continue to press the case for a framework convention on climate change.

There was no ministerial representation at the IME seminar on 29 September. An official from the Building Research Establishment presented a paper entitled "Energy Efficiency in Buildings and the Greenhouse Effect."

There was no departmental representation at the conference on the global environment and human response held in Tokyo on 11 to 13 September 1989.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department differentiates between global warming caused by (a) natural and (b) man-made changes; what information he has on the reasons for global temperature rises before chlorofluorocarbons; and if his Department has made an appraisal of the thesis on global warming of Doctor Bruce Denness of the Bureau of Applied Sciences.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is a "natural" greenhouse effect caused by the earth's atmosphere without which the earth would not be habitable. Current concerns arise from the increase in the concentration of anthropogenic greenhouse gases including carbon dioxide and the chlorofluorocarbons. The impact of those increases, and the effects which will flow from them, are the subject of intensive scientific review within the intergovernmental panel on climate change which is due to report next summer. I understand that report is unlikely to endorse the views of Dr. Denness.

Trades Union Congress (Charter for the Environment)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent meetings he has had with representatives of the Trades Union Congress over its charter for the environment, adopted in September.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not met representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss its charter, but he has recently accepted an invitation from the general secretary to do so.

Pesticides

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the report on pesticide use in the United Kingdom, sent to him on 7 August by the Green Alliance and the British Agrochemicals Association.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has replied to these organisations on behalf of all the Ministers responsible for the control of pesticides in a letter dated 26 September. A copy of the letter has been deposited today in the Library of the House.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the performance assessment of geological isolation systems for radioactive waste programmes sponsored by the Commission of the European Communities; and what are the implications of the PAGIS programme for future nuclear waste disposal in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: PAGIS (Performance Assessment of Geological Isolation Systems), a six-year multinational research project on the safety assessment of high-level waste (HLW) disposal, was launched in 1982 as part of the Community plan of action in the field of radioactive waste management. Reports of the PAGIS project have been published by the European Commission. PAGIS reinforces the Government view that all categories of radioactive waste can in principle be safely disposed of in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received a copy of the report from the European Commission on the evaluation of the third Community programme on radioactive waste management and storage, 1985-1989, published in July as document EUR 12264 EN; and what are the implications for the United Kingdom of this programme for the United Kingdom's radioactive waste inventory.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department received a copy of the executive summary of document EUR 12264 EN in July. The programme has no implications for the United Kingdom's radioactive waste inventory.

Milton Keynes Year of the Environment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support he has given to the Milton Keynes Year of the Environment project launched on 19 September; and when he plans to visit Milton Keynes to promote environmental initiatives in the city.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) sent a message of support to the organisers of the Milton Keynes Year of the Environment. I endorse that message, and will follow the year's progress with interest.

Air Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are to be taken to ensure that local authority environmental health departments have sufficient resources and information available to implement effectively the proposed changes to controls over air pollution from industrial sources.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A joint committee to provide a forum for discussion between Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and local authority environmental health departments was set up at the end of 1988. The secretariat is provided by HMIP's local authority unit which has already begun to consider draft guidance notes on some 20 of the processes to be scheduled for local authority air pollution control. Information exchange on such matters as training is also being developed in the same forum.

As the new system represents a rationalisation and streamlining of local authorities' existing air pollution controls the Government estimated that it would add only £0·5 million to their current expenditure.

Ivory

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what agreements were made regarding the release of the ivory stockpile in Hong Kong with the European Environment Council during October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: None; the last meeting of the European Environment Council was held on 19 September. The issue of the stockpile of ivory in Hong Kong was not discussed.

Homelessness

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will arrange a meeting with building societies to discuss additional measures to reduce homelessness.

Mr. Chope: Regular meetings are held with representatives of building societies. These cover a wide range of housing issues including homelessness.

Rivers

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentages of United Kingdom rivers are classed as being of good or fair quality by the European Community; and what is the European Community average.

Mr. Howard: There is no river quality classification scheme laid down by the European Community. Each member state uses different systems, criteria and class boundaries for categorising rivers which makes assessments at Community level difficult. However, a review of classification schemes across member states published in 1988 by the Water Research Centre showed that on the basis of comparisons with the river classification scheme used in this country, an average of 83 per cent. of EC rivers were of good or fair quality compared with 95 per cent. in the United Kingdom. No other member state had a higher proportion of good or fair quality rivers than the United Kingdom, although our position was equalled by the Netherlands.

Local Government Bill

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is intended that the new ceiling in the Local Government Bill for involvement in political activity be index-linked.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The salary level of £19,500 specified in the Bill is not a "ceiling on political activity". It is simply a dividing line in the machinery for determining which posts in local government service should be politically restricted. Above that level posts are restricted unless specifically exempted. Below that level they are free unless they are specifically restricted.

My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has indicated that the Government propose to use the regulation-making power in the Bill to replace the reference to £19,500 with a reference to point 44 on the national joint council's recommended pay scale, as it is for the time being. The specified salary will thus change in accordance with national pay agreements.

Residuary Bodies

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to lay before Parliament the 1988-89 annual reports and accounts of the London and metropolitan residuary bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The 1988-89 annual reports and statements of accounts of the London and metropolitan residuary bodies were laid before Parliament today. A copy of the Secretary of State's direction under section 78(2) of the Local Government Act 1985 as to the content and structure of the accounts has been placed in the Library of the House.

The residuary bodies' reports provide continuing evidence of the considerable progress which they have made in discharging the responsibilities they inherited from the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils. Among other achievements in 1988-89, over £314 million in capital receipts were realised from sales of surplus property, the benefits of which are being distributed to the local authorities.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Greater Manchester residuary body will complete its work and be wound up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Greater Manchester residuary body was formally dissolved today. During the three and a half years since abolition the record of the residuary body has been impressive. It has sold or transferred to the successor dstrict authorities 10,650 former county council property interests and distributed £12·25 million of capital receipts to the local authorities.

There will be further amounts to come from sales which have not yet reached completion. This is in addition to the distribution of some £55 million in revenue balances.

The Greater Manchester residuary body is the third of the seven residuary bodies to wind up. The RB inherited a very considerable number of property interests, rights and liabilities from the former Greater Manchester county council, not least those in respect of the Greater Manchester exhibition centre (GMEX). That these have been disposed of with the full co-operation of all the successor authorities is a credit to all concerned.

The order under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985 transferred the remainder of the residuary body's property functions, rights and liabilities to the city of Manchester and the metropolitan boroughs and districts of Bolton, Bury, Oldham, Rochdale, Salford, Stockport, Tameside, Trafford, and Wigan on 31 August 1989.

The Greater Manchester residuary body inherited a particularly wide and complex range of tasks. I am grateful to the chairman, board and staff for discharging this task of winding up the affairs of the former Greater Manchester metropolitan county council with such efficiency and dispatch. Their final report is being laid before Parliament today.

Unified Business Rate

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any special provisions are to be made to mitigate the impact of the unified business rate on small businesses initially.

Mr. Chope: Yes. There will be transitional protection for businesses facing large increases as a result of the combined effects of the 1990 revaluation and the introduction on 1 April 1990 of a uniform national business rate. There will be a ceiling of 20 per cent. on the amount by which any rate bill can rise in any one year in real terms for properties with a rateable value of £10,000 in the new rating list (£15,000 in London) or more. But for properties with a rateable value between £500 and £10,000 (£15,000 in London)—which will include 75 per cent. of all business premises—the annual ceiling will be 15 per cent. in real. terms.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since 1981 (a) the applications received by his Department from the Nature Conservancy Council for orders under section 29 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and (b) those applications which resulted in such an order being made.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 17 October 1989]: The number of orders made or rejected in England is as follows:

	Made	Rejected
1981	—	—
1982	2	—
1984	4	1
1985	5	2
1986	1	—
1987	2	—
1988	—	—
1989	5	—

In addition it has been unnecessary for the Secretary of State to make an order on around six occasions because agreement was reached with the owner/occupier of the land concerned or the threat to the land did not materialise.

The responsibility for making orders in Wales and Scotland rests with the respective Secretaries of State.

Photochemical Smog

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total number of photochemical smog events which have occurred during the last year in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 30 October 1989]: Photochemical smog, consisting of ozone and other ingredients, is a result of the reaction between oxides of nitrogen and gaseous hydrocarbons in the presence of sunlight. In the United Kingdom a network of 17 sites monitors ozone levels. There is always some ozone in the lower atmosphere, and the definition of an "event" is inevitably arbitary. However, in August my Department announced that it would issue daily summaries of ozone concentrations for periods when several network sites recorded an hourly average of 60 parts per billion or more. Since then there have been three such periods. The record for the period before August shows a further five periods during the last year.

Nuclear Accidents (Water Contamination)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any comprehensive studies have been made to ensure the effectiveness of treatment methods for removing radionuclides typically released from accidents involving nuclear reactors into the water supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 30 October 1989]: A report that the Department commissioned last year concluded that most forms of water treatment would remove the major part of radioactivity from water supplies in the event of an accidental release of radioactivity. However, it is most unlikely that emergency reference levels would be reached in such circumstances even before water supplies are treated, except possibly in the immediate locality of a catastrophic release of radioactivity.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how it is intended that the community charge will be collected from itinerants.

Mr. David Hunt: People with no fixed abode are exempt from the community charge, and the question of collection does not, therefore, arise. Travellers who are solely resident in caravans or boats will be liable to pay a personal charge in the area where they last become subject to a community charge on a particular day. It is for registration officers and charging authorities to make suitable arrangements for registration for, and collection of, the community charge in the light of local circumstances.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to prevent community charge registration officers disclosing anonymous personal information to credit companies, mail order companies or police forces.

Mr. Chope: No such legislation is necessary. Community charges registration oficers have no power to provide personal information to any of the bodies referred to by the hon. Gentleman. Recent changes to the Local Government Finance Act specifically preclude the provision of any information from which any individual can be identified.

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to provide further public information on the community charge.

Mr. David Hunt: In order to provide further information on individuals' rights and duties under the community charge, my right hon. Friend has decided to make additional resources available to ensure that those who are eligible for community charge rebates and transitional relief are aware of their entitlement.

HEALTH

Germanium

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he can give to AIDS sufferers and others on the use of dietary supplements containing germanium.

Mr. Freeman: Dietary supplements containing germanium have been sold in health stores, pharmacies and by mail order. Product literature and articles sponsored by manufacturers claimed or implied potential health benefits, including an improved immune response. However, the Department of Health has no evidence that germanium is beneficial to health, and a report from Japan suggests that, taken as a dietary supplement, it may actually be harmful. The Department of Health has therefore advised that sales and consumption of dietary supplements containing germanium should cease.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the allocation of the 100 new consultant posts promised in the White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have approved 35 new posts for the first year of the scheme in 1989-90. Officials have today written to health authorities advising them of successful bids for posts in their area. The new posts we have created are over and above existing plans for new consultants. They are targeted on districts and specialties where there are long waiting times for treatment. They will enable many extra cases to be treated from waiting lists and will make a significant impact on the increasing demand which leads to long waits.

We will meet the full costs of the new posts up to a maximum of £500,000, which will cover the cost of the new consultants, plus additional staff and running costs, and essential equipment in support of the posts.

The annual running cost of posts approved in the first year of the scheme averages £360,000 with an additional average cost of £40,000 to cover one-off capital expenditure. The new posts are in general surgery (10 posts); trauma and orthopaedics (7 posts); obstetrics and gynaecology (5); ophthalmology (5); urology (3); ear nose and throat surgery (2); and (one post each in) medicine, oral surgery and plastic surgery. These new posts will be supported by additional medical and non-medical staff. A total of 13·5 whole-time equivalent consultants in anaesthetics; a small number of extra consultant sessions in radiology, audiology and histopathology; 16 whole-time equivalent junior medical staff; 377 nurses; 68 professional and technical staff and 113 other non-medical staff will be provided as a result of the scheme in its first year. We are seeking further information from health authorities on a number of the other bids, and I expect to announce the allocation of the remaining 65 new posts early next year.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has received from the Royal College of Psychiatrists on the National Health Service White Paper "Working for Patients"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The response we have received from the Royal College of Psychiatrists endorses the Government's aims for the Health Service. It raises a number of concerns regarding the implication of our proposed reforms for mental health services. Many of these concerns will be addressed in the White Paper on the future development of community care which we hope to publish very shortly.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years;

(2) what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available on the time taken to reply to correspondence before November 1988. Since then 51 per cent. of letters from hon. and right hon. Members have received a reply within four weeks. I regret that information on delays in replying beyond four weeks is not available in the detail requested. Following a very large increase in the amount of correspondence received earlier this year the Department has taken steps to improve the speed of reply.

Wheelchairs and Artificial Limbs

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether all regional health authorities have submitted to his Department their detailed proposals for the integration of the wheelchair and artificial limb services in 1991; how far advanced the preparations for the integration are; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Proposals for the integration of the Disablement Services Authority's services have now been received from all regional health authorities. We shall be assessing the progress made with preparations for integration at the Disablement Services Authority's annual review meeting on 9 November.

Students (Free Prescriptions and Dental Treatment)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding free prescriptions and free dental treatment for all students; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: During the last 12 months we have received six letters from hon. Members and four letters from members of the public about free prescriptions for students. We have also had a small number of representations about free dental treatment for students.

Students up to the age of 18 are entitled to free prescriptions and free dental treatment. Students aged 19 and over can apply for help under the NHS low income scheme. We believe it is right that students of that age who can afford to pay for their prescriptions and dental treatment should do so.

Central Nottingham DHA

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the present 10-year capital programme of Trent regional health authority for Central Nottingham district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for capital programmes lies with regional health authorities which maintain records. I have asked the regional chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Babies

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many babies born in England and Wales, in 1987 and 1988 at 25, 26 or 27 weeks gestation who have been handicapped from oxygen starvation or other causes will need special care for the rest of their lives; and what is the estimated cost to the National Health Service of this special care over the estimated lifetime of these children;

(2) how many babies were born in England and Wales, in 1987 and 1988 at 25, 26, and 27 weeks gestation and survived one year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available; information on gestation is not collected at live birth registration.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will respond to the statement made by the Pharmaceutical Society setting out its concerns about the quantity of tranquillisers still being prescribed.

Mr. Freeman: I welcome the concern shown by the Royal Phamaceutical Society of Great Britain about the need to avoid incorrect prescribing of benzodiazepines. As its statement makes clear, the Committee on Safety of Medicines has already given guidelines on the use of benzodiazepines.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many breaches of the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising between his Department and the tobacco industry there have been in the past 12 months.

Mr. Freeman: During the past 12 months, the committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship has recorded nine instances in which the voluntary agreements that it monitors were breached. The agreements monitored by the committee are the 1987 agreement on the sponsorship of sport, and the 1986 agreement on tobacco products advertising and promotion, and health warnings. On one of these occasions—a televised sporting event—a number of breaches of the same agreement occurred. In addition to this, the committee referred one complaint to the Advertising Standards Authority, which decided that it was in breach of the cigarette code.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Department of Health and Tobacco Industry Committee monitoring the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising and their occupations; and whether he has any plans to reconstitute the committee to include fewer representatives from the tobacco industry.

Mr. Freeman: The committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship was set up as part of the 1986 voluntary agreement on tobacco products advertising and promotion, and health warnings, and the terms of that agreement stated that the Committee should have equal representation from interested Government departments and from the tobacco industry. The Government cannot decide unilaterally to reconstitute the committee; this would have to be discussed with and agreed by the tobacco industry. The independent chairman of the committee is Sir Peter Lazarus. The Government members are Mr. T. S. Heppell, Mr. N. M. Hale and Mr. W. Burroughs, all from the Department of Health, Mr. A. King, Scottish Office, Mr. D. MacDonald, Department of the Environment, Mr. D. Adams, Welsh Office and Mr. J. Scott, from the Department of Health and Social Security (Northern Ireland). The industry members are Mr. W. C. Owen and Mr. D. R. Hare from the Tobacco Advisory Council, Dr. R. R. Boxall, Gallaher Limited, Mr. Haynes, Imperial Tobacco Company, Mr. E. D. Oxberry, Rothmans (UK) Limited, and Mr. B. C. W. Heard from the Imported Tobacco Products Advisory Council. The seventh industry member has just resigned from the committee and has not yet been replaced.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to make the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising binding on the tobacco industry.

Mr. Freeman: The tobacco industry has undertaken to honour the current agreement and its operation is monitored by the independent committee for monitoring agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship (COMATAS). The chairman of COMATAS, Sir Peter Lazarus, concluded in the second annual report of the committee, published in April this year, that the industry tries hard to keep to the agreement.

Speech Therapists

The Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the grades of speech therapists in England, Wales and Scotland following the regrading under HSS(TC7)3188 broken down by area board, showing the percentage in each grade before regrading and the percentage after.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [Pursuant to the reply, 6 July 1989, cols. 238-40]: My hon. and learned Friend gave information for the "percentage of speech therapists in each grade in England at 30 September 1989". This was incorrect and should have read, "We do not have the information in the form requested, but the tables show the percentage of speech therapists in each grade in regional health authorities in England on the dates shown."

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Radioactivity Research and Environmental Monitoring Committee

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's role in the radioactivity research and environmental monitoring committee since its inception.

Mr. Maclean: The function of the radioactivity research and environmental monitoring committee (RADREM) is to review research and monitoring requirements and activities relating to radioactive waste management. In addition to contributing to the joint scientific secretariat for this committee, my Department has been represented on and played a full and active part in the work of the committee since its inception in 1986. Officials in my Department also chair two RADREM sub-committees, set up in 1988, dealing with research on radioactivity in the terrestrial environment and the aquatic environment respectively.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not readily available in the form requested. However, in the financial year 1988-89, a total of 88 per cent. of letters receiving a ministerial reply, including those from hon. Members, were answered within three weeks.

Radioactive Fallout

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to seek information from the Ukrainian and Byelorussian agriculture departments on the emergence of unpredicted mutations in vegetations in pine, oak and acacia trees, and in rodents and waterfowl in areas contaminated by radioactive fallout from Chernobyl.

Mr. Maclean: Scientists from my own and other Departments keep fully abreast of scientific developments through contact with their Soviet counterparts and others in various international fora. Migratory waterfowl that might have been in the vicinity of Chernobyl at the time of the accident were examined as part of my Department's extensive post-Chernobyl monitoring programme to ensure the safety of United Kingdom food supplies. The wider environmental implications of the accident are the concern of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Goats

Mr. Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government proposes to revise the set-aside scheme so as to accommodate fibre-producing animals such as cashmere and angora goats.

Mr. Curry: The Government have decided not to take up the option under the Community set-aside scheme to introduce grazed fallow because of problems of control and possible adverse effects upon existing livestock producers, particularly in the hills. The Community rules do not permit restriction of the option to particular types of animals such as fibre-producing goats.

SCOTLAND

Piper Alpha

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he can make of the total cost of the inquiry into the Piper Alpha disaster chaired by Ford Cullen; and what will be the costs met by the Scottish Office.

Mr. Rikind: The public inquiry into the Piper Alpha disaster was established by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy, whose Department spent £1·05 million in 1988-89 on setting up and running the inquiry. In 1989-90 the best estimate of the costs of the inquiry is £2·7 million, although the precise figure will depend on how long it lasts. It is not yet possible to estimate any further costs which may be involved in the completion of the report.

The only costs being met by my Department are those associated with providing legal advice and counsel to the Department of Energy. In 1988-89 these amounted to approximately £0·1 million and the best estimate for 1989-90 is £0·3 million.

Gaelic Television Services

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from organisations supporting the expansion of Gaelic television services.

Mr. Lang: The Secretary of State has received a wide range of representations about the future of Gaelic broadcasting. All call for a substantial increase in Gaelic television programming, although many differ as to how this might be best achieved. The Government are currently considering the future of Gaelic broadcasting and an announcement of their conclusion will be made shortly.

Environmental Research

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's role in the radioactivity research and environment monitoring committee since its inception.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has been represented on the radioactivity research and environmental monitoring committee since it was established in 1986 and has taken a full part in the committee's work. This has included reviewing and collating the programmes of research and monitoring undertaken both by Government and industry. It has ensured that appropriate work is in hand to cover both the United Kingdom and Scottish interests.

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how a large mental health hospital will compete for patients if accorded self-governing status.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All self-governing NHS trusts will be required to enter into contracts with health boards and other purchasers of health services. Their ability to win contracts will depend on the quality of the services they are able to provide and the prices they wish to charge.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will accord self-governing status to hospitals or other medical units other than major acute hospitals as part of the two hospitals he envisages awarding such status.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend will give careful consideration to all applications for self-governing status.

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether separate legislation will be required to implement "Working for Patients" in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Cash Limits

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any further changes to the cash limits for 1989-90 within his responsibility.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. I intend to make changes to nine of the cash limits within my responsibility.

As a result of reduced requirements the cash limit for class XVI, vote 3—regional and general industrial support—has been decreased by £4,000,000 from £148,249,000 to £144,249,000. This reduction will partially offset increases in other votes.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 6—roads, transport and environmental services—will be increased by £1,881,000 from £211,061,000 to £212,942,000 reflecting the take-up of entitlement to carry forward underspends in 1988-89 under the end year flexibility arrangements as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 20 July 1989. The full entitlement of £1,673,000 on capital expenditure and £208,000 in respect of running costs for historic buildings and monuments are taken up.

The cash limit on class XVI, vote 14—prisons, hospitals and community health services, etc.—is being reduced by £4,630,000 from £2,003,389,000 to £1,998,759,000. The supplementary estimate includes take-up of the entitlement to carry forward £388,000 under the end year flexibility scheme for running costs.

There is a new cash-limited vote, class XVI, vote 27—hospital and community health services—covering from 1 January 1990 the hospital and community health services formerly carried on vote 14.

The cash limit has been set at £8,697,000, reflecting gross expenditure of £542,199,000 and appropriations in aid of £533,502,000. This comprises transfers from vote 14 for the final quarter of the financial year, together with additional resources, originally agreed for vote 14, of £4,747,000 on capital expenditure for the take-up of the full entitlement to carry forward underspending in 1988-89 under the end year flexibility scheme and £3,950,000 for NHS review implementation costs, partly offset by savings of £200,000 on class XVI, vote 14.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 15—education, arts, libraries and social work—will be increased by £162,000 from £215,649,000 to £215,811,000 to take account of the changes in payment of income support for hostel dwellers.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 19—General Register Office for Scotland—will be increased by £50,000 from £5,318,000 to £5,368,000 reflecting the take-up of the full entitlement to carry forward underspends in 1988-89 under the end year flexibility scheme for running costs. In addition, the running costs limits for the General Register Office for Scotland will be increased by £50,000 from £5,815,000 to £5,865,000.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 21—Scottish Office administration—will be increased by £1,014,000 from £120,358,000 to £121,372,000. The increase includes take-up under the end year flexibility scheme for running costs of £379,000 and legal expenses of other departments for which legal advice is provided. As a result of these changes and the full take-up of carry forward under the end year flexibility scheme by historic buildings and monuments within class XVI, vote 6 and by prisons within class XVI, vote 14, the running costs limit for the Scottish Office will be increased by £1,057,000 from £205,865,000 to £206,922,000.

Cash block SO/LA1, which covers non-housing capital expenditure by local authorities, is to be increased by £12,000,000 from £501,035,000 to £513,035,000 reflecting the take-up of the full entitlement to carry forward underspending under the end year flexibility scheme for capital expenditure.

Cash block SO/LA2, which covers housing capital expenditure by local authorities and capital expenditure by new towns, is to be increased by £18,524,000 from £326,900,000 to £345,424,000. Within this total, £24,900,000 reflects the take-up of the full entitlement to carry forward underspending under the end year flexibility scheme for capital expenditure.

The net effect of these changes will be met from the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Lead Water Pipes

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total of central Government grant in each of the past 10 financial years for the replacement of lead piping.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1989]: Information is not held centrally on the element of grants for house improvements relating to the replacement of lead piping. However about 58,000 grants which included lead plumbing replacement were made in the period 1982-88 inclusive.

House Repossessions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of 18 October, Official Report, column 170, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, if he will make it his policy to collect information about house repossessions in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 October 1989]: The possibility of obtaining such information is being pursued.

Dyslexia

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidelines the Scottish Education Department has issued to local education authorities concerning the testing for dyslexia among young schoolchildren; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent consultations have been conducted between officials of the Scottish Education Department and local education authorities concerning the detection of dyslexia among schoolchildren; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 October 1989]: Responsibility for identifying children who have difficulty with reading or writing rests with education authorities, whose teaching staff are becoming increasingly well-equipped, through improved training, to recognise and to help such children. While the Scottish Education Department has not issued guidance or held consultations with authorities, its inspectorate has, in approving teacher training courses, ensured that these now contain a special educational needs component. Special educational needs diploma courses include specific instruction in recognising dyslexia.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years.

The Attorney-General: Letters from hon. Members are treated as a matter of priority within my Department, and are answered as soon as the necessary information is available. The legal secretariat does not have the facilities to produce the information requested at other than disproportionate cost. Nevertheless I can safely say that the vast majority of letters from hon. Members receive a substantive reply within two weeks.

Guildford Four

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will make it his policy to express apologies on behalf of the legal profession to Patrick Armstrong, Gerard Conlon, Carole Richardson, and Paul Hill for the miscarriage of justice they have suffered; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No. The outcome of Sir John May's inquiry may be expected to provide a reliable foundation for any comment on these cases.

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will make a statement on the current position regarding his proposed application to the courts to hold a fresh inquest in respect of the death of the late Petty Officer John Black, RN, at Sabinillas, Spain, in December 1983.

The Attorney-General: The application and supporting documents were lodged in the Crown Office at the High Court of Justice on 16 August. The Crown Office has not yet fixed a date for the hearing of the application.

Treasury Solicitor's Department

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes have been made to his class XX, vote 16, cash limit and running costs limit for the Treasury Solicitor's Department's estimate.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate the cash limit has been increased by £293,000 from £12,784,000 to £13,077,000 and the Department's running costs limit by £243,000 from £14,127,000 to £14,370,000. This increase has been charged to the Reserve and will not increase the planned total of public expenditure.

Agreement on the early implementation of the recommendations contained in Sir Robert Andrew's review of the Government legal service, which resulted in the setting up of the lawyers management unit and the early acquisition of a computerised system for repayment billing, was reached too late for provision to be taken in the main estimate, and is therefore reflected in this additional provision.

Legal Aid

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Attorney-General what evaluation is made by his and the Lord Chancellor's Department as to the progress of civil cases which are legally aided to ensure that public money is not wasted as a result of inefficiency or unnecessary delay by solicitors and counsel.

The Attorney-General: Neither my office nor the Lord Chancellor's Department evaluates the progress of civil cases which are legally aided.

It is the responsibility of the Legal Aid Board to establish controls to ensure that legally aided cases are not unjustifiably prolonged, and that expenses are not wasted or unnecessarily incurred. The board is in the process of preparing a case control procedure and will be reporting to the Lord Chancellor when this is settled.

TRANSPORT

Marine Rescue Services

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those coastguard stations equipped with MF radio.

Mr. McLoughlin: Every coastguard rescue centre except Belfast and Oban is fitted with an MF transceiver.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those coastguard stations which have not maintained a 24-hour watch on the MF frequencies together with the dates when they were off the air, in the last 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is no requirement for Her Majesty's coastguard to maintain a 24-hour watch on MF distress frequencies. The MF transceivers are provided at rescue centres for the conduct of search and rescue operations outwith VHF range. Her Majesty's coastguard contracts British Telecom International to maintain a continuous watch on the MF distress frequencies.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that Her Majesty's coastguard do not answer routine calls from unlicensed VHF installations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The majority of VHF transmissions to Her Majesty's coastguard are of a distress or safety nature. Much congestion on VHF already exists in some areas and attempts to verify that the installation is licensed would aggravate the congestion. Routine calls should be directed via British Telecom coast radio stations which are obliged to verify the installations licence for billing purposes.

InterCity Routes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about improvements to the main InterCity South Yorkshire to London line, and when they could be scheduled for implementation.

Mr. Portillo: InterCity services are a commercial matter for British Rail. Any new investment would need to earn a proper return. British Rail introduced improved services on the midland main line, with faster and more frequent trains, on 2 October.

Ilfracombe (Incident)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many minutes elapsed between the first reporting of an incident involving a child or children in difficulties in the sea at Ilfracombe on 16 August before the coastguard (a) was dispatched to the scene and (b) arrived at the scene.

Mr. McLoughlin: The first notification to Swansea MRCC of an incident at Ilfracombe on 16 August was by 999 telephone call at 1620 local time. The auxiliary coastguard at Ilfracombe was tasked at 1624, and arrived on scene at 1641. This first notification, from two sources, was of a person "on the rocks, cut off by tide". Swansea MRCC was subsequently advised at 1635 that a person was in the water, the helicopter was tasked, and was on scene within 10 minutes.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement explaining the reasons for any delay on the part of the coastguard in responding to the incident at Ilfracombe on 16 August in which Mark Woodward was drowned.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is not considered that there was any delay on the part of Her Majesty's coastguard at Swansea in acting on the information received regarding this tragic incident.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many personnel were scheduled to be on duty at Swansea coastguard station on 16 August.

Mr. McLoughlin: There were five persons detailed to be on watch on 16 August, comprising three regular coastguard officers, and two auxiliary coastguards.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the normal establishment of Swansea coastguard station.

Mr. McLoughlin: Swansea coastguard has a complement of 18 watchkeeping officers and a three-man district management team.

Emergency 999 Service

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has had any discussions with British Telecom about ways of improving the emergency 999 service since 16 August.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is a continuing programme of discussions between Her Majesty's coastguard and BTI in South Wales, on the 999 emergency service. Any problems encountered are the subject of an immediate reporting procedure, with follow-up discussion at subsequent meetings between BTI and senior members of the coastguard staff from Swansea coastguard region.

A69

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake a new survey of traffic flows on the A69 west of Hexham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: At present the Department has two permanent traffic counters west of Hexham on the A69 trunk road. One of these is east of Haltwhistle where regular counting takes place. The other is close to Greenhead village, and operates on alternate months.

A further two sites are proposed, one is to be located close to the Cumbria border, the other to the east of Haydon Bridge. The intention is to monitor and count these sites every alternate month.

The length of the A69 west of Hexham to the Cumbria border is approximately 20 miles and the Department considers that with all these counters in operation sufficient information will be available to keep a close check on the use of this section of the trunk road.

Merchant Navy Reserve

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current strength of the Merchant Navy Reserve.

Mr. McLoughlin: On 25 October 1989, membership of the Merchant Navy Reserve stood at 188.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Areas of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many areas of special scientific interest have been declared under the terms of article 24 of the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Twenty four.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland intends to declare the freshwater lagoon within the Belfast harbour estate known as BP1 (or D1) an area of special scientific interest.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Lagoons

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland issued the written consent for the infilling of the two lagoons known as BP1 and BP2.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Written consent under article 25 of the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 to the infilling of the two lagoons known as BP2 and BP3 (not BP1 and BP2) was issued by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on 16 March 1988. It was a condition of the consent that such infilling should not commence before 1 March 1993.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland received an application to infill the two lagoons in the Belfast harbour estate known as BP2 and BP3.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following lengthy discussions, formal written application was received on 16 March 1988.

Mr. Charles Haughey (Security)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many (a) soldiers of the regular Army, (b) members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, and (c) members of the Ulster Defence Regiment were deployed to provide security for the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport on 19 October;

(2) how many man hours were required in respect of (a) the regular Army, (b) the Ulster Defence Regiment and (c) the Royal Ulster Constabulary to provide security for the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport on 19 October;

(3) if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show the roads closed off by the security forces in the provision of security cover for the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport on 19 October, showing the periods for which each such road was closed off.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 October 1989]: No; it is not considered appropriate in the interests of security to give this information.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how may people live in the area covered by the security measures taken during the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport on 19 October.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 October 1989]: This information is not available.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if any members of the civic guards were at Eglinton airport on 19 October.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 October 1989]: It is not considered appropriate in the interests of security to give this information.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what restrictions were placed on the free movement of people in the Eglinton area due to the security measures taken during the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport on 19 October.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 October 1989]: There were no restrictions on the movement of people in the Eglinton area; however, some traffic disruption may have been experienced in the area as a result of the security operation which was mounted.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of the security measures taken on 19 October to cover the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport, broken down as far as is possible, into costs for (a) the regular Army, (b) the Ulster Defence Regiment and (c) the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 October 1989]: For security reasons, it is not considered appropriate to provide this information.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the total cost to (a) the Government of the United Kingdom and (b) the Londonderry council in relation to the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport on 19 October;

(2) whether any council employees were given advance notice of the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport on 19 October;

(3) whether councillors known to be members of Sinn Fein were given advance notice of the visit of Mr. Charles Haughey to Eglinton airport.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 October 1989]: The arrangements for the event were made by the company which funded and organised it. Therefore, apart from the cost of the security operation, no other public moneys were involved.

Gerard Conlon

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the questioning and holding of Gerard Conlon in Belfast on Tuesday 24 October.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 30 October 1989]: No. This is a matter for the chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary; if a complaint is made to him, it will be investigated.

THE ARTS

Exports Review

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he is able to announce the publication date of the report of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art for the year ended 30 June.

Mr. Luce: I have today presented the 35th report of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art for 1988-89. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House. I am particularly pleased such a prompt publication date has been achieved and I draw the attention of the House to the concise treatment given in the report to the role of the reviewing committee in the issue of export licences.

PRIME MINISTER

Public Holidays

Q24. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received concerning the pattern of public holidays.

The Prime Minister: A number of differing views have been expressed about the pattern of public holidays, including the position of the first Monday in May, which are under consideration.

Local Government Finance

Q60. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to deduct poll tax payments directly from payments of income support; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc (Scotland) Act 1987 was amended by the Local Government Finance Act 1988 to provide this additional power for the enforcement of community charge debts. The Community Charges (Deductions from Income Support) (Scotland) Reglations 1989 (SI 1989 No. 507) made under this power enable the social security adjudicating authorities to authorise deductions to be made from income support in Scotland to pay community charge debts. Deductions can only be made at the request of a charging authority which must first obtain a warrant from a court to prove the debt. Parallel regulations will apply in England and Wales from April 1990.

British Telecom

Q65. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received requesting that British Telecom be renationalised; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None. The public generally and British Telecom's 1·2 million private shareholders have benefited substantially from the 60 per cent. increase in investment, the 2,000 digital exchanges which have been installed and the increase in profitability and efficiency since British Telecom was privatised.

Law and Order

Q83. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the real term increase in Government expenditure on law and order since 1979.

The Prime Minister: In the current financial year spending on law and order services in England and Wales was increased in real terms by 73·5 per cent. over expenditure in 1978-79.

GATT

Q85. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the use of the general agreement on tariffs and trade as an arbitration in resolving disputes between the EEC and other trading groups.

The Prime Minister: The British Government, like our Community partners, strongly believe that the general agreement on tariffs and trade provides the best route for the resolution of trade disputes. We have pressed for improvements to its dispute settlement procedures in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations and an initial package of such measures is now in force following the December 1988 ministerial meeting in Montreal. We take all appropriate opportunities for reminding our Community partners of the importance we attach to GATT dispute settlement procedures, and the need to improve them still further.

Metropolitan Police

Q93. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received requesting that responsibility for the Metropolitan police be removed from the Home Secretary and placed in the hands of an elected authority.

The Prime Minister: I have received no such representations. I have every confidence in the present system. The Home Secretary, as police authority, is answerable to Parliament.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Q95. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has received any recent representations requesting the repeal of the Prevention of Terrorism Act.

The Prime Minister: I have received no such representations. We need to have firm measures to combat terrorism and the Prevention of Terrorism Act will remain in force for as long as necessary.

Labour Statistics

Q97. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement about the levels of unemployment since 1979.

The Prime Minister: In September 1989 the number of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 1,695,000. Unemployment has been falling for 38 consecutive months. It is now at its lowest level for nearly nine years, and well below the European Community average.

Corporate Taxation

Q100. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister what estimates she has made about the likely consequences for British industry and commerce of a rise or fall in the level of corporate taxation.

The Prime Minister: A change of one percentage point in the full rate of corporation tax from 1 April 1989 is estimated to have a full-year effect on tax payments of £580 million. An equivalent change in the small companies' rate is estimated to have a full-year effect of £50 million.

National Health Service

Q102. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received about the National Health Service.

The Prime Minister: Since the publication of the White Paper, "Working for Patients", my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health has received some 12,000 representations making suggestions or seeking further information about our proposals.

House of Lords

Q114. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received seeking the abolition of the House of Lords.

The Prime Minister: The Government receive representations from time to time advocating abolition or reform of the House of Lords.

Independent Schools

Q116. Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received in the past year seeking to abolish the assisted places scheme and withdraw charitable status from independent schools.

The Prime Minister: I have received no recent representations on these matters. This year the assisted places scheme will make available up to 33,000 places at 278 independent schools throughout England. The scheme continues to provide an important means by which parents who would not otherwise be able to afford to do so can receive financial help towards sending their children to independent schools.

Import Controls

Q118. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has received any requests for import controls to be imposed.

The Prime Minister: I have received very few requests to impose import controls. It is the Government's policy to promote free and fair trade and it is not generally to the United Kingdom's advantage to impose import restrictions.

Steel Industry

Q.120 Mr. Nelson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on progress made in rationalising the steel industry since 1979.

The Prime Minister: During the period since 1979 the Government promoted the Phoenix joint ventures involving private sector steel companies and the then nationalised British Steel Corporation and also a private sector steel scheme. These initiatives have now ceased, but they reduced product overlap between the private and public sectors and contributed towards rationalisation within the industry as a whole. British Steel itself was then returned to the private sector in December 1988 and recently announced record profits of £593 million compared with substantial losses while nationalised. Productivity in the United Kingdom steel industry rose by 151 per cent. between 1979 and 1988.

Further mergers and acquisitions have taken place within the industry as it adjusts and responds to the challenge of a competitive market.

Immigration

Q159. Sir William Clark: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received seeking repeal of the primary purpose rule and the Immigration Acts of 1971, 1981 and 1988.

The Prime Minister: The Home Secretary and I receive many representations from Members of Parliament and others about the operation of immigration and nationality legislation, including the primary purpose rule. The Government have no plans to remove the primary purpose test which is an important safeguard against abuse of the immigration rules.

Ethiopia

Q187. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Ethiopia.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

The Prime Minister: I receive an enormous number of letters each week from Members of Parliament and others. It is not possible for me to deal with all these letters personally and I must accordingly refer most of them to the Minister and the Department with the responsibility for the policy in question. All correspondence is dealt with as quickly as possible.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the implementation of the community charge and the uniform business rate.

The Prime Minister: Following the successful introduction of these arrangements in Scotland, I understand that most local authorities in England and Wales are making excellent progress in preparing for the new community charge and uniform business rating arrangements. Registration for the charge is proceeding smoothly and on time. I have every confidence that all authorities will wish to ensure that bills, with any necessary adjustment for transitional relief and rebates, will be issued to chargepayers on time next April.

Engagements

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 October.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 October.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 October.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 31 October.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an Audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chernobyl

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what compensation has been sought from the Soviet Union to offset payments made to

United Kingdom farmers for losses resulting from radioactive fallout contaminating land and animals after the Chernobyl accident in 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: The position remains as stated in the reply given to the hon. Member on 21 July 1986.

Paris Conference

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who were the United Kingdom's representatives at the recent Paris conference on the future of the Antarctic; what papers were presented by the delegation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom delegation at Paris consisted of Dr. J. A. Heap, Foreign and Commonwealth Office; Mr. N. Bonner, one time deputy director and head of life sciences division of the British Antarctic Survey; Mr. R. Cummins, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Mr. P. Hancock, Hydrographic Department, Ministry of Defence, and Mr. I. Hendry, Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Of about 89 working papers submitted to the meeting, the United Kingdom delegation was sole or joint author of 26. The papers dealt with aspects of environmental protection, encouragement of scientific research and operational safety in the Antarctic.

Human Rights

Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those Commonwealth Governments which have not yet acceded to or ratified international covenants on human rights.

Mr. Sainsbury: Thirty Commonwealth countries have not yet acceded to or ratified the international covenant on civil and political rights or the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belize, Botswana, Brunei, Dominica, Ghana, Grenada, Kiribati, Lesotho, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Nauru, Nigeria, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland, Tonga, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Western Samoa and Zimbabwe.

The Solomon Islands and Uganda have ratified the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights but not the international covenant on civil and political rights.

Cambodia

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance has been provided by Her Majesty's Government to Cambodian resistance groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Since 1979 we have provided over £13 million of assistance to Cambodians living along the Thai border in camps administered by the non-Communist resistance groups. So far this year we have donated £350,000 through the United Nations border relief operation. We have commited a further £120,000 to the non-Communist resistance for English language training and humanitarian assistance.

Mr. Fiassel Abdel Waheb Salem

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Mr. Fiassel Abdel Waheb Salem applied at Her Majesty's embassy in Cairo for a re-entry stamp in his passport to enable him to return to the United Kingdom; and what has been the cause of the delay in issuing it.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit in due course.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Fund for Agricultural Development

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the negotiations to replenish the International Fund for Agricultural Development; and what will be the United Kingdom's contribution.

Mrs. Chalker: I am glad to say that for its third replenishment IFAD will receive $566·3 million to cover its operations up to 30 June 1992. This compares with only $487 million pledged for the full three years' second replenishment. There will be two main components, "core funding" and "supplementary funding". The first consists of OPEC (category 2) pledges totalling $124·4 million and matching pledges by OECD donors (category 1) in the ratio 60:40 totalling $186·8 million. The second is made up of pledges from non-oil exporting developing countries (category 3) totalling $63·8 million and OECD matching contributions in the ratio 3:1 totalling $191·5 million. This second element is seen by both category 3 and category 1 as wholly exceptional and confined to this replenishment.

Britain's contribution to the replenishment will be £11·305 million ($19·8 million), comprising core funding of £5·098 million ($8·9 million), and a supplementary matching contribution of £6·217 million ($10·9 million). Parliamentary approval for this contribution will be sought in due course.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Unemployed People (Part-time Study)

100. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the position of unemployed people who undertake part-time study.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is the prime responsibility of unemployed people claiming benefit to make every effort to secure paid employment. So long as they remain available for and actively seeking employment, they are free to spend their spare time usefully by pursuing a course of part-time study. They must, though, organise their studies so that they can make adequate arrangements to seek work and must be prepared to break off their studies if a job opportunity arises.

21-hour Rule

101. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the continuance of the 21-hour rule.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to change the 21-hour rule.

Local Expenditure and Benefits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables on spending power using the assumptions in the answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 22 June 1988, Official Report, columns 571–76, but using expenditure and benefit figures appropriate for families in (a) Doncaster and (b) Wath-on-Dearne together with a column showing the extent of the differences resulting from the changes in April and October 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There were no prescribed procedures for uprating supplementary benefit, housing benefit or family income supplement—different elements of these schemes were uprated in different ways and by different indices at different times. It is impossible to say what the rates of these benefits would have been in April 1989 if the reform of social security had not been introduced in April 1988. A simple mechanistic uprating of the April 1987 system of benefits would be unrealistic. The tax benefit model tables for 1989 will be published shortly.

Correspondence

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the contents of the letter dated 7 June sent by Mrs. P. Henry of the class 4 group of the social security central office at Newcasle-upon-Tyne, relating to correspondence with people in Wales, represents his Department's policy on such matters.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department's policy is that local offices in Wales will reply in Welsh to any letters received in that language. However some social security matters are administered centrally from outside Wales. When correspondence from Wales, in Welsh, is received by any of these central offices it is normally answered in Welsh, provided the reply is one of substance and not, for example, a routine acknowledgment. Following the hon. Member's question, staff at Newcastle central office have been reminded to comply with this policy.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No information is available on the time taken to reply to correspondence before November 1988. Since then, 41 per cent. of letters from hon. and right hon. Members have received a reply within four weeks.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the numbers in receipt of housing benefit and (b) the average amount of benefit payment in constant terms for (i) Burnley and (ii) each region in England for the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimated number of housing benefit recipients in Burnley is given in the table. Similar estimates are not available on a regional basis. The average amount of housing benefit in payment is not available at local authority or regional level.

Estimated recipients of Housing Benefit in Burnley

Year	Number
1983–84	13,206
1984–85	11,356
1985–86	11,274
1986–87	11,346
1987–88	10,924
1988–89	8,436

Note: 1983-84 to 1987-88—estimates for caseload during the year.
1988–89—caseload count, 31 May 1988.

Child Support

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to amend existing legislation to ensure that non-custodial parents do more to meet their responsibilities to support their children; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: When income support is claimed by a lone parent, existing legislation places a duty on the non-custodial parent to meet their responsibilities wherever they can afford to do so. However, for over three quarters of lone parent families receiving income support the absent parent pays no maintenance at all. We are naturally concerned by this and will continue to look for ways to ensure that our efforts to obtain a contribution from non-custodial parents are even more effective.

Means Testing and Targeting

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what definition his Department uses of the terms (a) means testing and (b) targeting; and what is his policy towards the use of each.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Income-related or means-tested benefits are paid to people whose resources are below levels laid down by Parliament and who meet other tests of eligibility. Means testing is, therefore, one of the mechanisms which can be used to establish entitlement. Targeting, which means the effective and responsive provision of extra financial help to groups of people needing particular priority, is an important objective of social security policy. Thus, my right hon. Friend's uprating statement for April 1990, Official Report, 25 October, columns 841-54, continues the policy of targeting worthwhile extra help to groups like the less-well-off among families with children, elderly and disabled pensioners and the long-term sick and disabled.

Local Offices

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of his Department's local offices in Greater London he now plans to close; and what steps he is taking to ensure that income support claimants in the affected areas will still be able to have personal access to officers dealing with their cases.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department announced on 16 January that in order to improve service to customers in London it was moving backroom work not requiring face-to-face contact with the public out of 21 London local offices. Such work will be processed in three social security centres (SSCs) in Glasgow, Belfast and Ashton-in-Makerfield near Wigan.

I must stress that the Department has no plans to close any of its offices in London as a result of this relocation of work. A full network of branch offices will be retained in London to carry out that work which does need face-to-face contact with our customers. Indeed, we are planning to open wholly new branch offices in two localities—Wembley and Dulwich—where we do not have any provision at the moment.

Social security claimants in the areas affected by the relocation of work will be able to call at any branch office in their district to conduct their business. Alternatively, by using a special telephone number, they will be able to talk directly to the person dealing with their claim in the social security centre. All calls to the SSC will be charged at the London local call rate.

Housing Benefit

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers in receipt of housing benefit and the average level of housing benefit payments in (a) Dundee district and (b) Scotland in each of the past 10 years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 19 October 1989]: The estimated numbers receiving rent rebates or rent allowance are given in the table. The average amount of housing benefit in payment is not available at local authority level.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Banking Services Review

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government has completed its consideration of the findings of the review committee of banking services law, published in February; and if he will make a statement on how these considerations will affect the banking ombudsman system.

Mr. Ryder: The Government are still considering a number of detailed comments on the review committee's recommendations. The report was widely welcomed as presenting an extremely clear and comprehensive critique of the present law on banking services, but reservations were expressed about some of the recommendations. The Government are considering these comments very carefully in formulating their response.

Currency Reserves

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his practice to publish a report of major movements in the total and composition of the United Kingdom currency reserves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The change in the level of the United Kingdom official reserves is published each month. I see no reason to change the practice of successive Governments regarding disclosure of details of the composition of the reserves.

Cash Limits

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there will be any changes to the Treasury's cash and running costs limits in 1989-90.

Mr. Major: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIX, vote 11 will be increased by £1,004,000 from £55,779,000 to £56,783,000.

This increase reflects the take-up of entitlement to carry forward underspending in 1988-89 under the end of year flexibility arrangements, as I announced on 20 July 1989 at columns 258-62. The full entitlement of £661,000 on capital expenditure is taken up together with £223,000 of the £302,000 entitlement on running costs. Additionally, it reflects an increase in expenditure of £35,000 by the History of Parliament Trust to meet the costs of additional research staff. These increases will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

There is also an increase in provision of £85,000 to meet the setting-up costs at Chessington computer centre prior to the take-on of new payroll work, which will be offset by corresponding decreases in running costs limits of other Departments, as well as an increase to meet the increased costs of services provided by the Government Actuary's Department, which will be offset by a corresponding payment from the Government Actuary's Department vote (class XIX, vote 4).

As a result, the running costs limit of Her Majesty's Treasury will be increased by £308,000 from £74,944,000 to £75,252,000.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any changes are proposed in the cash limit and running cost limit for 1989-90 for the Inland Revenue.

[illegible] Lilley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIX vote 7 will be increased from £1,209,573,000 to £1,234,973,000 and the running cost limit from £1,174,692,000 to £1;202,092,000. The changes in running costs reflect the amount agreed for the Department under the running costs end-year flexibility scheme, and to enable the Department to meet its forecast work loads including setting up independent taxation. The increase will be charged to the Reserve and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure.

Civil Service Pay

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish a list of the pay agreements in the Civil Service and in the public services sector which make reference to inter-quartile settlement levels in the private sector; if he will state the annual period of time used as the base period for such inter-quartile settlement figures and the gap of time before the effective date of pay increases under each agreement; and if he will state the approximate number of employees and the total annual pay bill under each agreement;

(2) what is the longest period of time in any Civil Service or public services sector pay agreement between the relevant period of data collection, such as inter-quartile settlement levels in the private sector and the effective date of pay increases under the agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: There are now six long-term flexible pay agreements covering separate groups of staff in the Civil Service which take the inter-quartile range of settlements in the private sector as a negotiating constraint. There are no similar arrangements in the rest of the public services sector. The relevant inter-quartile range of pay settlements is available to the parties to the pay agreements approximately one month before the settlement date and takes account of pay settlements in the private sector over the previous 12 months.

The six pay agreements in the Civil Service together with the number of employees on the basic pay bill covered by each is as follows:

Main grades covered	Number of employees	1989-90 paybill £ million[1]
1. Scientific and technical grades	55,000	755
2. Departmental grades in the Inland Revenue	60,000	570
3. Grades 5 to 7	23,000	585
4. Executive and office support grades	130,000	1,625
5. Clerical, typing and secretarial grades	195,000	1,350
6. Industrial grades	68,000	590

Privatisation

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what have been the total sums in debt and financial liabilities written off in each case of privatisation since 1979, both at current prices and at 1989 prices; and in each case how capital reconstruction altered the balance sheet in relation with the profit or loss position beforehand;

(2) how much in write-offs was granted to each company and industry privatised since 1979; and how much is planned over the next three years.

Mr. Peter Lilley [holding answers 18 and 19 October 1989]: The normal practice on privatisation—of a nationalised industry or company wholly or majority owned by Government—is to repay, rather than write off debt. This repayment may be financed from the company's existing resources, the injection of new equity, or new debt finance. In some cases, the Government provide the finance to repay debts, for example, by an equity injection. Such finance is shown in the relevant departmental

National loan fund debt has been formally written off only in the following privatisation cases:

Year	Company	Amount £
1980-81	National Freight Corporation (under Section 45 of the Transport Act 1980)	100,000,000
1982-83	British Transport Docks Board (under Section 6(1) of the Transport Act 1981)	81,293,616
1984-85	British Telecom (BT (Extinguishment of Loans) Order 1982)	2,789,865,772
1986-87	BAA (under section 3 of the Airports Act 1986)	43,503,340

Details of the debt write-offs proposed for the 10 water plcs are set out in the reply by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) on 26 October 1989.

These write-offs had no direct effect on public expenditure in as much as they represented a reconstruction of the balance sheets of the industries concerned. In each case, having had NLF debt written off, the successor company issued new securities to be held by the Secretary of State as assets of the Consolidated Fund pending realisation.

Public dividend capital has been reduced in three privatisation cases:

Year	Company	Amount £
1980-81	British Airways Board (under the Civil Aviation Act 1980 S1(1))	160,000,000
1980-81	British Aerospace (under the British Aerospace Act 1980)	60,000,000
1988-89	British Steel (under the British Steel Act 1988)	500,000,000

A further £3,480,000,000 of borrowing by British Steel under the Iron and Steel Act 1982 (S18(1)) was written off on privatisation.

Details of the capital reconstruction of the companies concerned can be found in the individual prospectuses.

Any further write-offs over the next three years will be announced at the time of a specific privatisation.

Charity Shops

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to oppose the proposed extension of value added tax to goods donated to charity shops.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 24 October 1989]: The Government have no plans to alter the VAT relief for donated goods sold by charity shops and will not accept any proposals from the EC Commission which affect the United Kingdom's ability to apply zero rates. Changes to EC tax law require unanimity, and there is no question of any unwelcome proposals being forced upon us.

Interest Rates

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were (a) the ratio of inflation and (b) the levels of interest rates in each of the EEC countries, Japan and the United States of America for the most recent dates for which figures are available.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 26 October 1989]: Following is the information requested:

Inflation and short-term interest rates in the EC, United States and Japan

	Short-term interest rates[1]	12 month inflation rates excluding estimates of home-owners costs[2]
United Kingdom	15·1	5·8
United States	8·5	4·7
Japan	6·4	3·0
Germany	8·2	2·8
France	10·1	3·4
Italy	13·0	6·6

Manufacturing Output (East Midlands)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much manufacturing output in the east midlands has changed since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 26 October 1989]: Gross value added in manufacturing industry in the east midlands rose by 90 per cent. between 1979 and 1987, the latest year for which figures are available. The corresponding figure for the United Kingdom was 66 per cent.

These figures measure changes in the value of output; changes in volume would be smaller.

VAT

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of value added tax refund claims under Customs and Excise notice 719 processed during 1988-89.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 27 October 1989]: The number of claims under Customs and Excise notice 719 (Refund of VAT to Do-It-Yourself Builders) processed in 1988-89 was 9,052.

Charities (Scotland)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes will be required to the administrative arrangements and the requirements for confidentiality in the Inland Revenue in order to implement the Government's proposals for the improved regulation of charities in Scotland.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 30 October 1989]: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 23 October, legislation will be introduced to enable the Inland Revenue to disclose the names and addresses of bodies in Scotland which it has recognised as charitable for tax purposes. The rules of confidentiality under which the Inland Revenue normally operates will be modified for this specific purpose.

When the legislation is enacted, arrangements will be made for members of the public to find out from the Inland Revenue claims branch in Edinburgh whether a body has been recognised by it as charitable for tax purposes.

Statistics (Report)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the report, "Accessibility and Other Problems Relating to Statistics Used by Social Sciences" prepared by Professor Bernard Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council;

(2) what are the conclusions of the report, "Accessibility and Other Problems Relating to Statistics Used by Social Sciences" prepared by Professor Bernard Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council on the quality of Government statistics collected by the Government statistical service since the Rayner review;

(3) what are the principal conclusions on the education statistics made in the report, "Accessibility and Other Problems Relating to Statistics Used by Social Sciences" prepared by Professor Bernard Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council;

(4) what are the principal conclusions on unemployment statistics made in the report, "Accessibility and Other Problems Relating to Statistics Used by Social Sciences" prepared by Professor Bernard Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council;

(5) what is the reason for the delay in the publication of the report, "Accessibility and Other Problems Relating to Statistics Used by Social Sciences" prepared by Professor Bernard Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council;

(6) what were the principal conclusions on the objectivity of Government statistical presentation made in the report, "Accessibility and Other Problems Relating to Statistics Used by Social Sciences" prepared by Professor Bernard Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council;

(7) when he will authorise the publication of the report, "Accessibility and Other Problems Relating to Statistics Used by Social Sciences" prepared by Professor Bernard Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council;

(8) when the report, "Accessibility and Other Problems Relating to Statistics Used by Social Sciences", prepared by Professor Bernard Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council was completed and presented for consideration.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 30 October 1989]: Professor Benjamin was commissioned by the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) to prepare a report for the ESRC and the Royal Statistical Society on the accessibility and availability of official statistics for social science researchers. Questions on the conclusions and publication of the report are matters for these two bodies.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

13. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has come to a decision on the future of wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: No.

Construction Industry Training Board

18. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the future of the construction industry training board.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly.

Workplace Nurseries

19. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary for Employment what recent discussions he has had concerning workplace nurseries.

Mr. Nicholls: I have had discussions on child care, including the provision of workplace nurseries, with my advisory committee on women's employment. This committee includes the EOC chair, my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson), representatives of the CBI, TUC and the Women's National Commission.

I am also a member of the ministerial group on women's issues which has been looking at the whole question of child care.

I have also had discussions on child care, including workplace nurseries, with the National Council for One Parent Families, the Working Mothers Association, the National Out of School Alliance, the Pre-School Playgroups Association and the National Childminding Association and have attended and spoken at a number of conferences dealing with these and related matters.

Construction Workers (Safety)

20. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for improving the safety of workers on construction sites.

Mr. Nicholls: I shortly expect to bring before the House legislation to make the wearing of safety helmets on site compulsory. The HSC has recently published a consultative document setting out proposals for strengthening the management of health and safety on sites and HSE inspectors will be paying more attention to site management. The HSE has increased the number of inspectors dedicated to the construction industry and aims to have 100 by 1990.

Training and Enterprise Councils

21. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision his Department has made for the provision of employment training and YTS under the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Eggar: The Training Agency will contract with training and enterprise councils to deliver employment training and YTS in their areas.

23. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many areas have now made applications to set up training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Fowler: To date, 40 applications for development funding from prospective training and enterprise councils have been received by the national training task force. A table that lists the areas from which applications have been received has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

30. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made in establishing training and enterprise councils in the south-east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers in the south-east and throughout the country to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils. Some 40 groups of senior employers from around the country have applied for development funding of which six are from employer groups in the south-east.

52. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department will monitor the spending of public funds by the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Nicholls: Training and enterprise councils will be required to submit an income and expenditure account for each programme funded by my Department at the end of every four-week accounting period. In addition, TECs will be required to submit a balance sheet showing their financial position at the end of each accounting period.

53. Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made in establishing training and enterprise councils in the west country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers in the west country and throughout the country to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils.

Some 40 groups of senior employers from around the country have applied for development funding, of which four are from employer groups in the Training Agency's south-west region.

48. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to ensure that training and enterprise councils provide a uniform quality of training provision throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: In England and Wales, training and enterprise councils will arrange training provision within a broad national framework, to suit local circumstances. The TECs will be required to set out their strategy for delivering quality training in their corporate and business plans. In Scotland, local enterprise companies will have similar arrangements for ensuring quality training.

58. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made in establishing training and enterprise councils in the east midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers in the east midlands and throughout the country to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils.

Some 40 groups of senior employers from around the country have applied for development funding, of which three are from employer groups in the Training Agency's east midlands and eastern region.

60. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in establishing training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

93. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made in establishing training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers throughout the country to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils.

A total of 40 groups of senior employers in England and Wales have applied for development funding, of which 31 have been approved; the table lists the areas from which we have had applications and indicates their status.

77. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how training and enterprise councils will respond to the interests of small firms and voluntary organisations within the local community.

Mr. Nicholls: Training and enterprise councils will be expected to undertake a comprehensive assessment of local market needs to enable them to draw up their corporate and business plans. Consultation with a range of organisations and individuals, including employers of all sizes and voluntary organisations, will be vital to this assessment.

90. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made in establishing training and enterprise councils in East Anglia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers in East Anglia and throughout the country to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils. A total of 40 groups of senior employers in England and Wales have applied for development funding, of which three are from the East Anglia area.

95. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the small business support programmes of the training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Nicholls: Training and enterprise councils will be directly responsible for the major current programmes which help small firms and promote self-employment. These include the enterprise allowance scheme, business growth training, enterprise in employment training and counselling for small firms in England. Some training and enterprise councils are also being invited to run elements of the Department of Trade and Industry's enterprise initiative. The councils will also be able to use their local initiative fund to strengthen and expand existing programmes and services or to finance new initiatives to support business growth and enterprise.

EC Social Charter

22. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the latest position concerning the European social charter.

33. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response his Department has made to the European Commission's draft social charter.

69. Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any representations about the effect on employment of the European Commission's proposed social charter.

83. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any further representation on the social charter; and if he will make a statement.

98. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress on the negotiations between European Community Employment Ministers on the social charter.

Mr. Fowler: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) earlier today.

89. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he plans to have further discussions with his European counterparts concerning the proposed European social charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I will next meet my counterparts in the European Community at the meeting of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers on 30 November. The European Commission's proposal for a social charter is not presently on the agenda of that meeting.

72. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Commission of the EEC has yet notified member states as to whether it intends to present social charter directives to be determined by majority vote; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The European Commission has indicated its intention to present an action programme of social measures to the Council of Ministers before the end of the year. The Commission has not yet notified member states of the voting arrangements of any directives which they may bring forward.

Public Sector Strikes

24. Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any recent representations about strikes in the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Representations have been received from a variety of organisations. The Government are reviewing the law on industrial action. Proposals made in the Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" aim to discourage "wildcat" action in public and private sectors alike.

40. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to combat strikes in the public sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government are reviewing the law on industrial action. Proposals made in the Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" aim to discourage "wildcat" action in public and private sectors alike.

Training

25. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have completed the new entrants training scheme to date.

Mr. Nicholls: It is estimated that 239,000 people had left employment training by the end of September 1989, the latest date for which information is available. We cannot say at present how many of these people had completed their planned training.

46. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department intends to encourage training provision for those aged 16 to 19 years in employment.

Mr. Nicholls: Training and enterprise councils will pursue the Government's aim that all young people in the labour market participate in vocational training leading to recognised qualifications.

The opportunity to undertake training is already available to all young people eligible for YTS. As the number of school leavers diminishes those seeking jobs will be looking for jobs with training. Now is the right time for all employers recruiting young people to take advantage of YTS and give a real commitment to training.

66. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department intends to encourage the numbers of trainees and apprentices in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Nicholls: Many employers in manufacturing participate in YTS for training young people, including apprentices. The Government will continue to encourage employers to make quality, vocational training available to all young people as the best way of meeting the skill needs of the modern economy.

74. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department will encourage the provision of training to those persons aged 25 years and over.

Mr. Nicholls: Responsibility for training for employed people rests primarily with employers and individuals. Training and enterprise councils will have a key role to play in encouraging employers to train the whole of their work force throughout working life. The business growth training programme and other measures taken by my Department to raise employers' awareness of the importance of training will help in this. My Department will continue to develop employment training as a quality training programme which is available to people aged 25 and over who are eligible.

85. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage private employers to provide more extensive training opportunities.

96. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to encourage the provision of training by employers.

Mr. Nicholls: Training and enterprise councils in England and Wales and local enterprise companies in Scotland will ensure that private sector employers lead Britain's training effort into the 1990s. They will increase employer commitment to training and will use private and public resources. In particular they will support employers through business growth training.

Labour Statistics

17. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people in full-time employment.

Mr. Fowler: In June 1989 the number of people in full-time employment in Great Britain was 19,482,000, an increase of over a quarter of a million since June 1988.

26. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which regions of the United Kingdom the unemployment rate has fallen most rapidly over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In the 12 months to September 1989 the region which experienced the largest fall in the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was west midlands which fell by 2·5 percentage points to 6 per cent. followed by the north and Wales which both fell by 2·4 percentage points to 9·3 and 7·2 per cent. respectively. This compares with a fall of 1·8 percentage points in the United Kingdom in the last 12 months to 6 per cent.

29. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider introducing arrangements to allow independent scrutiny of unemployment statistics.

Mr. Nicholls: Details of the methodologies used to compile this Department's unemployment statistics are well documented and in the public domain.

54. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will detail the unemployment figures for the Barnstaple and Ilfracombe travel-to-work area for August 1979, August 1984 and August 1989, respectively.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the Barnstaple and Ilfracombe travel-to-work area in August 1989 and August 1984, along with the number of unemployed registrants in the Barnstaple and Ilfracombe jobcentre-based travel-to-work areas in August 1979. The figures are affected by the changes in the boundaries of travel-to-work areas as well as the changes in the coverage of the unemployment count.

62. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the average monthly fall in the number of long-term unemployed aged under 25 in the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Unemployment figures by age and duration are calculated on a quarterly basis. Between July 1984 and July 1989, the number of unemployed claimants aged 18 to 24 years in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for one year or more fell by an average of 11,142 per quarter. This comparison is affected by the change in compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and by the change in benefit regulations for under 18-year-olds in September 1988.

68. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the fall in unemployment in the northern region.

Mr. Nicholls: In the 12 months to September 1989 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the north fell by 35,000 or 28·9 per cent., on a consistent basis. Unemployment in the north is now at its lowest level for nearly nine years, as it is in the country as a whole.

81. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of job vacancies currently notified to his Department in the Birmingham travel-to-work area; and what was the figure 12 months ago.

Mr. Nicholls: In September 1989 the number of notified vacancies at jobcentres in the Birmingham travel-to-work area was 6,021 compared to 4,689 12 months ago. Vacancies at jobcentres do not represent the total number of vacancies in the economy. Research shows that nationally only about one third of vacancies are notified to jobcentres; however a recent survey covering part of the west midlands region shows that the stock of vacancies held at jobcentres in this area is about one quarter of the total.

88. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of unemployment in the Rugby and Daventry travel-to-work area.

Mr. Nicholls: In September 1989 in the Rugby and Daventry travel-to-work area there were 1,935 unemployed claimants or 3·3 per cent. of the estimated total work force.

94. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days were lost in industrial disputes (a) in the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available and (b) in 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of 4,568,000 working days were lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in the most recent 12-month period ending in August 1989. In 1978, a total of 9,405,000 working days were lost.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Derbyshire are currently unemployed; and by what percentage this figure has changed in the last year.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 26 October 1989]: In September 1989 the number of unemployed claimants in Derbyshire was 25,859. This compares to a total of 38,275 in September 1988, a fall of 32·4 per cent.

These unadjusted unemployment figures are slightly affected by the change in benefit regulations for under 18-year-olds in September 1988.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has had from trade unions about the understaffing of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: Since the beginning of 1989, my right hon. Friend has had representations about the staffing of the Health and Safety Executive from the Scottish Trades Union Congress (STUC), the Union of Construction, Allied Trades and Technicians (UCATT), and the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Unions (CSEU).

Mr Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 October 1989, a total of 1,204·5 inspectors were in post in the Health and Safety Executive. The executive plans to increase the total number of inspectors employed to 1,277 by 1 April 1990.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many members of the Health and Safety Executive's management board possess (a) professional management or (b) professional accounting qualifications.

Mr. Nicholls: One member of the Health and Safety Executive management board holds a professional management qualification. None of the members holds a professional accounting qualification.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff, and of which grades, are employed in the Health and Safety Executive's press department.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of staff and their grades employed in the Health and Safety Executive press department as at 1 October 1989 is as follows:

1 Grade 7
5 Senior Press Officers (SIO Grade)
2 Press Officers (IO Grade)
1 Executive Officer
1 Administrative Officer
1 Administrative Assistant
1 Personal Secretary
1 Part-time Personal Secretary

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to appoint the ninth Health and Safety Commission commissioner.

Mr. Nicholls: On 29 September my right hon. Friend announced his intention to replace a member of the commission, who had indicated that he was unable to continue as a commissioner, and reappoint the remaining seven commissioners for a further period of six months. In the interim, my right hon. Friend will consider reconstituting the commission, and bearing in mind the increasingly important role played by the commission, he is giving consideration to the appointment of a ninth member. My right hon. Friend will announce the new appointments early next year.

YTS

28. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether all persons aged 16 years who seek a YTS place are now offered one.

Mr. Nicholls: Under the Government's guarantee over 500,000 places are available to YTS eligible young people aged 16 and 17. Young people should consult the careers service to see which particular training place is suitable for them. If there are particular difficulties in individual cases careers officers have been asked to approach the Training Agency for assistance as necessary.

51. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to reduce the accident rate among peope while participating in YTS.

Mr. Nicholls: I am introducing a more vigorous description of health and safety arrangements as part of the YTS contract, and also an improved approach to monitoring which reflects assessment of the degree of risk. I have also set up two exercises to assist with further policy development. An independent study of the YTS accident statistics has been set up which will be published in the spring of next year, and a review of general YTS health and safety arrangements by the Training Agency and HSE is now in progress.

44. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that sufficient YTS places exist throughout the United Kingdom for those aged 16 and 17 years seeking such a place.

Mr. Nicholls: Particular care is taken to ensure that there are enough YTS places to meet demand throughout the year. There are currently close to 400,000 young people in YTS. My Department has in total contracted with managing agents for over 500,000 places to be available.

Employment Training

31. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many local authorities have withdrawn from employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Seven local authorities have withdrawn from employment training. These are: Barrow borough council; Rochdale metropolitan borough council; Wolverhampton metropolitan borough council; Nottinghamshire county council and Cleveland county council, which withdrew because of political decisions; and London borough of Merton and London borough of Barnet, which withdrew because of operational difficulties.

57. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to grant approved training organisation status to employment training agents and managers.

Mr. Nicholls: Approved status will be granted to the first groups of employment training agents and managers during April and May 1990.

35. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from individuals or organisations over participants in the Government's employment training scheme leaving the scheme before completing their training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department has received various representations about employment training. These all receive careful consideration. Many people leave employment training in order to take jobs, though it is possible to continue the training while being employed.

65. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training trainees have received the full or part of the training bonus.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not yet available on the number of trainees receiving training bonuses.

73. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the names of those employment training training agents that have been given approved status since the inception of employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: No employment training training agents have yet been granted approved status. All organisations that have applied to become training agents have until September 1990 to satisfy the rigorous criteria for gaining approved status.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for Great Britain and each standard Training Agency region, what are the monthly statistics for the latest available four months for employment training showing (a) the number of referrals to employment training from Restart interviews, (b) the number of employment training action plans completed, (c) the number of starts with employment training training managers, (d) the number of employment training filled places and (e) the number of profiled or contracted employment training places.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the numbers of referrals to employment training from restart interviews are given in table 1. The numbers of action plans agreed at training agents are given in table 2. The numbers of starts and filled places are given in tables 3 and 4. The numbers of contracted places as at 30 September, the only date for which information is available, are given in table 5.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the nature of the relationship between employment training training managers and local education authorities.

Mr. Nicholls: Local education authorities, like any other organisations, may apply to become either training agents or training managers within employment training. They may also choose to act as subcontractors to training managers.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently undertaking employment training in the north-west of England.

Mr. Nicholls: On 13 October, the latest date for which information is available, there were 28,800 people on employment training in the north-west of England.

Cooling-off Periods

32. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about his proposals for statutory cooling-off periods in industrial disputes.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government are reviewing the law on industrial action.

Manufacturing Productivity

34. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the average annual growth in manufacturing productivity since 1980 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) and other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows:

Manufacturing output per person employed[1] 1980–1988

Unofficial Strikes

36. Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any representations about unofficial strikes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations on unofficial industrial action from a wide variety of sources. Proposals for reform of industrial relations law to limit the scope for such action have been made in the Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" (Cm. 821).

50. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce legislation to enable employers to dismiss employees who have taken part in unofficial industrial action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" (Cm. 821) proposes changes to industrial relations and trade union law to discourage wildcat industrial action. It includes proposals which would allow greater freedom for employers to dismiss those who choose to take unofficial industrial action.

42. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to introduce his proposals to reform the law covering unofficial strike action.

Mr. Nicholls: These proposals were published for public consultation in the Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" (Cm. 821), which invites comments by 1 December.

71. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he plans to meet representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss forthcoming legislation on unofficial strikes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend regularly meets representatives of the Trades Union Congress to discuss a wide range of employment issues. He has no current plans for such a meeting.

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to make unofficial strikes illegal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Unofficial, "wildcat" industrial action is a deep-rooted and long-standing industrial relations problem. It can cause disproportionate damage to businesses and to jobs because of its unpredictable and disruptive nature. It can also cause serious inconvenience to the general public, as in the industrial action affecting the London Underground and British Rail last summer.

The Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" proposes a number of changes in the law to discourage wildcat industrial action, by extending union responsibility and giving employers greater freedom to dismiss those taking unofficial action.

Skills Training

37. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures he is considering to upgrade the skills of young people.

47. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures he is considering to upgrade the skills of young persons.

49. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures he is considering to upgrade the skills of young persons.

92. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures he is considering to upgrade the skills of young persons.

Mr. Nicholls: The White Paper "Employment for the 1990s" (Cm. 540) announced the formation of local enterprise companies in Scotland and training and enterprise councils in England and Wales. These are being given the task of assessing the key skill needs, prospects for expanded job growth and the adequacy of existing training arrangements in their local labour market. It will be for the councils to develop strategies and measures that will meet the higher skill needs of the economy.

The White Paper also stated that YTS would be reviewed in the light of the changing labour market. I shall announce shortly the results of this review.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

38. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of whether the enterprise allowance scheme provides value for money in creating new jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The efficiency unit and the National Audit Office have both endorsed the scheme as a value-for-money employment measure. Survey evidence shows that 65 per cent. of those people who complete their year in the scheme are still operating their business three years after start-up. These same surveys also show that for every 100 businesses still trading at this stage 114 additional jobs have been created.

76. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have participated in the enterprise allowance scheme since its launch in 1983.

Mr. Eggar: Over 470,000 people have participated in the enterprise allowance scheme since it began in 1982.

Benefit Fraud

39. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been found to be signing for benefit while working during each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The number of people who have withdrawn their claims to benefit as a result of investigations by this Department's fraud investigators over the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1984-85	22,500
1985-86	37,500
1986-87	59,500
1987-88	80,000

61. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's exercise on the south coast of England to detect benefit fraud among seasonal workers in the tourism industry.

Mr. Eggar: The south coast exercise, which was carried out between May and September 1989 and covered the area from Worthing to the New Forest, investigated possible benefit fraud amongst seasonal workers in the tourism industry. A total of 2,380 investigations were undertaken with 634 people withdrawing their claims to benefit. This resulted in net benefit savings of £487,750 and 31 prosecution cases, two of which are collusive employers.

Electrical Engineering (Skill Shortages)

41. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on skill shortages in electrical engineering.

Mr. Nicholls: The growth in the economy during recent years, along with new technological developments, has created a strong demand for staff in the electrical engineering industry, especially those at technician and professional levels. The Government's response to meeting skill needs is set out in the White Paper "Employment in the 1990's" (Cm. 540).

Unemployment Benefit (Merseyside)

43. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of persons whose entitlement to unemployment benefit was disallowed because they were considered not to be available for work in the adjudication area covering Merseyside for each quarter since June 1988.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows the number of persons whose entitlement to unemployment benefit was disallowed because they were considered not to be available for work for the period and area requested.

Quarter ending	Number disallowed
30 June 1988	160
30 September 1988	118
31 December 1988	142
31 March 1989	146
30 June 1989	106
30 September 1989	136

Unemployment Surveys

45. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will be commissioning any further surveys into long-term unemployment in certain areas of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Surveys of both longer-term unemployed people and employers in the Bristol area have been commissioned in partnership with the Bristol urban development corporation and interviews are currently taking place. There are no plans at present for further surveys in other areas.

Secondary Industrial Action

55. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to legalise secondary action.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The March 1989 Green Paper "Removing Barriers to Employment" (Cm. 655) proposes changes to the present law to make it unlawful to induce industrial action by workers of an employer not party to a trade dispute except in the case of lawful picketing.

Unemployed Benefit Claimants

56. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding the new test that unemployment benefit claimants have to satisfy proving they are actively seeking work.

Mr. Eggar: The "actively seeking employment" condition applies to all claimants and will normally be satisfied by a simple declaration when a person claims benefit—usually fortnightly. It is too early to provide any figures for the number of those interviewed about their job search by employment service counsellors. This change is a timely and appropriate modernisation of unemployment benefit law.

Aberdeen Journals Limited

59. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has considered the implications for his legislative programme arising from the developments in the industrial dispute between Aberdeen Journals Ltd. and the National Union of Journalists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no such implications.

Job Clubs

63. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce specialist job clubs for specific industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have no plans to introduce further job clubs for specific industries. In general job clubs work best by having members from different backgrounds working together to find jobs.

There are currently three job clubs, in London, Birmingham and Manchester, which specialise in helping people seeking work in the hotel and catering industry. It is too early to assess the results they are achieving.

I am pleased with the continuing success of the job club programme, with over 54,000 people being helped so far this financial year; 54 per cent. have gone into jobs and 14 per cent. into other positive outcomes, including training, further education and self-employment.

Pensioners (Employment)

64. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice his Department is issuing to employers about employing those drawing retirement pension.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government believe that employers should see older workers as a valuable resource. Demographic trends mean it is more important than ever that employers use the talents which older workers can contribute to the economy. Although recruitment decisions must be left to employers, in making them they should not discriminate unfairly on age grounds. They should also be considering how best to use workers who want to continue beyond retirement pension age. We are putting these messages across to employers through various media, thus creating opportunities for workers over retirement pension age to remain in or return to employment if they so wish.

Vocational Qualifications

67. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on those achieving vocational qualifications in retail business in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: The number achieving full retail vocational qualifications in the United Kingdom during the academic year 1988-89 was 11,536. In addition, the Scottish Vocational Education Council awarded 7,332 modules for retail distribution.

86. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department intends to increase the numbers of those achieving vocational qualifications in clothing in Britain.

Mr. Nicholls: Work on national vocational qualifications (NVQs) for the clothing industry is being co-ordinated by the clothing and allied products industry training board (CAPITB).

With encouragement from the then Manpower Services Commission, the CAPITB was among the first industry training boards to develop NVQs based on occupational standards. There are already considerable numbers of young people training towards NVQs as machinists, an occupation in which previously few employees were qualified. The Training Agency of the Employment Department has required that those on YTS for machining occupations within the clothing industry are given the opportunity of working towards the NVQ or credit towards it.

In addition, the CAPITB is receiving specialist advice and a substantial amount of money via the Training Agency's standards programme to assist it to develop high-quality NVQs which reflect the competences employees need to work in other areas of the industry such as cutting and pressing.

Skills Training Agency

70. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress his Department is making towards the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency.

Mr. Nicholls: An advertisement about the offer of the Skills Training Agency (STA) for sale appeared in the press in September. The response to the advertisement has been encouraging. My sale advisers, Deloitte Corporate Finance, have issued over 100 copies of an information memorandum about STA to potential bidders who have signed a confidentiality undertaking. The next stage of the sale process will be to draw up a shortlist of bidders whose intentions are to run a training business.

Disabled People (Employment)

75. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he is planning any new initiatives to increase employment opportunities for disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: The Department's general employment and training programmes are designed to help meet the needs of as many people with disabilities as possible. They are supplemented as necessary by a range of provision specifically for people with disabilities including sheltered employment for those with severe disabilities. These programmes are the subject of a review, the results of which will be made available as soon as possible.

Industrial Action (Ballots)

78. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responses he has received on the draft statutory code of practice on industrial action balloting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Various representations were received on the draft code of practice on industrial action balloting during the public consultation period. A modified draft was laid before Parliament on 7 September, and approval for its issue will be sought.

Trade Unions (Sequestration of Assets)

79. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received seeking repeal of the legislation on sequestration of union assets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government receive representations on various aspects of industrial relations law from a variety of sources. Sequestration is a penalty that may be imposed by courts, where appropriate, for contempt of court. There is no specific employment law for the sequestration of union assets

Staff Dispersal

80. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress his Department has made in relocating its staff from London to the regions.

Mr. Eggar: On 3 August 1989 I announced that 1,100 jobs from my Department's headquarters in London and Watford would be moved to Runcorn and Sheffield over the next two to three years. I can report to this House that good progress is being made and the first phase of the move will begin, on schedule, in spring 1990.

Industrial Disputes (Legal Action)

82. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received seeking the transfer from the High Court to tribunals of consideration of industrial disputes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Various representations about industrial relations law are received from a variety of sources. Industrial tribunals currently have jurisdiction to determine complaints about certain individual employment protection rights and other matters which may relate to industrial disputes.

Strikes

84. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many strikes there have been (a) in the public sector and (b) in the private sector on average over the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In the 10 years to 1988 the annual average of recorded stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in the public sector was 541 while in the private sector the average was 720. These statistics exclude stoppages of work involving fewer than 10 workers or lasting less than one day unless the total number of working days lost in the stoppage is greater than 100. This exclusion will have a smaller effect on the public sector figures where the negotiating groups tend to be larger.

Women Workers

87. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being considered to attract women back to work.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government are already taking many steps to help women who choose to work to do so while continuing to recognise that women who choose not to do so are doing an equally valuable job in looking after the family at home.

All Government schemes to help the unemployed, to help the inner cities and to help people set up their own businesses are open equally to women and men. These include Restart courses, job clubs, employment training, inner cities, the enterprise allowance scheme and job share —which is particularly attractive to women returning to work after a career break.

Job clubs are open to all who have been out of work for six months whether or not in receipt of benefit, and attendance times can be varied to suit domestic requirements.

My Department's employment service has also produced a special leaflet to tell women interested in returning to work about available opportunities and schemes.

We are also helping to develop to the full the skills of women by increasing the availability of training to them. All women aged 18 to 59 unemployed for six months or more are eligible to take advantage of employment training. In addition, women returning to the labour market and certain single parents on order books can also enter the programme, full or part-time, without fulfilling the six-month unemployment eligibility condition. All lone parents on employment training can qualify for a child care allowance.

In the period up to the year 2000, women are expected to account for over 90 per cent. of the new jobs. It is therefore important that employers do what they can to encourage women back to work. The Government are encouraging employers to adapt traditional working practices to accommodate the needs of women. This means more flexibility in hours of work and in holidays, job sharing, career breaks, part-time working and where possible help with child care costs.

Engineers

91. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of engineers qualifying in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: The continuing supply of engineers is important to the strength of the economy. The number of students graduating in engineering has increased in the last three years. Despite these increases in supply, some employers do find it difficult to meet some of their recruitment needs.

The Government, under the engineering science and technology initiative, have made more resources available to increase relevant higher education opportunities. My Department, through the Training Agency, is also committing resources to encourage retraining and conversion training for adults wishing to pursue engineering careers. In addition, the agency is providing specific support to institutions that promote increases in the number of women and other under-represented groups studying engineering, and to increase general access to engineering and other high-level training opportunities.

Industrial Action (Essential Services)

2. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to limit the disruption of essential services by industrial action.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are reviewing the law as it affects industrial action in essential services. The proposals in the Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law" are designed to tackle the problem of wildcat strikes and other forms of unofficial industrial action which have been particularly damaging in such essential services as the London Underground and British Rail.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the average earnings of full-time adult male manual workers in the railway industry and (b) the average of full-time adult male non-manual workers at the latest available date together with the corresponding figures for the United Kingdom for 1959 and 1972 and the information he has on comparable figures for 1972 and the latest available date in France and West Germany.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is provided in the table. Comparable figures for France and West Germany are not readily available.

Average gross hourly earnings of full-time adult male employees in the United Kingdom; pay not affected by absence, April of each year

	1972 £	1988 £
(a) Manual employees in the railway industry	0·67	4·25
(b) All non-manual employees	1·10	7·40

Sources: New Earnings Surveys in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Air Conditioning (Contamination)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what studies have been conducted by his Department, or consultants to his Department, into mitigation of the effects of contaminated cooling towers and air conditioning systems in high-rise buildings.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission (HSC) is to publish in November a consultative document seeking views on courses of statutory action for the control of legionella. This follows a detailed review of policy undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). In addition, a joint Department of Health/HSE working group is examining all aspects of legionella, including its control. It will be making recommendations to the chief medical officer and the HSE on any specific areas of study that are seen to be appropriate.

Training Schemes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the financial support from the Government for (a) the community programme per annum since its inception and (b) employment training since its inception until the last available year.

Mr. Nicholls: The community programme was started in 1982, and was replaced by employment training in September 1988. The table shows the expenditure on each programme by the Government in each year since 1982.

	Expenditure £ million
Community Programme
1982-83	[1] [2] 177
1983-84	[1] 400
1984-85	524
1985-86	667
1986-87	1,043
1987-88	1,085
1988-89	664
Employment Training
September 1988 to September 1989	977

[1] Includes administrative costs.

[2] Includes some residue of the Community Enterprise Programme.

Health and Safety (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each Health and Safety Executive area, on how many occasions in the last three years Health and Safety Executive inspectors have been accompanied on work place visits by an interpreter.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the ethnic origin of persons suffering workplace accidents and diseases reported under RIDDOR is recorded by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about the ethnic origin of people suffering workplace accidents and diseases is not recorded by the Health and Safety Executive. Neither the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences regulations 1985 nor the approved form of report require notification of the ethnic origin of the injured person.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, in relation to the categories used in the Civil Service ethnic monitoring system, how many people in each category have been employed in each division of the Health and Safety Executive, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the ethnic monitoring of staff in each division of the Health and Safety Executive has been collated only since 1987. The tables show the numbers of staff in each category at the end of June 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Redundancies

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees have been made redundant by their employers in the past year, having worked for (a) up to six months, (b) seven to 12 months, (c) 13 to 18 months, (d) 19 to 24 months, (e) 25 to 30 months, (f) 31 to 36 months and (g) more than 36 months respectively.

Mr. Nicholls: This information is not available.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 1 November 1989

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low flying exercises have been carried out by the Royal Air Force and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation over the Hexham constituency for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Neubert: I regret that the information requested cannot be provided without disproportionate cost and effort.

Weapons Security

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received from the United States Government a copy of the latest nuclear weapons surety report to the United States President which deals with security of United States nuclear warheads and weapons deployed in the United Kingdom and Europe; and whether his Department received earlier copies of this report.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. We do, however, work closely with the Americans on a range of nuclear safety and security matters.

Bullets (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of compensation paid for (a) deaths and (b) injuries inflicted by (i) rubber bullets and (ii) plastic bullets fired by the Army in Northern Ireland from 1969 to the present.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, our records show that of the claims received since 1 April 1987, we have paid out to date a total of £8,250 in compensation awards for injuries caused by rubber or plastic bullets in Northern Ireland.

HMS Tamar

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the considerations which influenced him to order the relocation of HMS Tamar from Hong Kong to Stonecutters island.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The defence estate in Hong Kong is the property of the Hong Kong Government. Under long-standing arrangements, whenever defence land is required for redevelopment, for economic or social purposes, the Hong Kong Government reprovide defence facilities, as required, at other suitable locations. The naval basin and related facilities at HMS Tamar lie in an area required by the Hong Kong Government for a major new development. No decision has been taken on the future of the Prince of Wales building (headquarters British forces Hong Kong), which is unaffected by the reprovision of the Royal Navy's facilities at Stonecutter's island.

Vanguard Submarine

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been carried out into the power-to-weight ratio of the Vanguard class submarine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The power-to-weight ratio for the Vanguard class was calculated in the course of deciding on the submarine's design. Adequate power will be generated to satisfy the operation requirement.

Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects that the joint tactical information distribution system will be fitted to aircraft of the Royal Air Force, and to which aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: The AEW Sentry E3D will enter RAF service in the early 1990s fitted with JTIDS class 2. On current plans the Tornado ADV will have JTIDS fitted shortly after. Consideration is also being given to fitting JTIDS to tanker aircraft in the mid-1990s. A reduced size version of JTIDS is specified for the European fighter aircraft.

Field Howitzer

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to order the evaluation on behalf of his Department of the 155 mm ultra lightweight field howitzer.

Mr. Alan Clark: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman.

Cambodia

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training and material resources have been provided to Cambodian resistance groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 30 October 1989.

Tanks

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's plans to coordinate the development of the next generation of tanks.

Mr. Alan Clark: NATO nations generally consider opportunities for collaboration in the development of equipment, and are doing so in relation to elements of armoured fighting vehicle technology. There is at present no project aimed at the development of a complete tank.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

EC Education and Training Policy (Seminar)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representation there was from his Department at the seminar on the education and training policy of the European Commission held at the university of Manchester and Wales on 14 October.

Mr. Jackson: None.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will initiate a national child abuse education campaign to explain the problem of child abuse.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department last year issued a circular entitled "Working Together for The Protection of Children From Abuse: Procedures Within The Education Service", which was designed to help local education authorities and others to increase the effectiveness of their efforts to prevent and deal with child abuse.

The circular discussed the potential contribution of the curriculum in this matter and invited local education authorities and schools to consider carefully the extent to which teaching should be directly concerned with warning children of the risks of child abuse. The circular also invited local education authorities to consider the extent to which, within their responsibilities for adult, further and higher education, there was scope for personal and social education about the prevention of child abuse.

The Department has recently asked local education authorities to report on the action they have taken to give effect to the recommendations of the circular.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set up a programme to train teachers to recognise the signs of child abuse.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department is currently providing grant of some £70,000 towards the costs of a programme to help local education authorities to train teachers in the protection of children from abuse.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Catastrophes

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the preparedness of United Kingdom emergency services to deal with major civil catastrophes.

Mr. John Patten: As my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary said on 15 June at columns 514-15, the emergency services provide an excellent response to such incidents, and recent events have confirmed that.

Risk Conference (Bradford University)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contribution was made by Ministers or officials of his Department to the conference on risk held at the university of Bradford on 12 September.

Mr. John Patten: The conference was attended by two officials from the emergency planning division and the principal of the Emergency Planning College. A presentation was given on the outcome of the Home Office review of peacetime emergency arrangements.

"Making Rehabilitation Work"

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to respond to the recent Apex Trust report, "Making Rehabilitation Work;" and if he will make a statement regarding implementation of its proposals in future legislation.

Mr. John Patten: We wrote to the Apex Trust on 22 August. I will put a copy of the letter in the Library.

Dispersal Prisons

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the latest available figures from the staff-inmate ratios in dispersal prisons during the time that inmates are unlocked.

Mr. Mellor: The seven dispersal prisons vary considerably in size, design, function and population. Comparisons between staff/inmate ratios need therefore to be made with some care. As at 1 September 1989 the position was as follows:

Prison	Prisoners	Officers in post	Prisoners per officer	Typical number of prisoners per officer at time of unlocking
Albany	375	317	1·2	3·0
Frankland	388	396	1·0	2·4
Full Sutton	386	381	1·0	2·5
Gartree	316	290	1·1	2·7
Long Lartin	425	337	1·3	3·1
Parkhurst	224	338	0·7	1·7
Wakefield	689	429	1·6	4·0

Broadcasting (Children's Programmes)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make provision in the broadcasting legislation for a franchise section to provide for children's programmes;

(2) if he will make provision in the broadcasting legislation for the protection of hours during which children's programmes traditionally are shown;

(3) if he will make provision in the broadcasting legislation for children's television programmes to continue being provided as a public service, and not subject to subscription;

(4) if he will make provision in the broadcasting legislation for the setting up of an independent panel to ensure quality children's programmes;

(5) if he will make provision in the broadcasting legislation for the distribution of money through a public service broadcasting council, to the BBC and earmarked for children's programmes;

(6) if he will make provision in the broadcasting legislation to permit the Independent Television Commission to arrange a minimum level of funding for children's programmes on channels 3 and 5.

Mr. Mellor: There is no express requirement in current broadcasting legislation to show children's programmes. Under our proposals for new legislation Channel 3 and Channel 5 will be required, among other things, to cater for a wide range of tastes and interests, and Channel 4 will be required to include programmes appealing to tastes and interests not generally catered for by Channel 3. As new television channels proliferate it becomes generally less desirable for legislation to impose detailed requirements for particular programme types to be included in schedules at particular times or made subject to special funding or licensing mechanisms. But our proposals will suffice to ensure that children's programmes continue to be shown on both the BBC and on independent terrestrial television; and that the possible outlets for children's programmes will increase.

Deportation

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons from Liverpool have accepted voluntary repatriation at the latest available date;

(2) how many persons have accepted voluntary repatriation at the latest date; and what was the total cost;

(3) if he will list the number of deportations from Liverpool for each of the last three years to the latest available date;

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on persons removed from the United Kingdom under the deportation process in the years 1986 to 1988, including those who accepted supervised departure, and those on whom a deportation order was enforced, is published in table 14 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 31/89 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Second Quarter 1989", a copy of which is in the Library. Separate information on the removal of persons from Liverpool, and on the total cost of supervised departures, is not available.

Wrongful Imprisonment (Compensation)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the names, dates and amounts paid to persons who have been wrongfully imprisoned and the method of calculating compensation for each year since 1970.

Mr. John Patten: It is not our practice to publish details of individual payments to applicants for compensation. The assessment of the amount paid is based in the main on written submissions setting out the relevant facts. In making his assessment, the independent assessor will apply principles analogous to those governing the assessment of damages for civil wrongs.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what applications for compensation in respect of unlawful conviction of Paul Hill, Carole Richardson, Gerard Conlon and Patrick Armstrong he has received; how they will be assessed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Applications for compensation have been received in respect of Paul Hill, Carole Richardson, Gerard Conlon and Patrick Armstrong. As I informed the hon. Gentleman in my written reply on Monday 30 October, on the advice of the independent assessor my right hon. and learned Friend has agreed that interim awards of compensation should be made to all four pending a final settlement of their claims, for which purpose further information has been sought. Arrangements are in hand for the early payment of the interim awards, and my right hon. and learned Friend will accept the assessor's recommendation as to the final amount to be paid in due course.

West Midlands Police (Investigation)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive a report on investigations into the west midlands serious crime squad currently being conducted by Mr. Donald Shaw.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the terms of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act, the reports on these investigations will be made to the Police Complaints Authority and the chief constable of the West Midlands police. I understand that reports on individual cases will be submitted as they are completed and it will be some time before all cases have been examined.

The chief constable of the West Midlands police has been asked to inform my right hon. and learned Friend if anything emerges which casts doubt on the safety of any conviction.

Pub Bombings

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings he has had with the Commissioner of the Metropolitan police since 1 January; and on how many occasions the convictions for the Guildford and Woolwich public house bombings were discussed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) had three meetings with the commissioner this year. The subject of the convictions for the Guildford and Woolwich public house bombings arose at one of those meetings.

Refugees

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the UNHCR concerning the right of appeal for asylum seekers under United Kingdom law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In a variety of contacts over a number of years UNHCR officers have made clear their preference for an in-country right of appeal for all asylum applicants. The Government have responded by explaining the risk that we see of encouraging abusive asylum applications from passengers who have been refused leave to enter for other purposes in order to benefit from the delays inherent in an extended appeal system. The experience of those countries that operate such appeal systems is that the delays in deciding cases typically run into several years. Despite this difference of view, both sides have worked together in establishing and operating the UKIAS referral arrangements, which successfully provide an independent input to the consideration of port cases.

Downing Street (Barricade)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what authority members of the public are prevented from walking along Downing street.

Mr. Waddington: Access to Downing street is controlled under the police's common law powers which allow them to take reasonable steps to preserve the peace and prevent threats to it.

Bingo

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to amend section 42 of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 to allow bingo organisers to advertise specific games of bingo at pre-arranged times and places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1989]: The advertising of licensed bingo clubs is controlled by section 42 of the Gaming Act 1968. We have no current plan for Government legislation to amend the section, but we are considering arguments put forward by the Bingo Association of Great Britain for supporting a private Member's Bill entirely to remove bingo clubs from these advertising controls. Bingo clubs can, and do, advertise freely as social clubs; specific games of bingo, and certain prizes in them, can already be advertised on the front of licensed bingo club premises.

Sex Offences

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to increase staffing levels at Wormwood Scrubs unit for sex offenders, and to improve training for staff.

Mr. Waddington [holding answer 27 October 1989]: Wormwood Scrubs therapeutic unit for addicts and sex offenders is carrying vacancies at senior and principal hospital officer level; action is being taken in connection with current promotion boards to fill them. In-house training is provided by the establishment's medical staff, who are considering what further steps can be taken, and by visiting consultants; a senior hospital officer, was released last month for a one year course in group psychotherapy and the possibility of further external training will be reviewed as vacancies are filled.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Leasehold Flats

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor has yet received the draft Bill to reform the leasehold system of ownership of flats, which he indicated on 13 June that he was expecting; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Work is continuing at the Law Commission with the preparation of draft legislation to give effect to the recommendations made in the report of the working group on commonhold. The Lord Chancellor hopes to announce a decision about the matter in the next few months.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Rain Forest

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projects his Department is presently sponsoring to use British forestry expertise in pursuit of conserving the rain forests.

Mrs. Chalker: Under our bilateral country programmes we are currently supporting 64 forestry projects in 27 countries; in addition we are funding 23 forestry research projects. We are also co-financing 38 projects under our joint funding scheme with British NGOs. I am sending a list of these projects to my hon. Friend.

International Literacy Year

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to contribute to International Literacy Year; and whether additional public funds will be available to assist projects undertaken by non-government organisations in support of International Literacy Year.

Mrs. Chalker: Our contribution to International Literacy Year will be as part of our on-going programme of literacy activities within wider programmes of help for people and their communities. Examples are support for the Gujarat integrated family welfare project, the Hyderabad slum improvement project and the Ghana programme of action to mitigate the social costs of adjustment. We shall also consider carefully any further projects in the literacy field overseas which non government organisations might wish to send us under the joint funding programme.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners (Nursing Home Care)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the £3,000 savings limit which debars pensioners from having the costs of their long-term nursing home care met by his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Pensioners with savings of over £3,000 can receive income support and, therefore, help with nursing home fees. However, an income of £1 a week is assumed for every £250, or part of £250, of any savings between £3,000 and £6,000. No income support is payable to people with more than £6,000. There are no plans, at present, to raise these capital limits.

Archway Tower Local Office

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by what date he expects the Department of Social Security offices in Archway tower to close; how many staff will be transferred; and what will be the location, staffing levels and opening date of the new offices for Finsbury Park and Highgate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The restructuring of social security services in the Department's offices in Archway tower is due to start in August 1990 and should be completed by March 1991. During this period there will be a phased transfer of backroom work to the social security centre in Glasgow and of administrative and specialised services to the district office to be located in Euston. Branch offices providing the full range of social security services to public callers will be established within Archway tower. At present we have no firm dates for the movement of these offices.

A study is currently under way to find a better location for each branch office in order that it can meet our objective of placing service where our customers need it. Accommodation will then be sought within the required areas and plans developed to vacate the premises in Archway tower. In the meanwhile both offices will continue to provide a full personal service from their existing location.

Staffing levels in the existing offices in Archway tower will start to reduce from August 1990 when the first tranche of backroom and specialised work is transferred to the Glasgow social security centre and Euston district office. Rundown of surplus staff will be achieved by a combination of natural wastage and transfers to nearby offices or other Government Departments. Precise details of the numbers to be transferred will not become clear until nearer the date for relocation of the work.

The number of staff required to support the remaining business at each branch office is estimated to be between 12 and 15 per office. These figures will, however, be subject to continuing review and adjustment in the light of departmental experience of existing offices whose backroom work has earlier been relocated.

Lone Parents

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further plans he has to study ways of encouraging single mothers to return to work rather than depend on income support and other benefits; and if he will make a statement.

31. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to help and encourage lone parents who want to become more independent through work.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 23 October 1989]: The number of lone parent families dependent on supplementary benefit income support has grown from 318,000 in 1979 to 722,000 in 1988[1] and approximately two-thirds of all lone parent families are dependent on income support.

Legislation places a duty on absent husbands and fathers to meet their responsibilities wherever they can afford to. However, for over three quarters of the lone parent families receiving income support the absent parent pays no maintenance at all. We shall continue to look for ways to make our efforts to obtain a contribution even more effective. Regular payments of maintenance can provide a useful basis of non-benefit income for lone parents who wish to work.

Lone parents are able to receive income support without having to be available for work, and it is right that they should be able to decide for themselves what is best for them and their children. However, where the lone parent does wish to work the family credit and housing benefit schemes give special help which recognises that lone parents can face extra expenses in working.

In addition, as announced in my right hon. Friend's statement about the uprating of Social Security Benefits, on 25 October, lone parents in work will receive extra help from next year. In housing benefit, the lone parent premium will increase from £8·60 a week to £9·70 from April 1990 and the earnings disregard will increase from £15 to £25 a week from October 1990.

In addition, lone parent families in work will benefit like other families on low incomes from increases my right hon. Friend has announced of £1 a week in the family credit adult credit and 50 pence a week housing benefit family premium which are in addition to the normal uprating of these benefits.

HEALTH

Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his national policy for the future management, operation and ownership of the non-emergency ambulance services.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities will remain responsible for the operational management of ambulance services and they are currently considering how best to provide non-emergency ambulance services in the light of the review proposals and local circumstances.

North-East Thames RHA

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will alter the composition of North-East Thames regional health authority to give due representation to Waltham Forest.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No; RHA members are appointed for their personal qualities and experience, and not to represent any particular or geographical interest.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the representation of residents of each district health authority area on the North-East Thames regional health authority, showing political affiliation where known.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: RHA members are appointed for their personal qualities and experience and not to represent the residents of a particular geographical area.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct Waltham Forest district health authority to increase the provision of essential life-saving emergency equipment at Whipps Cross hospital; if he will provide additional funding to the hospital for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The level of provision of health care services within a particular area is a matter for the health authority concerned, who are best able to judge the priorities for provision of services and equipment in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Insulin

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths have been reported of young diabetics who have switched from animal to human insulin; and what study the Committee on Safety of Medicines has made of the effects of treatment by synthetic human insulin for diabetics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) has received three reports of deaths of young diabetics who have switched from animal to human insulin. Such reports do not establish a relationship between cause of death and change of insulin type. The CSM considered a range of studies in relation to human insulin before product licences were granted and since this time has monitored published studies worldwide. Currently the CSM is working closely with the British Diabetic Association and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in the United Kingdom and epidemiological centres in the USA to monitor the possible effects of changing from animal to human insulin and of improving diabetic control in patients under treatment with all types of insulin.

The CSM has advised all diabetics not to make any change in the type of insulin they use, or the dose they take, without consulting their doctor.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there is an adequate supply of animal insulin for the treatment of diabetics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are four suppliers of animal insulin for the treatment of diabetes in the United Kingdom. Each has given an assurance that there are adequate supplies available.

AIDS

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the guidance and criteria for support grant for social services for people with AIDS and related expenditure will be forthcoming; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We will outline the criteria following consultation with the local authority associations later this year.

Handicapped Children

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children up to 18 years of age are (a) mentally handicapped, (b) physically handicapped and (c) both, by health region and by severity of disability.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available centrally. The third report from the OPCS on disability in Great Britain, "The Prevalence of Disability Among Children" contains estimates of the number of mentally and/or physically handicapped children under 16 years of age in each local government region of England, but these regions are not regional health authority areas. A copy of this report is in the Library.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were carried out on overseas women in the last 12 months; at how many weeks gestation they were undertaken; if he will list their countries of origin; what information he has on the allowable upper time limit for abortions in their countries of origin; how much was paid to private clinics in fees to carry out these abortions; how many were after 18 weeks gestation; and whether his Department requires an anaesthetic or pain killer to be administered to the unborn child before a late abortion takes place.

Mr. Freeman: The information regarding the numbers of abortions performed in England and Wales to overseas women, with a breakdown by gestation, is shown in the table.

[1] Only countries where the number of terminations exceeds 24 are included.

The upper limits and circumstances in which abortions may lawfully take place vary widely from country to country but do not affect the availability in individual cases of abortions in this country to foreign women.

Information about the sums paid to private clinics by non resident women is not collected centrally.

Decisions as to the drugs and anaesthesia to be given to a woman undergoing an abortion are entirely a matter for the clinical judgement of the doctor responsible for her care.

Haemophiliacs

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what further consideration he has given to the settlement of compensation claims by haemophiliacs infected by the HIV virus through National Health Service blood transfusions: and what plans he has for an early out-of-court settlement with these victims;

(2) what further representations he has received regarding financial compensation for haemophiliacs infected by the HIV virus through National Health Service blood transfusions.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what study he has undertaken of compensation arrangements made by other Governments for people with haemophilia who, in the course of medical treatment, have been infected with HIV virus; and if he will now facilitate an out-of-court settlement of the claims of the British victims; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received 30 further representations from members about compensation for people with haemophilia and HIV infection since my hon. and learned Friend replied to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 23 October at column 318. We understand that a variety of schemes have been adopted in other countries, although some have made no special arrangements.

I am advised that the current legal action relating to haemophiliacs is sub-judice and it would therefore not be appropriate for me to comment further.

Food Safety

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government will respond to the sixth report, 1988-89, of the Social Services Committee on food poisoning, listeria and listeriosis.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have today published their response to this report. Copies have been placed in the Library.

TRANSPORT

King's Cross Fire

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total expenditure incurred by London Regional Transport and London Underground Limited arising from the King's Cross Underground fire.

Mr. Portillo: London Regional Transport estimated last year that £266 million needed to be spent between 1989-90 and 1991-92 on proposals to enhance underground safety following the King's Cross fire. It is expected that about £80 million of this will be incurred in 1989-90.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether at the Council of European Transport Ministers on 16 October in Luxembourg he introduced any policies to promote the reduction in road traffic use in the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It is not the Government's policy to seek to influence overall levels of road traffic, but to secure efficient use of vehicles and highways. At the Council on 16 October my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State pressed for action to liberalise road haulage cabotage across the European Community. The effect of allowing non-resident companies to offer road haulage services within a member state would be to reduce the number of lorries which return home empty.

Road Schemes

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assumptions are made of the value of public open space needed for road schemes in cost-benefit analysis.

Mr. Atkins: Public open space taken for road schemes, like all land acquired for road schemes, is valued in the cost-benefit analysis on the basis of market prices as assessed by the district valuer, who is independent of the Department. Cost-benefit analysis is only one part of the total appraisal procedure for road schemes. Decisions are taken in the light of a comprehensive assessment which includes environmental effects, such as the effect on amenity and nature and environmental conservation. Under the terms of the Acquisition of Land Act 1981 if open space or common land is taken for a road scheme, the Department provides equivalent land in exchange or the compulsory purchase order is subject to special parliamentary procedure. The current approach to the valuation of public open space, like all elements in the appraisal of roads, is kept under review.

Roads (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what instructions he has given to the consultants for the London assessment studies with regard to (a) scheme components to be dropped from the studies and (b) scheme components to be added to the studies in advance of the consultants finalising their reports.

Mr. Atkins: It is for the study consultants to determine what components should or should not be included in their recommendations. I am still awaiting their reports.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what value was ascribed to that portion of Oxleas wood needed for the east London river crossing for the purposes of assessing the costs and benefits of the scheme.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mrs. Barnes) on 23 January 1989, at column 387.

Air Traffic Congestion

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what strategy the Government have for tackling air traffic congestion in Europe.

Mr. Parkinson: The Government and the Civil Aviation Authority have reviewed the provision of air traffic control in Europe. We consider that in addition to initiatives taken in the last year, western European states should now work urgently towards the integration of their air traffic control systems. In order to achieve this, states would need to enter into a specific commitment to integrate their system to an agreed timetable and to bring about the necessary changes to the institutional framework.

We envisage that the integrated system would be operated from a series of area control centres which have compatible systems and equipment and would be connected by a common communications network. Some changes of air space boundaries might be agreed, but we would expect most control centres to continue to be operated by national authorities. The system would function irrespective of state boundaries, which would become transparent to airspace users. Eurocontrol, the European Organisation for the Safety of Air Navigation, would be given an enhanced role in developing a single integration plan and in helping national authorities to expedite its implementation.

In response to a United Kingdom proposal, the European Civil Aviation conference recently established a task force to examine the scope for further integration of air traffic control systems in Europe. The United Kingdom will be playing a leading part in the work of the task force and we will be putting forward proposals at the first meeting of the task force on 3 November. The task force's report will be considered at a meeting of European Transport Ministers in the spring of 1990 at which I hope the Governments of western Europe will agree a timetable for the necessary technical and institutional changes.

Cash Limits

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits on his votes and to his Department's running costs limit.

Mr. Parkinson: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limits for my votes are to be changed as follows:

£ thousand

		Increases
		End year flexibility[1]
Class and vote	Current cash limit	Capital	Running costs	Other	Revised cash limit

[2] Increases of £25 million towards preparation and supervision of new construction as part of the expanded roads programme described in the Roads for Prosperity White Paper (Cm. 693) and £40 million to meet faster than expected progress in schemes in the current roads programme.

[3] Additional running costs provision to cover work on the expanded roads programme.

[4] Token. Increased payments and recoveries in respect of traffic control systems.

All these increases will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The running costs limit of the Department of Transport has been increased by £3,258,000 from £284,873,000 to £288,131,000 as a consequence of the running costs increases referred to above.

Roads (London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money, and on what projects, has been spent by his Department on road schemes in Greater London for each year since 1975 to date; and what is proposed to be spent, and on what projects, for the remainder of this year and each year until 1995.

Mr. Atkins: Details of construction costs for individual projects costing over £1 million each in progress in the period 1986-87 to 1989-90 are shown in table 1. All 1989-90 figures are estimates.

Expenditure in future years will be determined by progress on preparation and construction of individual projects and the total funds available for road building.

The information for earlier years could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report from Ove-Arup partners on the east London assessment study.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 23 October to my right hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe), Official Report, column 373.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Meat Imports

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the powers to serve notice requiring the re-importation of meat unfit for human consumption under the Imported Food Regulations (NI) 1984 are to be retained after the implementation of the Single European Act in 1992; and if he will make a statement about controls against the importation of unsuitable meat into Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Until the EC negotiations are finalised it is not certain what effect the single market proposals for 1992 will have on public health inspection of imported meat, but in those negotiations the United Kingdom are arguing strongly in favour of adequate safeguards on meat from member states. The existing controls under the Imported Food (Northern Ireland) Regulations 1984, require that imported meat shall be subject to inspection by authorised officers of district councils, to ensure compliance with the EC certification and health marking conditions.

ACE Schemes

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the operation of the ACE scheme and give the following information: how many people are currently employed on the ACE scheme, how many people currently employed on the ACE scheme are disabled and what this is as a percentage of the total number employed on ACE schemes, how many sponsor organisations within the ACE scheme employ 20 or more staff and which statutory provisions apply to these organisations, what information he has as to how many sponsor organisations within the ACE scheme fulfil their obligations under the 1945 and 1960 Acts to employ a minimum of 3 per cent. registered disabled people, what arrangements are made by the Department of Economic Development for Northern Ireland to monitor whether organisations in receipt of public money fulfil their legal obligations in respect of employing disabled people and what action is taken by the Department of Economic Development against organisations who are in breach of the provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) National Insurance Act 1945 and 1960; if he will list any prosecutions undertaken and the outcome in each case; what is his policy regarding promotion of equality of opportunity in obtaining employment under the ACE scheme for disabled people; and whether he has any plans to introduce further measures to ensure that disabled people have equality of opportunity to obtain employment under the ACE scheme.

Mr. Needham: The Action for Community Employment (ACE) scheme provides temporary employment for up to one year for the long-term unemployed in work of community benefit. A total of 10,561 people are currently employed on the ACE scheme and 182 or 1·7 per cent. of the total work force have declared themselves to be disabled; 147 sponsors employ 20 or more staff; ACE sponsors are subject to all statutory provisions affecting employers;

Information about the number of ACE sponsors who meet their obligations under the 1945 and 1960 disabled person's legislation is not available.

Organisations in receipt of public money, in common with all other employers, are required to obtain a permit from the Department of Economic Development if they do not meet the quota obligations imposed by statutory provision and wish to recruit non-disabled employees. Permits are issued only where the Department is satisfied the employer has made every effort to recruit registered disabled people and has been unsuccessful. Employers with 20 or more employees are required to make an annual return to the Department of Economic Development showing the number of disabled workers in their work force. Visits are paid by the Department's disablement resettlement officers to employers not fulfilling their quota obligations to check on their recruitment practices and to advise on the recruitment of registered disabled people. It has not previously been normal practice for DRO's to monitor recruitment of disabled people into ACE jobs, but this matter is now under review.

Employers in breach of the statutory provisions are liable to prosecution, but it is generally considered more appropriate to advise employers about any departures from their statutory obligations and provide advice and assistance in helping them to meet their obligations; there have been no prosecutions.

The Department's policy is that registered disabled people should be given every opportunity to compete on equal terms with their non-disabled colleagues for ACE jobs, and should benefit from the special measures in operation to assist with the employment of this group. Under existing recruitment rules disabled people get preferential treatment in that they need only to have been unemployed for eight out of the previous 15 months before being eligible for the scheme and can obtain a further ACE job 16 months after leaving the scheme, instead of the normal 24 months. In a recent series of conferences with ACE sponsors special attention was drawn to the employment needs of disabled people and sponsors were asked to develop positive policies towards the employment of these people. The Department of Economic Development is currently reviewing measures that may be taken to increase the number of registered disabled people employed in the ACE programme.

Students

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students from (a) the Republic of Ireland and (b) other European Community countries are in receipt of state-supported education in Northern Ireland; and what is the total cost in Northern Ireland of support.

Mr. Needham: The total numbers of students from the Republic of Ireland and other EC countries respectively attending Northern Ireland universities, teacher training colleges and further education college in 1988-89 were 1,783 and 110.

It is not possible to disaggregate the overall cost of support. However, the cost of remitting the tuition fees of eligible students from the Republic of Ireland and other EC countries in 1988-89 (1,256 total student numbers of which four are from EC countries other than the Republic of Ireland) was £702,650 (£700,550 Republic of Ireland and £2,100 other EC countries).

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated total value of grants paid to students in Northern Ireland in the academic year 1989-90.

Mr. Needham: A total of £53,949,000.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total cost of grants paid to Northern Ireland students in each of the last three years.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Financial year	£000s
1986-87	41,720
1987-88	44,912
1988-89	48,606

Belfast Urban Area Plan

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give an approximate date for the publication of the Belfast urban area plan.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) on 17 October 1989 at column 69.

Education

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many secondary schools in Northern Ireland fall into a particular group category for promotional allowance values and are paid (a) at the lower allowance and (b) at the higher allowance.

Mr. Needham: One secondary school has a promotion allowance value which is lower than that appropriate to its group and six secondary schools have promotion allowance values which are higher than that appropriate to their groups.

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those schools in Northern Ireland which fall into group 12 category for promotional allowance values for secondary schools and are treated accordingly.

Mr. Needham: Following is the information:

Ballyclare High School
Ballymena Academy
Coleraine Academical Institution
Grosvenor High School, Belfast
Rathmore Grammar School, Belfast
Sullivan Upper School, Holywood
St. Mary's Christian Brothers Grammar School, Belfast
St. Patrick's College, Maghera
Thornhill College, Londonderry
Wallace High School, Lisburn

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those schools in Northern Ireland which fall into category group 12 for promotional allowance values for secondary schools and are paid group 11 allowances.

Mr. Needham: One group 12 school—Portadown college—has had a promotion allowance value appropriate to a group 11 school determined for it by the Department of Education for the 1989-90 school year.

Arts

The Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the projects in Northern Ireland which have benefited from his Department's support for the arts in the last three years for which figures are available, and the sums granted in each case.

Mr. Needham: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Family Planning

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general practitioners were registered at 31 December 1987 and 1988 to provide a National Health Service family planning service to their patients in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 30 October 1989]: The total numbers providing such services were 876 and 904 respectively.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Stationery

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the date of the expiry of the current contract to supply the House with stationery; when he intends to invite tenders for any subsequent contract; and whether it will be open to any company located in the United Kingdom to tender for that contract.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The HMSO is responsible for supplies of stationery to the House of Commons (Estimate Class XIX Vote 6). A contract for the supply of die-stamped stationery was awarded in May 1989 following competitive tendering. This is due to run for three years.

Invitations to tender for a replacement contract will be issued in late 1991, following advertising in the Official Journal of the European Communities, to all suppliers on HMSO's tender list, together with any acceptable firms who may respond to the notice in the Official Journal. Interested suppliers may request inclusion on HMSO's tender list at any time.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much paper used by the House of Commons is (a) recycled and (b) virgin; and what are the comparative costs.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) of 4 April 1989, column 69.

Papers used in the production of buff envelopes and file covers for HMSO are traditionally made from recycled papers and therefore a comparison with virgin papers is not possible. For general purpose printing papers the price of recycled qualities is similar to that for virgin papers. For higher quality writing papers savings of up to 10 per cent. may be obtainable.

Refreshment Department (Packaging)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the policy of the Refreshment Department on the use of chlorofluorocarbons containing packaging material, non-bio-degradable wrapping and recycled paper.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Refreshment Department's policy with regard to the use of environmentally friendly products and recycled paper is in line with that of the House. The Department is not responsible for the manufacture of the wrapping and packaging materials it receives but does have plans to use biodegradable carrier bags when current stocks are exhausted.

PRIME MINISTER

Whisky Look-alikes

Mr. Sims: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent meeting with the Japanese Prime Minister, she raised the subject of the appropriate steps to resolve the issue of whisky look-alike products.

The Prime Minister: During my visit to Japan I told the Japanese Prime Minister, Mr. Kaifu, of the concern in the United Kingdom about the sale of whisky look-alikes in Japan. Mr. Kaifu responded helpfully, saying that action would be taken to ensure that such products were clearly perceived as being different from genuine whisky. I understand that the Japanese authorities have given guidance to the trade to this effect. Our embassy in Tokyo continues to monitor the market situation closely.

Advisers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her advisers, their terms and length of appointment and salaries.

The Prime Minister: My current advisers, who are not career civil servants, are:

G. D. Bourne
Sir Percy Cradock
A. Dunlop
Professor B. Griffiths
G. Guise
H. Harris-Hughes
Mrs. A. Ponsonby
I. K. Whitehead

The conditions of service are broadly the same as those for established civil servants. The appointments may be terminated at the end of the current Administration; following a general election; or if the Minister who appointed them moves on. It is not our practice to reveal the salaries of advisers as they are individually negotiated in relation to previous outside earnings and are therefore confidential.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what are her plans regarding appointing a successor to Professor Walters as her economic adviser; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister how many advisers who were not career civil servants, indicating whether part time or full time, she had in 1979-80; and how many in each year since.

The Prime Minister: I have had the following number of advisers in the policy unit since 1979:

Year	Full-time	Part-time
1979	2	—
1980	2	—
1981	2	—
1982	4	—
1983	11	—
1984	11	—
1985	8	—
1986	7	—
1987	4	—
1988	6	—
1989	6	—

In addition Sir Percy Cradock has been my foreign affairs adviser since 1984. Professor Alan Walters was my economic adviser from 1981 until 1983 on a full-time basis and this year on a part-time basis. I have also had a personal assistant full-time from 1979 until 1986 and part-time since then.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all her current advisers who are not career civil servants, giving their date of appointment and fees.

The Prime Minister: My current advisers in the policy unit are:

	Appointed
Professor B. Griffiths	1985
G. Guise	1986
G. D. Bourne	1988
A. Dunlop	1988
I. K. Whitehead	1988
H. Harris-Hughes	1989

In addition Sir Percy Cradock has been my foreign affairs adviser since 1984. Mrs. A. Ponsonby has been my personal assistant since February.

It is not the Government's practice to reveal the salaries of advisers as they are individually negotiated in relation to previous outside earnings and are therefore confidential.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of the Prime Minister's advisers who were not career civil servants in 1979-80 and each succeeding year.

The Prime Minister: The total expenditure on the salaries of my advisers since 1981 is as follows (the figures for earlier years are no longer available).

Year	£
1981	35,762·50
1982	75,569·25
1983	[1]167,126·97
1984	145,022·52
1985	188,654·82
1986	210,746·87
1987	239,459·46
1988	215,379·85
[2]1989	141,142·00

[1] In 1983 the CPRS was abolished and a few members became ministerial advisers.
[2] To date.

Commonwealth Conference

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister how many Ministers and Government officials, respectively, accompanied her at the Commonwealth conference in Malaysia.

The Prime Minister: I was accompanied at the Commonwealth conference in Malaysia by the Foreign Secretary and his party, three officials from my office and 24 support staff (including secretaries, a duty clerk and security personnel).

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of her visit to Malaysia for the Commonwealth conference.

The Prime Minister: Information on the cost of this visit is not yet available.

Prime Minister's Office

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost of the Prime Minister's Office in 1988-89; and what is the estimated cost for 1989.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of my Office in 1988-89 was £6,553,712 (1). The latest estimate of the total cost for 1989-90 is £7,003,500 (1).

Note: (1) Salaries and wages, notional pension liability, administration costs and the grant-in-aid to the Chequers trust are included. My salary as a Cabinet Minister is excluded, as are my pay and allowances as a member of this House.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total number of staff in the Prime Minister's Office in 1988-89; and what is the estimated total for 1989.

The Prime Minister: The total number of staff in 10 Downing street during 1988-89 was 67. At present the number of staff is 68.

Japan (Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister whether any Conservative party official accompanied her on her recent trip to Japan.

The Prime Minister: Four Conservative officials accompanied me to Japan for the International Democratic Union conference.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Council

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much per copy it cost to produce the report of the British Council for the reporting years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Sainsbury: The British Council annual report and accounts for 1986-87 cost £1·96 per copy and the report had 64 pages. In 1987-88 the cost per copy was £2·23 and there were 36 pages. In 1988-89 the cost per copy was £3·41 and there were 72 pages.

Chile

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to send observers to the forthcoming elections in Chile.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no plans to send any official British Government observers to the forthcoming elections in Chile.

Antarctica

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps were taken at the Antarctic meeting in Paris to protect the Antarctic environment; what was the outcome of debate on the Franco-Australian proposals; what steps were taken by the British delegation to protect the Antarctic environment; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: In line with our view that all possible concrete and practical steps should be taken to protect the Antarctic environment, building on the measures already adopted under the Antarctic treaty, including the Antarctic minerals convention, the meeting adopted an unprecedented number and range of environmental recommendations. These dealt with waste disposal; the prevention and control of, and response to marine pollution; environmental monitoring; improved descriptions and management plans for specially protected areas (SPAs); the amendment of article VIII of the agreed measures for the conservation of Antarctic fauna and flora to provide for management plans for SPAs; new sites of special scientific interest, the establishment of specially reserved areas, the establishment of multiple-use planning areas. The concentration of the siting of stations, the use of Antarctic ice, the role of Antarctica in understanding and monitoring global change, including the ozone layer, the charting of Antarctic waters, and co-operation to improve scientific productivity in Antarctica. Of the 14 recommendations covered in this list, 12 resulted from the initiatives of, and close collaboration between, the United States and the United Kingdom delegations.

The meeting also considered the Franco-Australian proposals, as well as other proposals submitted by the Chilean, New Zealand, Swedish, United Kingdom and United States delegations, relating to comprehensive measures for the protection of the Antarctic environment. While none of those proposals was endorsed by the meeting, it was agreed that meetings should be held next year:

(i) to explore and discuss all proposals relating to the further elaboration, maintenance and effective implementation of a comprehensive system for the protection of the Antarctic environment and its dependent and associated ecosystems, aimed at ensuring that human activity does not have adverse environmental impacts or compromise the scientific, aesthetic or wilderness values of Antarctica; and

(ii) to explore and discuss all proposals relating to article 8(7) of the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities, relating to the issue of liability.

The venue or venues of these two meetings, and their timing, are to be decided through diplomatic channels.

We are very satisfied with the results of this meeting which carry forward protection of the Antarctic environment. At next year's meetings our representatives will continue to support the process of further strengthening the system for protecting the Antarctic environment. The outcome of the Paris meeting reinforced our view that the early entry into force of the minerals convention, with its strict environmental standards and procedures, remains an important objective as a necessary element in the overall system for protection of the Antarctic environment.

I will deposit a copy of the report of the meeting in the Library of the House when it becomes available.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he will now take to comply with the Antarctic treaty convention in respect of (a) the removal of rubbish and sewage from British bases, (b) the preservation of fish stocks and (c) the proposed environmental convention due to be held in Santiago in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Salisbury [holding answer 31 October 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) today about the XVth Antarctic treaty consultative meeting held earlier this month in Paris, which covers part (c) of his question. In answer to parts (a) and (b):

(a) the British Antarctic survey is taking steps to ensure that it will be able to comply with the mandatory code for waste disposal in the Antarctic, adopted at Paris, when it enters into force; and

(b) the preservation of fish stocks is a matter for the Commission for the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources meeting in Hobart from 6-17 November, and was not dealt with at Paris.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Maude: The Foreign Affairs Council meets on 6 November and again on 27-28 November. At the earlier meeting the Council will discuss progress in the Lomé renegotiation in the light of the outcome of the ACP/EC ministerial negotiating meeting in Luxembourg on 27-29 October. There will be a further ACP/EC ministerial negotiating meeting on the Lomé renegotiation towards the end of November in Brussels but dates have yet to be confirmed. A meeting of the EC/Egypt Co-operation Council will be held on 6 November in the margins of the FAC. Also on 6 November the FAC will consider proposals for further assistance to Poland and Hungary. The Council will discuss follow up to the Audio-Visual Conference which took place in Paris from 30 September to 2 October. The Council will consider the adoption of the Commission's proposals to renew generalised tariff preferences in 1990, to include Poland and Hungary in decisions for 1990 GSP schemes, subject to the Ministers' agreement to their inclusion in the GSP. The Council is also expected to discuss economic and monetary co-operation, and free movement of people. The FAC may also take stock of recent developments in its trade relations with third countries.

A further meeting of the FAC will be held on 27-28 November, when it will discuss preparations for the Strasbourg European Council and the future of the Communities relations with eastern Europe; a meeting of the EC/Yugoslavia Co-operation Council will take place in the margins of FAC. The Council may also discuss the Commission's draft negotiation mandate for second stage EC/GCC agreement. The Council is expected to discuss preparation for the 19 December EC/EFTA ministerial meeting. The ministerial meeting will review progress in recent discussions between the Commission and EFTA on closer economic co-operation. The Council will discuss the present state of play and prospects for the current round of multilateral trade negotiations taking place in Geneva under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). Japanese cars and EC/US relations may also be considered.

The Telecommunications Council meets on 7 November when the Presidency is hoping to reach a common position on the ONP directive, the pan-European paging directive and recommendation and high definition television. Discussion is likely on liberalisation of telecom services, ONP directive and recommendation on pan-European radio paging, common action on HDTV in CCIR, external aspects of telecoms policy, use of ECU in European telecoms accounting, new R & D in broad band telecoms and postal Europe.

The Consumers Council on 9 November is expected to consider some key questions arising from the draft directive. The Presidency will seek member states' views in an orientation debate on the future of this proposal. Proposals for future representation of consumers at Community level (an oral communication from the Commission) will be presented orally. This may take the form of an informal lunch meeting. A draft Council resolution outlining future priorities will be considered and the Commission may also give an oral presentation of its three year future programme. The European home and leisure accident surveillance system (EHLASS) is also likely to be discussed at the Consumer Council on 9 November.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 13 November to discuss stage 1 of Economic and Monetary Union including the revised decisions on economic convergence and co-operation between the central banks of the member states. There will also be a discussion on the longer term, which will consider the report of the high level group and the Chancellor's paper on an alternative approach to that in the Delors report. The discussion of taxation of savings will focus on measures to combat tax evasion. ECOFIN is expected to discuss a further report on indirect taxation on rates and technical systems for both VAT and excise duties and on budgetary consequences. There will also be a discussion on, and the probable adoption of a draft directive co-ordinating regulations on insider dealing across the Community, thereby establishing standards and providing for collaboration in the exchange of relevant information.

The Health Council is scheduled to meet on 13 November. The agenda will include the tobacco labelling directive, which requires member states to introduce legislation to ensure that standardised health warnings are printed on packets of tobacco products: the tobacco tar yields directive, which sets a maximum limit of 15 mg of tar per cigarette by 1992 and 12 mg tar/cigarette by 1995; tobacco advertising directive, which concerns advertising of tobacco products in the press and by means of bills and posters. The directive places restrictions on the content of advertisements, and requires them to include health warnings. Also to be considered are the 2nd action against cancer programme 1990 to 1994. This continues and expands work carried out under the first cancer programme with the aim of reducing projected cancer mortality by 15 per cent. by the year 2000 through prevention campaigns, information, training and research. A solemn declaration on AIDS policy and conclusions on measures for the prevention of addiction and the care of drug addicts are expected. The Health Council will discuss a Presidency note urging meetings on a regular basis to discuss the problem of the movement of health professionals around the Community in view of the overall surplus of trained doctors and the shortage of nurses, and oral conclusions urging acceleration of work on European self-sufficiency in blood and blood products. The mutual recognition of pharmaceutical products will be discussed, in particular a note from the Presidency and possibly written conclusions on the current situation and problems and conclusions asking the Commission to report on developments so far and to make recommendations for future action to encourage the use of the European emergency health card. The question of a standard European number for calling emergency services will also be discussed.

The Industry Council meets on 14 November. The textiles sub-group will be looking at the effects of the Uruguay round, the setting up of a monitoring body or observatory to improve statistics on the sector and possibly an exercise to improve the transparency of state aids to this sector. The Council will discuss how the Community should respond to United States proposals to eliminate all state aid to shipbuilding by the end of 1991. Cars and HDTV ars also likely to be discussed.

The Budget Council will meet on 14 November to consider the second reading of the 1990 draft budget and the amending letters.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 20 and 21 November to discuss the reform of the agricultural structures regulations and the cereals co-responsibility levy. It may also discuss milk quotas, veterinary checks, bovine somatotropin, and pigmeat.

The Development Council will meet on 21 November. The Council will adopt conclusions arising from an evaluation of Community aid to Asia and Latin America, the period 1976 to 1988, and will consider annual guidelines for the Community's aid programme to Asia and Latin America for 1990. The Council is expected to adopt a resolution on priorities and the future direction of the Community's food aid programme, and will adopt conclusions based on a Commission paper on the implementation of the Community's aid control programme. The Council will adopt conclusions on desertification based on a Commission paper on action taken in this field since 1986, and will have a free-ranging discussion on other environmental issues, specifically the management and conservation of tropical forests. The council will also review progress on the current renegotiation of the Lomé convention.

The Internal Market Council on 23 November will discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

The Fisheries Council will meet on 27 November to discuss prices, inspection and surveillance, processing and marketing of fisheries products and possibly EC/Greenland and EC/USSR relations and 1990 TACS and quotas.

The Environment Council is scheduled to meet on 28 November. The Presidency is hoping for a political agreement on the terms of reference for a European environment agency to co-ordinate and analyse environmental information from existing national and regional networks for Commission and member states' use. There is likely to be a detailed discussion of the proposal concerning the protection of habitats and of wild fauna and flora and an attempt to resolve some of the outstanding difficulties. Early exchanges of views are expected on the proposal to protect waters from nitrate pollution and on the proposal to guarantee the public freedom of access to data on the environment.

The Social Affairs Council is due to meet on 30 November, when Ministers will discuss health and safety directives on work place requirements, work equipment and personal protective equipment. In the field of vocational training the Council will also discuss Eurotech II, and the medium term guidelines for education and training the Community. The establishment of a employment observatory may also be discussed.

WALES

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many disabled people are currently in local authority, health authority, voluntary and private sector homes in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The number of disabled people in local authority, voluntary and private sector homes in Wales is shown in the table:

as at 32 March 1988

Category of resident[1]	Residents in local authority homes	Residents in private and voluntary homes	Total residents
Elderly	7,067	6,497	13,564
Younger physically handicapped	99	198	297
Blind	—	101	101
Mentally ill	288	258	546
Mentally handicapped	676	699	1,375
Alcohol dependence	—	48	48
Total	8,130	7,801	15,931

[1] These categories are as defined under Sections 21 and 29 of the National Assistance Act 1948 and under section 1 of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will conduct a detailed HMI survey on further education provision to assess the demand for and availability of provision for students with learning difficulties.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Her Majesty's inspectors are currently undertaking a survey of the provision for students with special educational needs in the Welsh further education colleges.

Common Land

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received a copy of the Royal Society for Nature Conservation's report on common land; and if he will make a statement on his policy towards commons.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have received a copy of the report "Wildlife importance of common land" prepared by the Royal Society for Nature Conservation (RSNC) under contract to the Nature Conservancy Council. I understand that there is another report, "A Future for Wildlife on our Commons" published by the RSNC itself, which I have not been sent. The Government are considering our future policy on common land.

Water Supply

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report (a) the number of people in Wales who receive water from supplies granted relaxations to the aluminium standard under section 20(5)(b) of the Water Act 1989, (b) the location of each supply, by county and (c) the number of people served by each of those supplies.

Mr. Grist: Under section 20(5)(b) of the Water Act 1989, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted undertakings from Dwr Cymru Cyfyngedig relating to the aluminium parameter in respect of the water treatment works shown in the following table:

Location and water treatment works	Estimated population served

Toxic Waste Imports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the ports in Wales currently registered for the import of toxic waste and the amount of such waste imported through each of those ports for the last 10 available years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The available information on imports of special/hazardous waste through Welsh ports, based on returns made by waste disposal authorities, is shown in the table:

Tonnes

Port of entry	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Briton Ferry (Neath)	2,300	15,000·0	12,360
Fishguard	50	0	0
Holyhead	124	383·5	221
Newport	3,082	448·0	0

Health Service (Information Technology)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the information technology requirements under the proposals of the National Health Service White Paper for (a) acute hospitals, (b) general practitioner practices that opt to control their own budgets and (c) general practitioner indicative prescribing budgets; and for each, what assessment he has made of (i) capital equipments costs and (ii) manpower costs.

Mr. Grist: The Information and IT implications of the White Paper for all levels of the NHS have been subject to a detailed and widespread consultation and review. The results will be published shortly in the form of a Strategy of Wales which will include recommended core strategic systems for each tier. The implementation costs are currently under examination.

Renal Unit (Wrexham)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive a case from the Clwyd health authority containing a justification for a renal unit in Wrexham.

Mr. Grist: I understand that the authority will be presenting its case in response to consultation which is presently taking place on the report of the evaluation of renal services in Wales.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when, as a result of a request from the Clwyd health authority, he decided to decline funding to the authority for a renal unit in Wrexham; and when, subsequently, he invited the authority to present to him a case containing a clear justification.

Mr. Grist: Funding by the Welsh Office was considered inappropriate and the authority was invited to present a detailed case for the regional designation of the unit on 24 January 1989.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limits for class XVII and to his Department's provision for running costs in the current financial year.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made.

The cash limit on class XVII vote 2 is to be reduced by £1,499,000 from £90,947,000 to £89,448,000 reflecting (i) a decrease of £1,500,000 in the public dividend capital provision for the Welsh Development Agency and (ii) a token £1,000 Supplementary to open a new subhead to make a special contribution to the Royal Welsh Agricultural Society. The reduction in the provision for public dividend capital will enable a corresponding increase to be made in the agency's non-voted borrowing facility with the National Loans Fund and assist in meeting the higher demand for capital investment loans from small businesses in Wales.

The cash limit for class XVII, vote 5 is to be increased by £2,260,000 from £266,711,000 to £268,971,000. The increase covers the transfer of responsibility for payment of grants in respect of hostel deficits from the Secretary of State for Social Security (£20,000), an increase to the grant-in-aid for the Wales Tourist Board to be met from existing but unallocated public expenditure provision (£100,000) and an increase for the carry forward of 1988-89 capital underspends under the end year flexibility scheme (£2,140,000).

The cash limit for class XVII, vote 8 is to be increased by £5,000,000 from £830,510,000 to £835,510,000. The additional provision is required to help meet the cost of implementing the National Health Service Review proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

The cash limit for class XVII, vote 9 is to be increased by £1,786,000 from £46,271,000 to £48,057,000. This increase covers the take up of 1988-89 capital and running costs underspends under the end year flexibility scheme (£317,000 and £205,000 respectively) and makes provision for the running cost implications of the National Health Service review (£1,000,000), for the statutory audit of National Health Service activities in Wales (£200,000) and for the administrative cost of introducing two new grant regimes (£64,000). The Department's running costs limit is to be increased by £1,469,000 from £44,688,000 to £46,157,000.

In accordance with the reply by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 26 October 1989 to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones), the cash limit on class XVII, vote 13 is being increased by £276,000,000 from £1,000 to £276,001,000. This increase provides for the establishment of an appropriate capital structure for Welsh Water plc.

The cash limit changes total £283,547,000. Allowing for the cash limit reduction on vote 2 (£1,499,000), the total of the cash limit increases is £285,046,000. Of this sum, the increase in respect of the capital structure of Welsh Water and compensation by the residuary company (£276,000,000) will be met from the privatisation proceeds programme; the increases on account of end-year flexibility (£2,662,000), the National Health Service Review (£6,000,000) and the administration costs of National Health Service Audit and the new grants regimes (£264,000) will be charged to the Reserve and the increases for hostel deficit grants (£20,000) and the Wales Tourist Board (£100,000) are covered by my existing PES resources. These increases will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the factors he took into account when announcing on 27 July Official Report, column 950, his decision to maintain the rates of payment for set-aside unchanged.

Mr. Curry: I see no reason to alter rates of payment which have attracted a good level of uptake in two successive years.

Eggs

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action he has taken concerning imports of contaminated eggs from other European Community countries; and what evidence he has that other national governments are taking any steps to prevent such exports or to apply standards similar to those which have been imposed in the United Kingdom;

(2) what proportion of eggs imported into the United Kingdom are tested for salmonella and other forms of contamination; how many incidents of such contamination have been verified during the last 12 months; and how many consignments found to contain such contaminated eggs have been disposed of.

Mr. Curry: Arrangements have been made for port health authorities and the public health laboratory service to monitor imported eggs for salmonella. This is done by taking a sample of 60 eggs from each consignment, for testing. Since April when these arrangements commenced, six isolations of invasive salmonella have been made from imported eggs. We have, as a matter of the utmost seriousness, taken these up straightaway with the member states concerned.

The aim of the monitoring is to determine the risk of infection that imports pose over a period of time. No consignments of imported eggs have been destroyed.

No other member state is taking such comprehensive action as we are to deal with salmonella contamination in eggs although I am aware that the Dutch Government have introduced measures in respect of the presence of Salmonella enteritidis in breeding flocks. For the future, effective safeguards depend on taking action on an EC-wide basis and we are pressing for the introduction of effective EC measures on specified zoonoses as soon as possible.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to my written answer to him of 31 October 1989.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions are taking place between his Department and the European Commission about proposals to restrict the current European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund contributions to hill livestock compensatory allowances; what response has been made by Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cornwall South-East (Mr. Hicks) on 30 October 1989.

Beagles (Death)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will publish in full the results of his Department's investigation into deaths of 79 beagles in the care of Alpha-Sirius (Perrycroft Lodge Kennels);

(2) whether he will initiate a prosecution against Alpha-Sirius (Perrycroft Lodge Kennels) under the Transport of Animals (General) Order 1973 for failing in their duty of care in respect of the deaths of beagles transported to Sweden; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My Department is investigating this tragic incident with a view to possible prosecutions. We cannot divulge details of the case in advance of any proceedings.

Papain

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he is expecting to announce guidelines on the use of the tenderising agent papain in administration to cattle.

Mr. Curry: I intend to include guidance on the handling of cattle injected with papain in a code of practice on the welfare of livestock at slaughter. I propose to issue the code under new enabling powers which it is proposed to take in primary legislation when parliamentary time permits.

Hens

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of hens slaughtered under the provisions of the Testing of Poultry Flocks Order for each month of its operation.

Mr. Curry: The provisions relating to the compulsory slaughter of poultry are contained in the Animal Health Act 1981, as applied in respect of salmonella through the provisions of the Zoonoses Order 1989. The number of birds compulsorily slaughtered since 1 March 1989 when the order came into force is as follows:

	Numbers
March	207,379
April	95,378
May	48,178
June	91,941
July	47,718
August	55,221
September	131,379
October (to 20)	39,141

Hormone Implants

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many successful prosecutions his Department has initiated following the discovery of cattle with hormone implants.

Mr. Curry: Two farmers have been prosecuted following the discovery of cattle with hormone implants and convictions were achieved in both cases.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the monitoring procedures whereby samples of animals at point of slaughter are taken and tested for hormone implants; by whom the sampling and testing is carried out; and what numbers and proportion of animals are tested.

Mr. Curry: Under the terms of the Animals and Fresh Meat (Examination for Residues) Regulations 1988 (S.I. 1988/848) animals are sampled by staff of the state veterinary service for veterinary residues including evidence of illegal hormone implantation. All samples for hormone analysis are forwarded to the Ministry's central veterinary laboratory. Each year some 3,700 samples are collected at slaughterhouses in Great Britain. These comprise about 0·15 per cent. of those fattening bovine animals which are slaughtered and 1,300 samples from cull cows, sheep and pigs.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the most recent figures available on the proportion of cattle sampled which carry traces of hormone implants.

Mr. Curry: In the course of routine monitoring for illegal hormone use a total of 1,296 samples were taken from cattle at slaughterhouses in Great Britain between January and June of this year. 0·3 per cent. of these were found to be positive.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the existence of hormone implant stocks in other European Community countries.

Mr. Curry: None. I am not aware that such information is collected.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to ensure that live cattle or beef imports have not been subjected to artificial hormone treatment.

Mr. Curry: Under Community monitoring arrangements (Directive 86/469/EEC) responsibility for hormone testing of cattle and beef entering intra-Community trade rests with the Member State of origin. In the case of supplies from third countries the Community has obtained assurances that production is subject to controls equivalent to those operating in the Community.

Food Advisory Committee

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those recommendations he has received from the Food Advisory Committee during each of the last three years, and which have not been implemented by his Department.

Mr. Maclean: It is not practical to answer this question in quite the way the hon. Member has asked. The following list represents the committee's published reports over the last three years on which the recommendations have yet to be implemented.

Final Report on the Review of colouring Matter in Food Regulations 1973 published March 1987 (MAFF Press Release No. 83/87).

Report on Coated and Ice Glazed Fish Products—published March 1987 (MAFF Press Release No. 58/87).

Caffeine and Saccharin and Soft Drinks—announcement made in May 1988 (MAFF Press Release No. 180/88).

Use of the term "low alcohol" in the labelling of Alcoholic Drinks announced September 1988 (MAFF Press Release No. 358/88).

The Use of Mineral Hydrocarbons in Food—published February 1989 (MAFF Press Release No. 53/89).

Slimming pills—announcement made in May 1989 (MAFF Press Release No. 212/89).

Use of Nutrition Claims in Food Labelling and Advertising—published July 1989 (MAFF Press Release No. 309/89).

We have accepted all these reports in principle. We shall shortly be announcing my decision on the recommendations in the Colouring Matter in Food report. On all the other reports we have either published implementing regulations for consultation or are in course of so doing.

Tartrazine and Sunset Yellow

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will refer the additives tartrazine and sunset yellow to the Food Advisory Committee for re-assessment.

Mr. Maclean: These two substances are covered by the recent Food Advisory Committee review on the use of colouring matter in food on which I shall be announcing my decisions shortly. I therefore have no plans to ask the Food Advisory Committee to re-assess them unless or until any new scientific evidence about them becomes available.

Food Premises

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to introduce measures in the forthcoming food Bill to provide for a compulsory licensing system for all food premises.

Mr. Maclean: We have already made it clear that the new legislation will provide for the registration of all food premises, for an associated system of improvement notices and for enhanced closure powers. We also envisage making provision for licensing in certain sensitive areas.

Frozen Food

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he proposes to introduce legislation governing frozen food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I shall need to implement into United Kingdom law the provisions of Council Directive 89/108/EEC on quick frozen foodstuffs for human consumption and the provisions of Council Directive 89/395/EEC on food labelling which includes a requirement for the date marking of frozen foods. I expect to issue separate proposals for regulations under the Food Act 1984 on both these matters early in 1990.

Food Labelling

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends introducing legislation to regulate the use of descriptions such as low fat, no added sugar and high in fibre in food labelling.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. The legislation is intended to form part of the regulations to protect consumers from misleading nutrition claims which I announced in reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 28 July at column 1153.

Meat and Meat Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements exist for the certification of meat and bone meal of ruminant derivation destined for export from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Departments provide certification for exports of meat and bone meal in accordance with the requirements of individual importing countries. Certificates are signed by officers of the Departments or by authorised local veterinary inspectors.

Livestock Market (Computerisation)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has taken any steps to investigate the possibilities of computerising livestock markets.

Mr. Curry: The extent to which any market can or should take account of new technology is a matter for the commercial judgment of its operators.

Pesticides

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to the report on pesticide use in the United Kingdom sent to him on 7 August by the Green Alliance and the British Agrochemicals Association.

Mr. Curry: I have replied to these organisations on behalf of all the Ministers responsible for the control of pesticides in a letter dated 26 September 1989. A copy of the letter has been deposited today in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Trade

75. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects British manufacturing trade to be in balance.

89. Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects British manufacturing trade to be in balance.

90. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects British manufacturing trade to be in balance.

95. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects British manufacturing trade to be in balance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The deficit on manufacturing trade reflects the surge in investment and the fall in personal saving in recent years. Tighter monetary policy is already slowing the growth in demand. As new capacity comes on stream, and domestic demand slows further, the deficit will narrow.

76. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the total United Kingdom trade deficit for the current year.

82. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the total United Kingdom trade deficit for the current year.

86. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the deficit in manufactured trade for 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A new forecast will be published at the time of the Autumn Statement.

79. Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further policies he has to deal with the trade deficit.

92. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further policies he has to deal with the trade deficit.

93. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further policies he has to deal with the trade deficit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No further policies are necessary. The current account deficit will gradually narrow as the Government's tight monetary policy continues to slow domestic demand.

80. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest balance of trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information was published on 24 October in table 12 of the monthly press notice on the current account of the balance of payments, a copy of which is available in the Library.

85. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he now expects the balance of trade to be in surplus.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Tighter monetary policy is already slowing the growth in demand. As domestic demand continues to slow down, and new capacity comes on stream, the deficit on visible trade will gradually narrow.

87. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with which European Community countries Britain is running a trade deficit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The United Kingdom's balance of trade in the first nine months of 1989 was in deficit with the following European Community member states:

Belgium/Luxembourg
Denmark
Federal Republic of Germany
France
Italy
Netherlands

94. Mr. Orme: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further policies he has to deal with the trade deficit.

Mr. Major: No further policies are necessary. The current account deficit will gradually narrow as the Government's tight monetary policy continues to slow domestic demand.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current balance of trade with (a) Australia and (b) New Zealand.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the first nine months of 1989 the United Kingdom's crude balance of trade[1] showed a surplus of £550 million with Australia and a deficit of £49 million with New Zealand.

These figures are only available on an overseas trade statistics basis which tends to overstate deficits and understate surpluses.

[1] Exports free on board (fob) less imports carriage, insurance and freight (cif).

Share Ownership

77. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the adult population owns shares (a) directly and (b) as members of pension schemes and life assurance schemes.

Mr. Lilley: Twenty per cent. of the adult population owned shares directly at the beginning of the year. Subsequently the Abbey National flotation will have led to a large number of people becoming shareholders for the first time.

Surveys suggest that around 60 per cent. of the adult population have some form of life assurance policy, 35 per cent. are members of company pension schemes and 13 per cent. have personal pensions.

Manufacturing Output

78. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total percentage growth in output in manufacturing industry for each of the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: On the basis of the most recent published figures, manufacturing output grew by 6·8 per cent. between 1987 and 1988, following growth of 5·5 per cent. between 1986 and 1987.

Balance of Payments

81. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance of payments deficit for the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information was published on 24 October in table 2 of the monthly press notice on the current account of the balance of payments, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Base Rates

83. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to industry of the rise in base rates since April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not possible to answer this question with any acceptable degree of precision. It would depend on how industry reacted to the interest rate changes themselves and any changes in borrowing for other reasons. The costs to British industry of high inflation are far greater than the costs of higher interest rates. Tight monetary policy will ensure that inflation is brought down.

Investment

84. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on current investment levels in British industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1988 business investment grew by 17½ per cent. to reach £51·3 billion at 1985 prices. Business investment is now at the highest level ever recorded as a proportion of GDP.

88. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on levels of industrial investment and company profitability.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1988 business investment grew by 17½ per cent. to reach £51·3 billion at 1985 prices. Business investment is now at the highest level ever recorded as a proportion of GDP.

Data for company profitability are available only up to 1987. The net real rate of return on capital employed for non-North-sea industrial and commercial companies rose from 9 per cent. in 1986 to 10 per cent. in 1987, the highest level for over a decade.

High levels of investment and company profitability reflect the success of the Government's macroeconomic policy.

96. Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest figures for manufacturing investment, and show comparable figures in real terms for a similar period in 1978.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Revised estimates of investment in the second quarter of 1989—the most recent available —were included in the GDP press release issued on 22 September. Manufacturing investment including leased assets, is estimated to have been £3·2 billion (1985 prices, seasonally adjusted) in the second quarter of 1989, compared to £2·7 billion in the second quarter of 1978. The figure for the second quarter of 1989 is the highest recorded, and comes after growth of 8¼ per cent. a year between 1983 and 1988. Under the last Labour Government manufacturing investment grew by less than 2½ per cent. a year.

Manufacturing Output

91. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and what was the figure for the same month in 1973.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The August 1989 index of manufacturing output (based on 1985 = 100, seasonally adjusted) was 120·0, 8·1 per cent. higher than the level of 111·0 in August 1973. Figures for individual months can be erratic, however, and a more reliable comparison can generally be made on the basis of three-month on three-month changes. On this latter basis, in the three months to August 1989, manufacturing output was 7·3 per cent. higher than in the same period in 1973.

Government Data Network

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the development of the Government data network.

Mr. Ryder: In addition to the service provided to the initial four departments, Department of Social Security, Inland Revenue, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and Home Office, access agreements to use the network have been made between Racal Data Networks Ltd. and Department of Employment, Department of Energy, General Register Office (Scotland), Her Majesty's Stationery Office, the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, Her Majesty's Treasury and the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce. Discussions with the contractor on development of the service, including its use to carry value added data services, are proceeding.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average yearly public expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product from (a) 1970 to 1979 and (b) 1980 to 1988 as shown in table 2.3 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1989-90.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 October 1989]: The averages of the annual ratios of general Government expenditure (excluding privatisation proceeds) to GDP for the financial years 1970-71 to 1979-80 and 1980-81 to 1988-89 on a basis consistent with the figures given in table 2.3 of the 1989 FSBR are 43·75 and 44·5 per cent. respectively. In the earlier period the ratio peaked at 48·5 per cent. in 1975-76. The highest level in the later period was 46·75 per cent. in 1982-83; and ratio in 1988-89 was 39·5 per cent.

SCOTLAND

Exports

71. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of Scottish exports in the latest year for which information is available; and what was the comparable figure in the previous five years.

72. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of exports from Scotland in the latest year for which information is available; and what was the figure for each of the previous five years.

73. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of exports from Scotland in the latest period for which information is available; and what was the comparable figure in the previous five years.

74. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of Scottish exports in the latest year for which information is available; and what was the comparable figure in the previous five years.

Mr. Lang: There are no official figures for Scottish exports since overseas trade statistics are compiled on a United Kingdom basis only. This is because United Kingdom export statistics are collected at ports of exit and Scottish-produced goods can and do leave the country from ports throughout Britain. The Scottish Council (Development and Industry) carries out an annual survey of Scottish manufactured exports. This is a voluntary survey of manufactured exports only, and the preliminary results for 1988 indicate Scottish manufactured exports of £7,166 million. The comparable figures for the previous five years are set out in the table.

	£ million
1983	4,254
1984	4,953
1985	5,522
1986	5,300
1987	6,393

Birds (Isle of Islay)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many birds, by species, were illegally killed by poisons on the Island of Islay for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 17 birds were killed by the illegal use of pesticides on Islay, as confirmed by the wildlife incident investigation service, from 1979 to the current date. Details are as follows.

1979	Gyr Falcon
1980	—
1981	Buzzard
1982	Golden Eagle
1983	Crow
1984	—
1985	—
1986	Buzzard
1987	Buzzard; Crows (5)
1988	Buzzard; Raven; Golden Eagles (2)
1989	Raven; Buzzard

Correspondence

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why the Minister of State responsible for industry the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale, (Mr. Lang) has not replied to the letter on the Clyde port authority and the Rothesay dock in Clydebank from the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie.

Mr. Lang: I regret that I have no record of having received the letter to which the hon. Member refers until he sent me a copy under cover of his letter of 3 October. I have arranged for the correspondence to be passed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport who will send a reply.

Public Sector Rented Homes

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial help the Government propose to give to councils to build new public sector rented accommodation in areas where there is a shortage of such accommodation, including Tweeddale.

Mr. Rifkind: It is for individual housing authorities to determine their own policies and priorities, based on their own assessment of housing needs in their districts, and to programme capital expenditure accordingly within the resources made available. If councils identify a particular need for additional rented accommodation in the public sector then they should in the first instance include proposals for remedying any such housing shortage in the housing capital programme due to be submitted to the Scottish Development Department by Friday 3 November. Next year's capital allocations will be determined, as in previous years, in the light of the aggregate resources available and the competing requirements of all 56 housing authorities.

Rents to Mortgages Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to promote his rents to mortgages scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 30 October that Scottish Homes is now able to consider applications to purchase under the rents to mortgages scheme. This is a pilot scheme scheduled to run for three years during which time its results will be monitored carefully to ensure that any promotional opportunities are quickly identified and acted upon.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the amount a tenant, paying an average Scottish council home rent, would pay if the tenant participated in his Department's rents to mortgages scheme, showing the method of calculation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The scheme introduced by Scottish Homes does not apply to tenants of local authorities. The method of calculation would follow that outlined in the Scottish Homes booklet on rents and mortgages placed in the Libraries of the House of Lords and House of Commons. However the calculation following demonstrates the notional financial arrangements which would apply to a tenant of a local authority house (rather than flat) paying rent at the level of the average council house tenant, whose discount entitlement is that of the average council house tenant and whose home has a market value of the sale of the average council house in Scotland.

	Average
Market Value of House	£23,975·00
RTM Discount (Equivalent RTB discount less 15 per cent. points)	36 per cent.
Therefore Purchase Price	£15,344·00
Weekly Rent[1]	£18·79
Sum Available for Mortgage Repayment (weekly) (Rent + 10 per cent. less £5 per week)	£15·67

	Average
Amount of Mortgage Supportable (Assumes interest at 13·75 per cent.)	£6,668·00
Deferred Financial Commitment	£8,676·00

* This is the average rent for all council homes in Scotland.

Forensic Science

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many scientifically qualified persons work in the forensic science departments of each Scottish police force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Four police forces have forensic science laboratories in which the following numbers of scientifically qualified staff are employed:

	Number
Grampian	7
Lothian and Borders	8
Strathclyde	25
Tayside	3

The remaining four forces use these laboratories for forensic science services.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will increase the funding of the independent forensic unit of the department of forensic science at Strathclyde university in the light of the requirement on police forces to pay for forensic services.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Funding for the Strathclyde university department of forensic science as for universities generally is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Official Stationery

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if any reimbursement to public funds has been made for his use of official Government stationery to write an undated letter to students of St. Andrew's university inviting them to consider joining the University Conservative Association;

(2) what is his policy towards the use by Ministers in his department of official Government stationery for party political purposes;

(3) what was the charge to public funds of his use of official Government stationery to write an undated letter to students of St. Andrew's university inviting them to consider joining the University Conservative Association.

Mr. Rifkind: I regret that, through inadvertence, a sheet of Government stationery was used for the issue from my office of a letter with this political purpose. This was contrary to normal practice and should not happen again. The cost of reimbursement would be disproportionate to the amount involved.

Roads

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) fatal and (b) serious road traffic accidents have occurred on the A98 Fochabers-Buckie road in each of the last five years, including 1989 to the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of fatal and serious accidents requested for the Fochabers to Buckie stretches of the A98 are as follows:

A98 Fochabers to Buckie

	Fatal	Serious
1985	2	1
1986	0	3
1987	0	2
1988	0	3
1989 (to June)	1	2

I understand there has been a further fatal accident in October this year but the Scottish Development Department has yet to receive formal notification of it.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many SDD funded road improvement schemes have been completed on the Fochaber-Buckie stretch of the A98 in each of the last five years; how many proposals for SDD funded improvement schemes on that route are currently under consideration; and if he will give the costs involved in each instance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There has been one improvement carried out in the last five years. This was at Tulloch Farm corner and was undertaken during the financial year 1988-89 at a cost of £108,000. Three further improvement schemes are planned for this section and will be started after completion of the statutory procedures and when available resources and other priorities permit. These are Portgordon crossroads, Arradoul to Barrhill road and Swiss Cottage corner and are estimated to cost £122,000, £238,000 and £650,000 respectively.

Nurses

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of enrolled nurses who undertook bridging courses in each of the past two years, giving a breakdown per health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Only certain health boards offer such courses. The numbers for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are set out in the table.

Nurses Undertaking Bridging Courses

	1987-88	1988-89
Argyll and Clyde	5	16
Ayrshire and Arran	10	19
Dumfries and Galloway	10	4
Fife	18	32
Forth Valley	14	13
Grampian	47	49
Greater Glasgow	142	152
Highland	3	12
Lanarkshire	28	38
Lothian	45	36
Tayside	31	21
Total	353	392

Mortgage and Rent Arrears

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the number of owner-occupiers whose homes were repossessed, (b) the number of owner-occupiers whose mortgages were six to 12 months in arrears and (c) the number of owner-occupiers whose mortgages were over 12 months in arrears for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is available only for building society loans, for the United Kingdom as a whole. The most recent figures were published by the Council of Mortgage Lenders in the 9 September issue of its newsletter "Mortgage Finance Monthly", a copy of which is in the Library.

Hospitals (Self-governing Status)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what method he intends to consult staff and patient representatives or local communities before awarding self-governing status to hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 October 1989]: Our proposals are set out in the document "Self Governing Hospitals: An Initial Guide" which was issued when we debated the health service in the Scottish Grand Committee estimates debate on 25 July.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what action he is taking this year to promote or publicise the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations; and what estimates he has of the costs involved for the agricultural industry in complying with these regulations;

(2) what estimates he has of the costs involved in implementing the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations for (a) industry and (b) small businesses in Scotland; and what steps he is taking in the current year to promote or publicise these regulations for those sectors.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Where substances hazardous to health were adequately and reliably controlled and where there was full compliance with existing legislation, the costs of implementing the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations should be marginal; they will arise mainly from reviewing and formalising existing arrangements. The Health and Safety Executive estimated in its cost-benefit analysis for the COSHH proposals that for a typical small firm, the additional costs arising would amount to no more than about one quarter of a percentage point of the firm's net output. This estimate included the costs of monitoring of exposure and health surveillance which apply to only a minority of firms. For most larger firms, the costs will be substantially smaller in relation to net output.

No special analysis for any particular geographical region, nor for any sector of activity, including agriculture, has been carried out.

The Health and Safety Executive has promoted and publicised the regulations by a variety of means, including national and trade advertising and the distribution of some 3·5 million introductory leaflets. Many activities have been particularly geared to the need to reach small firms, including the provision of information to the principal small firms advisory organisations.

Standards Register

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what finance was provided by or what participation the Scottish Office had in producing the United Kingdom standards register; and what steps he is taking to promote it.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The publication "Standards significant to health and safety at work", launched by the Health and Safety Executive on 22 June 1989, updates a similar publication first produced in 1983. It is a list, published for information, of those standards to which frequent reference is made by HSE in its advisory and enforcement work.

A press release was issued by HSE at the time of publication of the list and the British Standards Institute has co-operated with the publicity.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much plutonium has been recovered from the uranium dioxide breeder fuel pins and pellets integral in the Dounreay prototype fast reactor core fuel sub-assemblies; and if this matter was reprocessed with, or separately from, the uranium/plutonium dioxide fuel pellets incorporated into the same core sub-assemblies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the UKAEA. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the number of export licences granted for the export of plutonium to the Federal Republic of Germany for each year since 1959;

(2) if he will list the number of export licences granted for the export of plutonium to Japan for each year since 1959;

(3) if he will list the number of export licences granted for the export of plutonium to Canada for each year since 1959;

(4) if he will list the number of export licences granted for the export of plutonium to Belgium for each year since 1959;

(5) if he will list the number of export licences granted for the export of plutonium to Italy for each year since 1959;

(6) if he will list the number of export licences granted for the export of plutonium to (a) Sweden, (b) the Netherlands, (c) Switzerland, (d) the United States of America and (e) Austria, for each year since exports of plutonium to each country began;

(7) if he will list the number of plutonium export licences granted for the export of plutonium to France for each year since 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It has been the standard practice of successive Governments not to make public the number of export licences granted for the various categories of goods controlled.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether, under existing arrangements one export licence for the export of plutonium is sufficient to cover more than one contract for the supply of plutonium, or more than one load of plutonium; and what information is required to be supplied by the applicants for such an export licence to be granted.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Export licences for plutonium are issued for a specific quantity of material destined for a specific purpose. Multiple shipments can be made under an individual licence.

Applications must be made on the Department of Trade and Industry's official export licence application form which calls for detailed information, including the end-use and user. Additional information may be requested in support of a particular application depending on the circumstances of the case.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has assessed the proposals contained in the two volume report "Energy Technologies for Reducing Emissions of Greenhouse Gases", from an experts' seminar at the Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development in Paris in April.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A number of copies of the report have been received by my Department and the energy technology support unit. Members of the Department and the energy technology support unit attended the seminar, and subsequently have been assessing some of the more significant of the many technical papers that were then presented.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he, any other Minister, or any official of his Department was present at, or presented a paper to, the seminar on the greenhouse effect at the Institution of Mechanical Engineers on 29 September.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Officials from this Department and the energy technology support unit (ETSU) attended the seminar. An official from the chief scientist's group within ETSU gave a short paper at the meeting.

Earthquakes (Nuclear Plants)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make available to the state of California the expertise of the nuclear installations inspectorate team which evaluated the Calder hall and Wylfa nuclear plants in the United Kingdom after earthquakes, in order to assist in the assessment of the safety of nuclear plants in California following the earthquake on 17 October.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate would, if asked, be willing to provide assistance.

Conservation

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to evaluate the applicability to the United Kingdom of energy saving and energy efficiency proposals contained in the United States National Appliance Energy Conservation Act (1987).

Mr. Peter Morrison: As I stated in my reply to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 10 July 1989 at column 378, my energy efficiency office has already commissioned a study of domestic electrical appliances. The United States National Appliance Energy Conservation Act (1987) is among the matters to be examined in this study.

Solar Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he, any departmental Minister or departmental official, was present at, or presented a paper to, the conference on energy policy and the environment at the Geological Society, London, on 9 October.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No Minister or official from this Department attended the meeting "Energy Policy and the Environment" organised by the United Kingdom section of the International Solar Energy Society on 9 October.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department, or the energy technology support unit at the Atomic Energy Research Establishment, Harwell, has studied the development of the Rheinische-Westfaelische Elektrizitaetswerke 340 kilowatt photovoltaic solar power plant at Kober-Gondorf, to judge the applicability of this technology to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Preliminary results from the photovoltaic plant at Kober-Gondorf were presented at the ninth European Commission solar photovoltaic energy conference in September 1989. A representative of the energy technology support unit attended the conference. The 340 kW peak, array covering 15,000 square metres has just completed its first year of operation since commissioning in October 1988. It produced a little over 73,000 kWh against an expectation of 250,000 kWh when fully available.

A review of solar technologies is currently being undertaken within the United Kingdom renewable energy R & D programme and the results are expected to be published shortly.

World Energy Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what Ministers and officials of his Department were present at the world energy conference held in Canada in September; what papers his Department contributed; and if he will make a statement on the beneficial outcome of the conference in regard to (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Community.

Mr. Wakeham: Three officials from my Department accompanied me to Canada last month where, inter alia, I addressed the World Energy Conference on "Sustainable energy development, possible or impossible?" The main purpose of my speech was to alert the conference to the need to adapt energy strategies to take account of environmental consequences, particularly in relation to climate change. I outlined some possible responses, in particular market-related measures and sought the world energy community's help in resolving the problems which I see as critical to increasing the well-being of all countries, particularly developing nations. My speech was distributed as a conference document. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. The Department contributed no other papers.

The conference provided a valuable opportunity for scientists, engineers and industrialists from the western, eastern and developing nations to explore new ideas for meeting global energy needs in an environmentally responsible fashion.

Geothermal Energy Projects

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has evaluated the research undertaken by the Federal German Ministry for research and technology since 1982, on geological research in Bavaria into hot dry rocks, in terms of its relevance for the United Kingdom geothermal energy projects.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The British geothermal hot dry rock research team is fully aware of the German research and assisted with the early experimental work. The Falkenberg project in north-east Bavaria was operated by the Federal Republic of Germany Ministry of Research and Technology between 1978 and 1987. Investigations were made into the hydraulic and heat-transfer properties of fractured granite at depths between 300 and 500 metres. The British team conducted comparable work at Rosemanowes quarry in Cornwall between 1977 and 1980 with similar results to those obtained later in Germany. The British team has of course gone on to more advanced work at greater depth in Cornwall.

Decommissioning Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what volumes of decommissioning waste will be sent from Sellafield to that Federal Republic of Germany arising from section 2*(a)*(iii) of the joint declaration between the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic on the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, signed in Bonn on 25 July; and how this will be calculated.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Contractual negotiations are still proceeding regarding the reprocessing in the United Kingdom of further quantities of German spent fuel. Therefore it is not possible to estimate the volume of waste which will be returned following reprocessing.

North-West Hutton Platform

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy at what time crew members were mustered to emergency or lifeboat stations during evacuation of the north-west Hutton production platform; how many crew members were evacuated; how many crew members were left on board after the evacuation; and why these crew members were left on board.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At 10.38 hours on 3 September 1989 the crew were mustered to emergency stations; 108 persons were evacuated as a precautionary measure. There was no immediate danger and 77 crew members remained on board to continue the well controlled operation.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether during the drilling programme prior to the evacuation of the north-west Hutton production platform, full mud returns were recorded while setting the casing and cementing it into place; whether a cement bond log was run after the casing was set; what was the equivalent mud weight recorded during the formation integrity test; what was (i) the expected and (ii) the actual formation pressure at the depth at which the kick or unexpected increase in pressure originated; and what was (a) the programmed and (b) the actual mud density and weight.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Full mud returns were recorded while setting and cementing the casing. A cement bond log was not run after the casing was set. Formation integrity tests measured at two points in the well bore were 14·1 pounds per gallon at 6,837 ft. and 13·3 pounds per gallon at 6,892 ft. The expected and actual formation pressures were 7,800 psi and 9,600 psi respectively. The programmed and actual mud weights were 12·8 pounds per gallon.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many previous wells had been drilled in the structure, including exploration and appraisal wells, where drilling operations were taking place prior to the evacuation of north-west Hutton production platform.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A total of 55 exploration, appraisal and development wells have been drilled in the north-west Hutton field.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the well in the drilling operations prior to the evacuation of north-west Hutton production platform production was shut in using the blowout preventers; if the choke above the blowout preventers was open when the well was shut in; after the blowout preventers were closed what well head shut in pressures were recorded; if a formation higher up the well from the kick zone fractured or broke down, allowing the uncontrolled movement of gas or fluid from the kick zone via the well bore into the fractured formation; if an underground blowout occurred; and at what depth the formation fractured.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The blow-out preventer and the choke were closed simultaneously to shut in the well. Drill pipe pressure of 500 psi was recorded which fell to 375 psi indicating that a zone higher up in the well formation had fractured and an underground blowout had occurred. It is not possible to be precisely certain at what depth the formation fractured.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy in which well drilling was taking place on the north-west Hutton production platform prior to evacuation; and what was the rig activity at the time of the kick or unexpected upsurge of pressure in the well.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Drilling was taking place on well 211/27-A42. At the time of the well incident, drilling was being undertaken with a 12.¼" bit at a measured depth of 13,113 feet below the kelly bushing and a true vertical depth of 11,710 feet.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made in relation to the north-west Hutton production platform of the possibility of an abnormally pressured formation in the field, charged by gas or fluid from another formation, and of the hazard posed thereby in respect of other wells which may be drilled in the formation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The possibility of encountering an abnormally pressurised formation is present in all drilling operations. Before consent is given to any well operation, my Department must be satisfied that the drilling programme has been designed to provide safeguards against this eventuality.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what remedial action was taken to stabilise the well at the time of evacuation of the north-west Hutton production platform; at what times pumping of cement into the well (a) commenced and (b) ceased; at what time all movements of gas or fluids through the well bore ceased; if the well is now safe; and if it has been re-entered since the incident which led to the evacuation.

Mr. Peter Morrison: After the well was closed in, attempts were made to kill it by circulating mud of a higher density. The first cementing operation commenced at 23.00 hours on 4 September 1989. Operations continued for several days. The first occasion when movement of gas and fluids appeared to have ceased was 12.00 hours on 4 September 1989 although subsequently there was some further movement. It is not possible to be precise about when movement actually ceased. The well is now considered safe and has been re-entered.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the diameter of the last casing set around the drill hole in the drilling operations prior to the evacuation of north-west Hutton production platform; at what depth, measured and true vertical, the casing was set around the drill hole; how many attempts had been made by the operators to set the casing around the drill hole; and at what depth, measured and true vertical, the casing was programmed to be set around the drill hole.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The diameter of the casing set was 13⅜ in at a measured depth of 6,823 ft and a true vertical depth of 6,102 ft. No difficulty was experienced in setting and cementing the casing. It was programmed to be set at 150 ft into the cretaceous formation but a re-evaluation of the indicators used to determine the setting depth suggests that the casing was set just in the top of the cretaceous.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the immediate reason for the evacuation of the north-west Hutton production platform; at what time the evacuation took place; what was the sequence of events leading to the evacuation; and at what time each of these took place.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Evacuation was undertaken as a precautionary measure to reduce the number of persons at risk because the well was not responding to measures to regain full control using normal procedures. At 18.27 hours on 2 September 1989 the well was closed in by the use of the blow-out preventer. Thereafter attempts were made to kill the well by the circulation of mud. At 09.00 hours on 3 September it was concluded that the well could not be killed in this way. At 10.30 hours the decision was taken to reduce the numbers on the platform and at 10.38 hours the platform was shut down and the crew mustered to emergency stations.

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the measured and the true vertical depth of the hole in the drilling operations prior to the evacuation of north-west Hutton production platform; if, in the drilling operations, the reservoir had been reached; and if, prior to the drilling operations, or concurrent with them, the reservoir had been recently pressurised, through gas, or water injections, or by any other means.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The measured depth of drilling was 13,113 ft and the true vertical depth was 11,710 ft. A reservoir had been reached. The reservoir had been subjected to water injection.

Nuclear Plants (Security)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many members of the Atomic Energy Authority constabulary have applied for voluntary early retirement on the special terms circulated on 26 May;

(2) how many staff employed by the Royal British Legion security division are currently engaged at the Sellafield site; and if he will list by site the numbers of Royal British Legion Association staff engaged elsewhere on United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority sites;

(3) if he will list the number of Atomic Energy Authority constabulary employed at the Sellafield site, West Cumbria on 1 July for each of the last 10 years; and what is the projected number for July 1990;

(4) if he will show for each relevant site the proposed reduction in posts of the Atomic Energy Authority constabulary.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the UKAEA. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list those areas of the Sellafield site which are patrolled by staff of the security division of the Royal British Legion Association;

(2) if he will state when Royal British Legion Association security officers were first engaged at the Sellafield site; how many were initially engaged; and what is the projected number for July 1990;

(3) what qualifications are required of people applying for employment as Royal British Legion Association security officers at the Sellafield site, west Cumbria.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for BNFL. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENT

Pendle (Financial Support)

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will summarise the financial support provided by his Department to Pendle in each year since 1979 divided as between the different programmes.

Mr. Chope: The following financial support has been provided by the Department to the borough of Pendle since the 1979-80 financial year.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the potential effect of the threatened legal action by local authorities against the water and sewerage plcs on the flotation of the companies.

Mr. Howard: None.

On the basis of legal advice, including advice from leading counsel, we are confident that the threatened action is groundless and that there is no legal foundation for it. It was Parliament's clear intention in 1973 that all the pre-1974 local authority assets connected with the functions of the new water authorities should be vested in the water authorities. Similarly, in 1989, the vesting schemes under the 1989 Act were designed to ensure that such of those assets remaining in the ownership of the water authorities and not required for the functions of the National Rivers Authority should be vested in the water service companies. We are satisfied that in both cases the legislative provisions fully achieved those objectives.

None the less my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales and I have today put before Parliament departmental minutes describing indemnities which the Government propose to grant to the water and sewerage companies appointed under the Water Act 1989. Under these, the companies would be indemnified against any material additional expenditure incurred as a result of legal claims, of the kind understood to be planned by a consortium of local authorities, against the proceeds of sales of assets which cease to be used for water and sewerage functions.

We believe that such indemnities are extremely unlikely to be called upon. But we nevertheless feel duty bound to protect the interests of taxpayers by securing flotation on the basis that Parliament intended.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to make an order specifying the amounts eligible for capital allowances to successor water companies under section 95 of the Water Act.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I propose, and Her Majesty's Treasury consents, to make an order today under section 95 of the Water Act, specifying the amounts eligible for capital allowances on plant and machinery and on industrial buildings in respect of the qualifying assets transferred from the water authorities to the successor companies.

The total amounts eligible to be specified for each company will be:

	Industrial buildings £'000s	Plant and machinery £'000s
Anglian Water Services Limited	80,681	1,149,424
Northumbrian Water Limited	56,348	344,428
North West Water Limited	83,748	1,076,092
Severn Trent Water Limited	43,995	1,018,365
Southern Water Services Limited	36,710	559,525
South West Water Services Limited	33,695	281,621
Thames Water Utilities Limited	58,016	1,031,962
Wessex Water Services Limited	6,575	460,925
Yorkshire Water Services Limited	63,825	783,952
Dwr Cymru Cyfyngedig	48,262	451,387

These amounts have been determined after consultation with the companies and Inland Revenue.

In the same way as other businesses the water service companies are subject to corporation tax and are entitled to capital allowances on their qualifying assets including those transferred to them from predecessor water authorities. As the predecessor authorities were exempt from tax and no consideration passed on transfer of the assets, it was necessary to determine opening figures of eligible expenditure for capital allowances purposes. The amounts shown represent the depreciated historical cost of the qualifying assets and are a fair measure of their value for tax purposes.

Eligible expenditure incurred after the transfer date will be agreed with the Inland Revenue in the normal way.

Community Charge Rebates

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has of the income levels up to which community charge rebates will be payable on hypothetical 1989-90 community charges of (i) £250, (ii) £300 and (iii) £350; and what the income levels will be for (i), (ii) and (iii) for actual 1990-91 community charges.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply. The levels of income at which community charge benefits will be payable will be dependent upon the personal circumstances of the claimant. The information requested is set out in the table for various representative groups of claimants. The figures in the table assume that: claimants under pension age are working and the standard disregard has been applied; claimants over pension age are not working; all claimants have savings of less than £3,000; and no member of the household is disabled.

Landmark Trust

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet Bryn Jones, the director of the Landmark Trust.

Mr. Trippier: No. I understand that the director is, in fact, Mr. Robin Evans.

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment if, following Her Majesty's Government's signing of the Basel convention on transfrontier transport of hazardous toxic waste, on 6 October, he will make it his policy to refuse entry to the United Kingdom of any hazardous waste cargo originating in a state that has not signed the convention.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Basel convention prohibits a party from importing hazardous waste from a non-party. An exception to this is permissable where there is a bilateral, multilateral or regional agreement or arrangement with a non-party. The Government urge all countries to ratify the convention.

Only if there are sound environmental reasons would the United Kingdom contemplate entering into agreements or arrangements with non-parties to allow imports of hazardous waste.

GRID and GEMS

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what involvement with the United Nations global resource information database and the global environmental monitoring system his Department has had over the past year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Government policy is to support the work of UNEP. Departmental statisticians have been closely involved in the production of the second edition of UNEP's environmental data report (EDR) which became available last week. The EDR is the main vehicle for presenting the data from GEMS and GRID to a wider audience. The Department also supports UNEP's global monitoring efforts through GEMS. Data are supplied to GEMS annually from the United Kingdom national air pollution monitoring network and from the harmonised monitoring network on water quality. The co-ordinator for the water monitoring programme in GEMS is in DOE.

Environmental Assessments

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each case where an application for direction has been made since 15 July 1988 what further information has been requested from the developers, local plannng authorities or others; and what additional scientific or technical advice has been sought before determining whether environmental assessment is required.

Mr. Moynihan: In most cases in which the Secretary of State has been asked for a direction on the need for environmental assessment, he has been able to make a decision on the basis of information already available to him. In a few cases he has informally sought further advice from the local planning authority or from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. In one case, a proposed incinerator for medical and hospital wastes at Kirkby, Merseyside, the developer was formally asked for further information under regulation 6(3) of the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988; the developer subsequently withdrew the related planning application and no direction was given.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those developments where a direction whether environmental assessment is required has been given without application by the developer, and the effect of each decision.

Mr. Moynihan: A direction has been given without an application by the developer in the following case which concerned a local authority's own development proposal:

LPA	Proposed development	Date of direction	Effect of direction
Lincoln City Council	Business Park, Bishop's Bridge, Lincoln	13 April 1989	EA required

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to monitor and assess the quality of environmental impact statements which have been required subsequent to the implementation of the European Community directive on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment.

Mr. Moynihan: We are about to commission research to monitor the operation of the regulations which implement the EC directive in respect of projects requiring planning permission. The research will include some assessment of the adequacy of environmental statements submitted by developers.

Yachting

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the implications for participation in the sport of the International Yacht Racing Union's proposals to categorise yachtsmen into professional and amateurs.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received no such representations though I am aware of the Royal Yachting Association's concerns. This is a matter for the governing bodies of the sport.

Plastics

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce a coding system for grading plastics similar to that used in the United States of America to encourage the development of efficient plastic collection and recycling programmes involving the general public.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced our aim to improve the level of recycling of domestic waste. We are, in conjunction with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, looking at the possibility of establishing a coding scheme to assist in the post-consumer recycling of plastic.

Rosehaugh Self-build Housing Initiative

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an assessment of the Rosehaugh self-build housing initiative and issue recommendations to district councils on the applicability of this initiative to those who are unemployed or on low incomes in their areas and could be thus assisted to build their own homes.

Mr. Chope: The first scheme under this initiative is still under way; so it is too early to make an assessment. I understand a number of similar schemes are in prospect, which give people the opportunity to harness their energy and commitment to provide a home for themselves. I very much hope that they will be successful, and I would encourage local authorities to consider whether this initiative would be of help in their own areas.

Partridges

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the extension of the open general licence to release chukar and hybrid partridges into the wild;

(2) whether his Department is aware of any research into the impact on partridge populations of the release of chukar and hybrid partridges into the wild.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Last year the Game Conservancy produced a paper "The Chukar Report" dealing with the 'impact of releasing hybrid partridges on wild populations of red-legged partridges'. The main conclusion was that releases of Chukar partridges and their hybrids have an adverse conservation effect on the native partridge and should be phased out. General licences which expire at the end of 1992 have therefore been issued. This will enable game farmers to phase out releases of Chukars and their hybrids.

Myopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will commission research into the incidence of myopathy in wild deer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have no plans to do so.

Housing Policies (Monitoring)

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he has put in hand to ensure that councils monitor the effectiveness of their housing policies and publish the results.

Mr. Chope: The Local Government and Housing Bill will require every local housing authority in England to publish information about their housing management performance, for their tenants. We are consulting the local authority associations at the moment on the type and extent of information to be provided. The consultation paper, issued on 10 October, has been placed in the Library.

Building Land

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied that councils will be able to provide sufficient land for five years' building requirement in the light of his new planning guidance note; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes. While we propose to end the special presumption in favour of housing development which currently operates in certain circumstances, the draft guidance nevertheless stresses the need for adequate planned provision for new housing, and for regular monitoring of land availability.

Parkinson Homes

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many owner-occupied Parkinson homes remained unrepaired at the latest available date; and how many of these were built in Bristol.

Mr. Chope: By April 1989, all but 187 of the 730 privately owned Parkinson houses identified by local authorities had been repurchased; of these, 178 were built in Bristol, of which 17 have either been repaired or are registered for repair under the PRC Houses Ltd warranty scheme.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his latest actions to try to prevent the build-up of chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Co-ordinated international action is the only effective answer to this global problem. The United Kingdom proposals for strengthening the Montreal protocol would require a complete phase out of chlorofluorocarbons by the end of the century. These proposals, which have now been adopted by the European Community, will require a faster phase out than proposals made by any other country.

Sewage Discharges (Bristol Channel)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to refuse permission to water authorities or water companies to construct or maintain long sea outfalls delivering raw sewage into the Bristol channel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Applications for consent to discharge sewage into the Bristol channel are matters in the first instance for the National Rivers Authority. Each application will be considered on its own merits.

United Nations Environment Programme

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to distribute copies of the United Nations environment programme's environmental data report for 1987-89 to interested bodies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The environmental data report was prepared for the United Nations environment programme by the monitoring and assessment research centre at King's college, University of London, in association with the World Resources Institute, Washington and the Department of the Environment. It is a valuable contribution to UNEP's global environmental monitoring programme and an important and authoritative source of environmental information. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House. The report will be publicised at a seminar on environmental awareness on 10 November organised by the United Kingdom committee for UNEP which will be attended by a wide range of interested Government and non-governmental organisations, including industry, the media and the academic community.

Ministerial Visit

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the visit of the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities.

Mr. David Hunt: As I mentioned in my letter of 19 October to the hon. Member, I was able to visit his constituency on 27 October. I am writing to the hon. Member with details of my tour of the Brunswick enterprise centre on that day.

Downing Street (Barricade)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated scrap value of the gates to be erected across Downing street.

Mr. Chope: Less than £1,000.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated total cost of the permanent gates to be erected across the end of Downing street.

Mr. Chope: It is not the Government's practice to comment on the costing of individual security measures.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Downing street ceased to be a public thoroughfare.

Mr. Chope: Access to Downing street is controlled under police common law powers which allow them to take reasonable steps to preserve the peace and prevent threats to it.

The present barriers at the Whitehall entrance to Downing street, which the demountable gate will replace, have been in place since 1982.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the permanent gates to be erected across Downing street are expected to provide more security than the present barrier.

Mr. Chope: Yes.

EMPLOYMENT

Skills Shortages

97. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the industries and the areas where he has been advised that there are significant shortages of skills such as to present a risk to effective or planned industrial production; and what action he proposes to take in response.

Mr. Nicholls: The detailed information is not available in the form requested.

It is for employers to assess their future skills needs in the light of their overall business plans and take the appropriate action. Details of the Government's sizeable contributions are set out in the White Paper "Employment in the 1990s" (Cd 540).

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the increase in average and median earnings of full-time adult male manual workers in manufacturing and non-manufacturing workers since April 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information from the new earnings survey is provided in the table:

Increase in weekly earnings April 1979–April 1[illegible]

Percent.

	Average	Median
Manufacturing	139	134
Non-manufacturing	138	137

Note: Full-time adult male manual employees in Great Britain whose earnings were not affected by absence.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the average earnings of full-time adult male manual workers in the motor vehicle industry and (b) the average earnings of full-time adult male non-manual workers generally at (i) the latest available date, (ii) for 1959 and (iii) for 1972; and what information he has as to the nearest comparable figures for 1972 and the latest available date in West Germany.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is provided in the tables:

1. Average gross hourly earnings of adult male employees in Great Britain: pay not affected by absence, April of each year

	1972 £	1989 £
(a) Manual employees in the motor vehicle industry	0·93	5·69
(b) All non-manual employees	1·11	8·23

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in (a) 1959 to 1968, (b) 1968 to 1979 and (c) 1979 to date in weekly and hourly earnings of (i) full-time adult male manual workers in manufacturing and all other full-time adult males excluding those working in the public sector and (ii) for manual workers and other workers in the public sector.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information from the new earnings survey is provided in the table:

Earnings of full-time adult employees in Great Britain whose earnings were not affected by absence; April of each year

			Percentage increase

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each of Training Agency's areas within Greater London, Birmingham and Greater Manchester, what are the latest available monthly statistics since September 1988, showing for each month (a) the number of referrals to employment training from Restart interviews, (b) the number of employment training action plans completed, (c) the number of starts with employment training training managers, (d) the number of employment training filled places, and (e) the number of profiled or contracted employment training places.

Mr. Nicholls: As the information requested is contained in a number of tables I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each of the Training Agency's areas within Greater London, Birmingham and Greater Manchester, what are the latest available statistics for employment training showing the number of trainees in each monthly period who (a) have entered employer-based work placements and the cumulative total of how many are in employer placements at the latest available date and (b) the number of trainees in each monthly period who entered project-based work placements and the cumulative total of how many are in project-based placements at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholls: Reliable statistics on the number of trainees on employer and project placements are not currently available at an area office level.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training places, at the latest available date, in each Training Agency area have been filled with starts with training managers; and what percentage that is in each case of total employment training places contracted in each training agency area, for the latest available four months.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 25 October 1989]: The figures are given in the following table.

Parliamentary Answers (Drafting)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many individuals were employed by his Department whose primary role it was to draft answers to parliamentary questions in November of each of the last five years; and how many he expects will be so employed at the end of November.

Mr. Eggar: My Department does not employ any individuals whose primary role is to draft answers to parliamentary questions. Answers are drafted by officials employed with policy responsibility for the subject area to which the question relates; it is part of their normal range of duties.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he plans to take regarding the Health and Safety Executive office at Baynards house.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no plans regarding the Health and Safety Executive office at Baynards house.

Health and Safety (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each Health and Safety Executive area, on how many occasions in the last three years Health and Safety Executive inspectors have arranged for letters to union appointed safety representatives to be translated into the appropriate mother-tongue language.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

Service Men's Wives

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has, for the latest year for which records exist and for the preceding three years, on the number of wives of service men seeking but unable to find employment (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in the British Army of the Rhine and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 27 October 1989]: This information is not available.

YTS

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons aged 16 and 17 years have not been offered places on YTS schemes in their own localities in each of the past 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 27 October 1989]: The Government guarantee the offer of a suitable YTS place to all young people under the age of 18 who are not in full-time employment or in full-time education who apply for one.

The guarantee continues to be met nationwide. At the end of September there were over 500,000 YTS places in contract, of which 110,821 were still unfilled.

Training (Statistics)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the monthly statistics for the latest available four months for Great Britain and each standard training agency area for employment training showing (a) entrants in each monthly period and the number of cumulative entrants since the scheme started, (b) the total number of currently filled places, (c) the number of trainees in each monthly period, on employer based work placements and on project-based placements and (d) the number of trainees who left the scheme in each monthly period and the number of cumulative leavers since the scheme started.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 20 October 1989]: The figures for entrants and filled places are provided in tables 1 and 2. Information about trainees on employer and project-based training on a particular day is not available at area office level. The figures are collected quarterly; the most recent figures for Great Britain are given in table 3. Information on leavers is not available at area office level. The figures for Great Britain are given in table 4.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Consumer Protection

6. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce new legislation or regulations on consumer protection.

31. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce new legislation or regulations on consumer protection.

Mr. Forth: We intend to improve the protection given to consumers in a number of ways including the introduction of regulations under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 on price indications and unit pricing about which we are currently engaging in public consultation, and changes to other legislation affecting consumers' interests.

55. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce new legislation or regulations on consumer protection.

Mr. Forth: We intend to improve the protection given to consumers in a number of ways including the introduction of regulations under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 on price indications and unit pricing about which we are currently engaging in public consultation, and changes to other legislation affecting consumers' interests.

Imports

11. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the rise in import penetration in manufactured goods from 1979 until the first quarter of the current year.

Mr. Ridley: Import penetration in manufacturing industry rose from 27 per cent. in 1979 to 36 per cent. in the year ending March 1989.

Petrol Retailing

18. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to respond to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on petrol retailing.

38. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to respond to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on petrol retailing.

46. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to respond to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on petrol retailing.

69. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to respond to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on petrol retailing.

Mr. Redwood: The deadline for completion of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report has been extended to 20 December. The nature and timing of the response will depend on the findings of the report.

Competition Policy

19. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans for a review of competition policy.

34. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans for a review of competition policy.

Mr. Redwood: We are in the process of implementing the conclusions of our wide-ranging review of competition policy, which were published last year, and have no plans for a further review.

21. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans for a review of competition policy.

Mr. Redwood: We are in the process of implementing the conclusions of our review of competition policy, which were published last year, and have no plans for a further review.

28. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans for a review of competition policy.

Mr. Redwood: We are in the process of implementing the conclusions of our review of competition policy, which were published last year, and have no plans for a further review.

EC Meetings

22. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet his EEC counterparts; and what matters will be discussed.

50. Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet his EEC counterparts; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Ridley: I intend to maintain close contact with all my EC counterparts, and a whole range of matters will be discussed.

Trade Statistics

23. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have a trade surplus, or a smaller trade deficit as a proportion of gross domestic product, than the United Kingdom.

47. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have a trade surplus, or a smaller trade deficit as a proportion of gross domestic product, than the United Kingdom.

70. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have a trade surplus, or a smaller trade deficit as a proportion of gross domestic product than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: All OECD countries except Portugal, Greece and Spain were in one or other category in 1988, the latest year for which complete figures are available.

Textiles (False Labelling)

24. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received over the question of false labelling of textiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Representations have been received from the west Yorkshire trading standards service and a number of hon. Members in west Yorkshire expressing concern about overstatement of the wool content in imported carpets, and in garments made from Italian reclaimed fabric. Responsibility for enforcing the regulations which require the fibre content of textile products to be accurately described rests with local authority trading standards departments.

Footwear Industry

25. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current state of the footwear industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department is fully aware of the difficulties facing United Kingdom footwear manufacturers and of their continuing concern over low-cost imports, particularly from the far east. We expect the Commission to publish the findings and recommendations of its Community-wide investigations into imports of footwear from Taiwan and South Korea shortly and we will give these prompt and serious consideration.

Labelling

26. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new plans for the labelling of consumer goods.

62. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new plans for the labelling of consumer goods.

65. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new plans for the labelling of consumer goods.

Mr. Forth: Additional labelling requirements will come into force over the next year for toys and all-terrain vehicles. The Government has made clear its support for the early introduction of a Community-wide voluntary eco-labelling scheme. In addition my Department is supporting work designed to establish a certification trademark which could be awarded to goods which consistently meet high specifications, although launch of such a scheme would depend on adequate support from industry.

Regional Assistance

27. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to conduct a review of the way regional selective assistance has operated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An evaluation of the operation and effects of regional selective assistance in the period 1980 to 1984 has recently been completed and will be published in the first part of next year. The findings will be taken into account in the future operation of the scheme.

35. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many individual firms and undertakings in the north west have benefited in the last 12 months as a result of funds made available through the regional selective assistance programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the period 1 October 1988 to 30 September 1989, payments of regional selective assistance were made to 483 firms and undertakings in the north west region.

39. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new plans for stimulating industry in Britain's regions.

60. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new plans for stimulating industry in Britain's regions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Changes in the focus of our regional policies were made early last year. There are no plans for further changes.

Internal Market

29. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further help is being given to companies to enable them to take full advantage of the establishment of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Redwood: My Department's own "Europe Open for Business" information service is continually updated and expanded. Practical help is available through our enterprise initiatives—the consultancy initiative and the export initiative are particularly relevant to firms preparing for the single market.

There is also a growing range of information and advice available from private sector organisations and my Department will continue to work with such organisations to help enhance the services they offer.

Competitiveness

30. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the competitiveness of British industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Most contacts which my Department has with industry and commerce involve matters having a bearing on United Kingdom competitiveness.

59. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the competitiveness of British industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Most contacts which my Department has with industry and commerce involve matters having a bearing on United Kingdom competitiveness.

"British Business"

32. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why he has ceased publication of British Business.

43. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why he has ceased publication of British Business.

56. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why he has ceased publication of British Business.

Mr. Forth: Following the decision that responsibility for the statistical series with which DTI was previously concerned should transfer to the Central Statistical Office, British Business magazine lost much of its market and was no longer viable.

I understand that the CSO are about to launch a series of business bulletins containing most of the new data previously published in British Business.

Consumer Councils

33. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what effect nationalised industry consumer councils have had in protecting the consumer against above inflation price increases and poor service.

Mr. Forth: The national industry consumer councils are consulted by their respective industries on price increases. The industries concerned take a number of factors into account in arriving at a decision on such increases, and the national industry consumer councils play a valuable role in ensuring that the consumer view is adequately presented. The councils also have an influential role so far as standards of service are concerned, seeking improvements where experience shows this to be needed; and they are able to take up individual complaints with their industries where the consumer has failed to resolve the matter direct with the industry.

British Telecom

36. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any estimate of the number of people who own shares in British Telecom.

Mr. Forth: British Telecom's annual report and accounts indicate that at 31 March this year there were 1,203,243 shareholders.

Furniture (Safety)

37. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the British Standards Institute's recommendations with regard to revising relevant furniture standards to specify the use of toughened or safety glass in low-level locations and methods of fixing glass panels in furniture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: A Committee of the British Standards Institution is preparing a specification for testing glass used in furniture and it is expected that a draft standard will be issued for consultation by mid-1990.

Securities and Investments Board

40. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in response to proposed changes in the conduct of business rules at the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Redwood: I have received a number of representations about proposals by the Securities and Investments Board to amend its rules. The hon. Gentleman will appreciate that the questions raised in these representations are, however, a matter for the board.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many meetings he or the hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood) has had since 31 July with (a) the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board, (b) the chairmen of each of the self-regulating organisations recognised by the Securities and Investments Board and (c) the chairman or president of each of the professional bodies recognised by the Securities and Investments Board.

Mr. Redwood: Since 31 July I have met the chairmen of the Securities and Investments Board and four of the five self-regulating organisations. I shall meet the chairmen of other bodies as and when necessary. My right hon. Friend will meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board shortly.

Inward Investment

41. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies announced inward investment projects in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and which regions benefited the most.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the latest figures readily available to the Invest in Britain Bureau, on a regional basis as distinct from a national total, 330 inward investment decisions were made during 1988 to locate in the United Kingdom. These include the establishment of a new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in joint venture. The projects were expected to create about 27,500 new jobs and to have safeguarded a further 18,000. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment and do not take into account subsequent developments. The table lists the details of the number of projects and jobs on a regional basis:

Region	Projects	New jobs	Safeguarded jobs
Scotland	58	5,392	1,978
Wales	55	5,856	2,085
Northern Ireland	22	2,610	916

Knitwear and Textile Industries

42. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next proposes to meet representatives of the knitwear and textile industries to discuss current difficulties facing the industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have no immediate plans to meet representatives of the industry although I take a close interest in matters of concern in the textile, clothing and knitwear sectors.

However, my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade met with the Apparel, Knitting and Textile Alliance on 4 October to discuss in some depth the difficulties faced by the three industries. He is also meeting a delegation from the TUC to discuss trade in textiles this afternoon.

Business Confidence

44. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has commissioned any research into the current level of business confidence and the implications for manufacturing industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on business confidence is regularly collected by a number of private organisations, and the results are among the economic indicators available to the Government. I have no plans to duplicate the work of these independent organisations.

Barlow Clowes

45. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he is able to report regarding repayments to investors affected by the Barlow Clowes collapse; what steps he has taken and will take to ensure fair treatment to both those who invested in the United Kingdom-based funds and those who invested in the Gibraltar-based funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The matter of payments to investors in Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers Ltd. and Barlow Clowes International Ltd. is one for the joint receivers and joint liquidators, Cork Gully and Ernst and Young respectively. I refer the hon. Gentleman to my letters of 16 August and 30 October to all Members, copies of which I have placed in the Library.

Import Penetration

48. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the delay in publishing his Department's figures for import penetration.

58. Mr. McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the delay in publishing his Department's figures for import penetration.

Mr. Redwood: In 1988 a new commodity coding system was introduced by Customs and Excise resulting in a complete revision and renumbering of the existing tariff codes.

Each of these new codes had to be allocated, whole or in part, to industries of the standard industrial classification before import penetration figures could be derived. The size and complexity of this task has resulted in an interruption to the normal publication timetable.

49. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the rise in import penetration in manufactured goods for 1979 until the first quarter of the current year.

53. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the rise in import penetration in manufactured goods from 1979 until the first quarter of the current year.

67. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the rise in import penetration in manufactured goods from 1979 until the first quarter of the current year.

Mr. Redwood: Import penetration in manufacturing industry rose from 27 per cent. in 1979 to 36 per cent. in the year ending March 1989.

Ferranti

51. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions his Department has had with representatives of Ferranti; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The company has informed my Department of its financial difficulties. However, it is for the company to explore the various solutions that may be open to it.

68. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he or his officials has met representatives of Ferranti International Signal plc to discuss the company's current financial difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade has listened to the views of Ferranti and senior management of the company have met officials of my Department.

However, it is for the company to explore the various solutions that may be open to it.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has had concerning the recent difficulties of Ferranti Limited; what replies he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: A number of hon. Members have expressed concern about the position of Ferranti. However, it is for the company to explore the various options that appear open to it.

Exchange Rate

52. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice his Department is giving to export industries regarding the exchange rate of pound sterling.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 17 May, Official Report, column 233.

Takeovers and Mergers

54. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made among European Community partners in agreeing a takeover and mergers regulation.

Mr. Redwood: Significant progress was made in discussions on the draft EC merger control regulation at the most recent Council of Internal Market Ministers on 10 October. However, a number of important issues remain to be resolved, including the turnover thresholds, the criteria for assessing mergers and the review mechanism for the EC system. These and other issues will be the subject of further discussions at the next Internal Market Council on 23 November.

British Shipbuilders

57. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the chairman of British Shipbuilders; and what was discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I met the Chairman of British Shipbuilders on 16 October1989 to discuss the disposal of the assets of North East Shipbuilders Ltd. We also both gave evidence at the Trade and Industry Select Committee hearing on British Shipbuilders on 18 October.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent information he has as to the level of outstanding British Shipbuilders' commercial borrowing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 26 October 1989]: Government funding of British Shipbuilders is designed to keep the Corporation's commercial borrowing requirements to a minimum. As at 13 October, actual commercial loans amounted to £3 million. On a year on year basis, however, total net aid provided over the course of the year is subject to the terms of the European Community's sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding. Limitations on Government funding under this Directive necessitated British Shipbuilders borrowing some £90 million in the market in December 1988. By December 1989, it is estimated that this level of borrowing liability will have fallen to about £65 million against the sixth directive's parameters.

Estate Agents

61. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to bring forward his proposals designed to regulate the activities of those estate agents engaging in undesirable practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My proposals to underpin a code of practice for estate agents by an order under section 3 of the Estate Agents Act 1979 were announced to the House of Commons and published in the report of my review of estate agency on 21 June. I have asked the Director General of Fair Trading to develop the code of practice with the industry, consider the scope of the proposed order under section 3 of the Act and report back to me early next year. When I have considered his advice I shall circulate for consultation proposals for an order, as is required under section 30 of the Act.

Japanese Market

63. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received regarding British access to the Japanese market.

Mr. Redwood: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 19 July. In the first nine months of this year our exports to Japan increased in value by 28 per cent.

Sub-post Offices

64. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet the chairman of the Post Office to discuss the future of small rural sub-post offices.

Mr. Forth: I meet the chairman of the Post Office regularly to discuss a wide range of issues of mutual interest and concern.

CBI

66. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the Confederation of British Industry; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I met the Confederation of British Industry on 24 October 1989 when the main topic of discussion was the preparation by British business for the European single market.

Counterfeit Electrical Products

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to investigate the production of counterfeit electrical products being produced by Taiwan and sold under English company names to Third-world countries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the absence of diplomatic relations between the UK and Taiwan, formal representations cannot be made there. UK companies experiencing difficulties with counterfeit products from Taiwan are referred to the Anglo-Taiwanese Trade Committee, which will give advice. Nevertheless, the UK Government regularly make representations to countries where counterfeits are known to be sold and will continue to do so.

I would be pleased to receive more information, particularly about the volume and destination of counterfeit products, in order that the most effective representaions can be made.

Business Development Consultancy Initiative

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give (a) the total number of applications for the business development consultancy initiative received between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, in cash and constant prices, for each of the standard Department of Trade and Industry regions, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 30 October 1989]: In the period from 1 April 1988 to 30 September 1989, 31,415 applications were received for the business development consultancy initiatives. In the same period 24,081 applications were approved for assisted consultancy. The Department's contribution to the cost of completed consultancies totalled £27·1 million. It is estimated that those consultancies not completed by 30 September 1989 will cost the Department a further £29·3 million. A breakdown of numbers and cost of consultancy projects for each DTI region and for Scotland and Wales is as follows:

DTI region/country	(a) Number of applications received	(b) Number of applications approved for assisted consultancy	(cI) DTI expenditure on completed consultancies (£'000)	(cII) Estimated expenditure on outstanding consultancies (£'000)
North East	1,590	1,225	1,300	1,404
North West	4,453	3,780	4,945	5,032
Yorkshire and Humberside	2,878	2,254	2,932	3,042
West Midlands	3,325	2,427	2,966	3,218
East Midlands	1,957	1,530	1,839	2,048
South West	2,990	1,995	1,820	2,136
East	2,568	1,725	1,398	1,726
South East:
London	3,818	2,871	2,669	2,867
Reading	1,861	1,486	1,427	1,726
Reigate	1,910	1,487	1,349	1,580
Scotland	2,293	1,976	2,860	2,779
Wales	1,772	1,325	1,585	1,697
Total	31,415	24,081	27,090	29,235

The total amount of expenditure on the business development consultancy initiatives in 1988-89 was £43·1 millions. The Estimates provision for 1989-90 is £80 millions. Plans for future years will be reflected in the 1990 Public Expenditure White Paper. It is not possible to provide a breakdown of total expenditure or provision on the consultancy initiatives for each DTI region or for Scotland or Wales.

Rain Forest Timber

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidelines he has laid down for the import of timber from tropical rain forests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Guidelines for sustainable forest management would need to be established at the international level. The United Kingdom itself and the EC as a whole are promoting work on this issue at the International Tropical Timber Organisation's current meeting in Japan.

Interest Rates

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the effect of high interest rate levels on manufacturing industries in the north-west.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: North West industry is very diverse which means that the impact of present interest rates may vary. My Department's assessment is that the current policy is having its desired effect in the region. Industry is performing well, profits are satisfactory and essential investment by companies intended to secure their position in the market is being maintained. The region's manufacturing companies recognise the importance of defeating inflation and are responding well to the present situation.

Co-operation Initiatives

Mr. Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives have been taken to encourage firms to work together, particularly on new technologies; how many projects have been supported; and at what cost.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The research and technology initiative was launched in January 1988 to provide support for research and development in collaborative projects under four main schemes:

—LINK, which encourages firms to collaborate with universities and polytechnics in pre-competitive research.

—EUREKA, which encourages firms to enter collaborative ventures with firms in other European countries.

—Advanced technology programmes (ATP), which assist companies to collaborate in selected fields of new technology.

—General industrial collaborative programmes, which provide support for projects at research and technology organisations and for other collaborative projects not covered under the above headings.

These schemes build on previous experience of supporting collaborative research and development: on the LINK scheme was a wholly new initiative.

Both the LINK and the ATP schemes seek to promote advanced technology. Under these schemes 29 programmes have been initiated. The areas of technology that will benefit are:

LINK
Electronics and IT
Molecular electronics
Advanced semiconductors
Personal communications
Opto-electronics
Power electronic devices

Biosciences and Food
Eukaryotic genetics
Biotransformations
Food Processing
Protein engineering
Plant metabolism
Selective drug delivery

Engineering and measurement
Industrial measurement
Nanotechnoloty
Ventilation, airconditioning and refrigeration
High speed machinery
Molecular sensors
Analytical and physical measurement
Construction and refurbishment
Biochemical engineering

Materials and chemicals
Structural composites
Catalytic processes

ATP

High temperature superconductivity
Gallium arsenide
Information engineering
Electronics
Systems technology and integration
Computer aided engineering
Advanced robotics
Wealth from the oceans

The number of collaborative projects that have started since January 1988 and the expected contribution to those projects by the DTI are set out in the table:

Scheme	Number of projects	DTI support (£m)
LINK	40	[1]12·0
ATP	80	19·7
EUREKA	43	17·5
General industrial	187	27·6
Total	350	76·8

[1] Contributions by DTI and other Departments.

In addition there are over 600 collaborative projects under discussion between the Department and industry. Strong growth is expected in particular in numbers of new LINK projects. Small and medium-sized enterprises are well represented, particularly in the general industrial collaborative category.

It is expected that DTI expenditure in support of collaborative industrial research and development in 1990-91 will be about £85 million.

Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates he has of the costs involved in implementing the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations for (a) industry and (b) small businesses and what steps is he taking in the current year to promote or publicise those regulations for those sectors.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Where substances hazardous to health were adequately and reliably controlled and where there was full compliance with existing legislation, the costs of implementing the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations should be marginal; they will arise mainly from reviewing and formalising existing arrangements. The Health and Safety Executive estimated in its cost/benefit analysis for the COSHH proposals that for a typical small firm the additional costs arising would amount to no more than about one quarter of a percentage point of the firm's net output. This estimate included the costs of monitoring of exposure and health surveillance which apply to only a minority of firms. For most larger firms, the costs will be substantially smaller in relation to net output.

The Health and Safety Executive has promoted and publicised the regulations by a variety of means, including national and trade advertising and the distribution of some 3·5 million introductory leaflets. Many activities have been particularly geared to the need to reach small firms, including the provision of information to the principal small firms advisory organisations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Gaelic Television Services

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from organisations and individuals supporting an expansion of Gaelic television services.

Mr. Mellor: We have received representations from a number of organisations, from Members of Parliament and from members of the public in support of an increase in the provision of Gaelic television programmes.

Traffic Offences

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many alleged traffic offences within the Metropolitan police area are currently under consideration for prosecution; whether that number is increasing or decreasing; and what was the position two and four years ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what has been the longest time between the commission of an alleged traffic offence and notification of the intent to prosecute during the past two years;

(2) what is the average time between the alleged commission of a traffic offence and the notification of the driver concerned of whether a prosecution will be brought.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Waddington: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 30 October 1989 at column 38.

Forensic Services

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of new regulations involving payment by the police forces for forensic services, he will consider establishing independent forensic units, along the lines of that based on Strathclyde university; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no such regulations, but we have accepted the recommendations of the Select Committee on Home Affairs that the police should pay directly for the forensic science services they use. The establishment of forensic science units independent of the Government is a matter for private initiative, and the police would be free to use such units if they wished to do so.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases are pending with the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the latest date;

(2) how many cases have been dealt with by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: On 30 September 1989, the number of applications resolved since the board's inception was 433,276 and 94,113 cases awaited resolution.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons whose cases were referred to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board subsequently died before determination.

Mr. John Patten: The board does not collate this information.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much compensation has been paid in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the latest available date;

(2) what is the highest payment by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to a claimant from Liverpool at the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: The board does not keep information on the payment of compensation by locality. Details of the highest award made each year are given in the board's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much has been paid in compensation by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the latest available date;

(2) what is the amount of compensation awarded by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the most recent date.

Mr. John Patten: Between 1 April 1964 and 30 September 1989, the board paid £389,718,739 in compensation. The board does not keep a running total of awards made but not yet paid.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he has any proposals to improve the working of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has plans to put the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board on a statutory basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are in close touch with the chairman of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board about the means of tackling the board's acknowledged problems of delay and the increased workload and backlog of cases of which it is the result. The Criminal Justice Act 1988 provides for a criminal injuries compensation scheme closely resembling the present non-statutory arrangements, but the most pressing task is to overcome the board's immediate problems. This must take priority over the introduction of the statutory scheme.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will include deaths or injuries caused by joy riders within the cover of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: Compensation will generally be available under the owner's insurance or arrangements made by the Motor Insurers' Bureau for injury or death caused by either an uninsured driver or an untraced driver. The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board will entertain claims where death or injury is caused by a driver who intentionally drives at the victim. We therefore see no need to extend the criminal injuries compensation scheme.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in resolving the claim of Mr. Terence Anthony Lafferty of Liverpool to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: As the board is independent in its day-to-day operations I have asked the board to write to the hon. Member about this case.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to include victims of rape as possible claimants to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: They are already included.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is the practice of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to answer letters from solicitors acting for people who have made an application to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the board that it is its normal practice to reply to letters which require an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the average waiting time for cases to be decided by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the most recent convenient date;

(2) what is the longest waiting time for a case to be accepted by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board at the latest date.

Mr. John Patten: The board does not keep information about waiting times in cases now disposed of. Information about the percentage of cases resolved by the board within certain periods from registration is shown in paragraph 6 of its latest annual report (Cm. 536), a copy of which is in the Library.

DNA Testing

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce a centrally organised DNA testing scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government's intention to introduce DNA testing into the entry clearance process was announced earlier this year. We will shortly be inviting tenders for the work of carrying out DNA tests. We will make a further announcement about the implementation of the Government scheme when the necessary arrangements have been completed.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the proposed directive on the national regulations of firearms certificates; and if it will be determined by majority vote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My hon. Friend is no doubt referring to the Commission's proposals for a Council directive on the control of the acquisition and possession of weapons. The Commission has signalled its intention to put forward a revised draft of the directive, but it has not yet been formally submitted to us. We will of course look at any new proposals very closely, including the legal basis, to ensure that the Commission's plans do not weaken in any way our ability to carry out those checks which we believe necessary to preserve security and maintain public safety.

British Summer Time

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers have been given to the EEC in relation to the determination of British summer time after the three-year period of consultation permitted to the United Kingdom in terms of EEC document 7876/88.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The position of the EC will be same for the sixth directive on summer time arrangements covering 1993 onwards as for the current fifth directive covering the period 1990 to 1992 inclusive.

Drugs

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those places which have been selected for locally-based drug prevention teams.

Mr. Mellor: We are not yet in a position to do so.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many representations (i) he and (ii) immigration officers received from Members of Parliament during (a) the first quarter of 1988 (b) the first quarter of 1989 to delay the removal of passengers refused entry at British ports of entry; and, for both periods, how many representations resulted in (i) the delay of the passenger's removal for up to a week, (iii) the delay of the passenger's removal for more than a week and (ii) reversal of the immigration officer's decision.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to the reply, 28 July 1989, c. 1057]: I regret that the information contained in that reply was incorrect. In the first quarter of 1988 representations received by Ministers resulted in deferment of removal of passengers refused entry in 382 cases. The rest of the information requested is not available centrally.

TRANSPORT

Hong Kong Shipping Register

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the strategic implications for the United Kingdom of the transfer of the Hong Kong shipping register to the Chinese flag.

Mr. McLoughlin: On the transfer of Hong Kong to the People's Republic of China in 1997 vessels on the Hong Kong shipping register will not be available to the United Kingdom for defence purposes.

Studies (Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to date of the London assessment studies and, separately, the central London rail study.

Mr. Portillo: The total cost of the four London assessment studies to date is about £8½ million. The central London rail study is expected to cost about £800,000.

Pedestrian Footbridges

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department offers to local authorities seeking to build pedestrian footbridges with transport supplementary grant from his Department with regard to access for the disabled.

Mr. Atkins: We recommend that for schemes supported by TSG local highway authorities should use the technical design standards issued by the Department. The Department's design criteria for footbridges are contained in departmental standard BD29/87. This standard lays particular emphasis on the importance of ensuring that the needs of disabled people are taken into account. It specifies "enhanced criteria" which should be adopted as far as practicable for the benefit of disabled people, such as the provision of both ramps and stairs and a minimum clear width of 2m.

I am arranging for a copy of the standard to be placed in the Library.

A5 (Shropshire)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a start date for the A5 road improvements in Shropshire.

Mr. Atkins: The inspector's report on the recent inquiry into the final statutory orders for the A5/A49 Shrewsbury bypass is being considered. The decision will be announced later this month. Subject to that being favourable I hope construction will start next April.

Road Accidents

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what figures are available on the makes of cars involved in fatal and serious injury accidents on Britain's roads over the past two years.

Mr. Atkins: No information is available on makes of cars involved in fatal and serious injury accidents on Britain's roads over the past two years. However, arrangements are now in hand to ensure that this information is recorded for future years.

Aircraft Incident (Edinburgh)

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority, he will discuss with him the incident involving British Midland Airways flight BD 057 at Edinburgh on Sunday 22 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority. The incident will be the subject of a mandatory occurrence report submitted by British Midland Airways to the authority, and on receipt of that report, the authority will decide what action needs to be taken. I have drawn the hon. Member's question to the attention of the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority.

Learner Drivers

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider changing the regulations relating to learner drivers so that no passengers may be carried other than the experienced driver accompanying the learner driver.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to impose a maximum speed limit on drivers in the first 12 months following the date on which they obtained a full United Kingdom driving licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We have a major programme of research in hand to cast light on the accident record of learner and newly qualified drivers. As the results become available we shall be considering whether there are any aspects of the driver licensing regime that need to be improved.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to change the regulations concerning the driving experience of those who accompany learner drivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I am reviewing whether there is any case for this.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to require those supervising learner drivers to (a) have attained a prescribed minimum age or (b) have held a full driving licence for a specified number of years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I am reviewing whether there is any case for this.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to study the recent critical appraisal of the safety of flasks designed for the air transport of plutonium, presented to the annual conference of the Safety and Reliability Society in Bath in October.

Mr. McLoughlin: The International Atomic Energy Agency's regulations for the safe transport of radioactive materials are subject to continuous review and updating. Any relevant information on this transport will be studied.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what information he possesses on the current considerations by the International Atomic Energy Agency's standing advisory group on the international safety regulations for the carriage of radioactive materials.

Mr. McLoughlin: The chairman's report of the seventh meeting of the group has been received and its conclusions and recommendations are being studied.

Air Traffic

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to open an east coast airway for commercial air traffic to serve areas between the north of Scotland and the south of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority and the National Air Traffic Services. I will draw the hon. Member's question to the attention of authority's chairman.

Mersey Tunnels

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the financing of the Mersey tunnels; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The financing of the Mersey tunnels is a matter for the Merseyside passenger transport authority. Over the last three years we have had extensive discussions with the authority about the debts of the Mersey tunnels and we have helped to produce projections of the tunnel's financial performance. If the PTA considers that it has a case for Government financial assistance we will be prepared to consider it.

Roll-on Roll-off Vessels

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many roll-on roll-off vessels have been lost at sea since 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: Between 1 January 1981 and 31 December 1988, a total of 23 roll-on roll-off vessels have been lost at sea worldwide. The figures for earlier years do not identify losses of roll-on roll-off vessels.

Manchester Ship Canal Company

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce his decision on the inspector's report on the public inquiry into the harbour revision order applied for by the Manchester Ship Canal Company.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been considering, in the light of the inspector's report, whether all the provisions sought in the order properly could and should be included in a harbour revision order, and hope to be able to reach a decision in the reasonably near future.

Port Authorities

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what means of redress or appeal exists in the case of maladministration or inefficiency by a body such as a port authority.

Mr. McLoughlin: Harbour authorities that are companies or statutory trusts are autonomous bodies running commercial undertakings. Any complaint should be made to the chief executive or chairman, and if satisfaction is not obtained the complaint can ultimately be pursued through the courts. For harbours run by local authorities there are also the usual channels for seeking a remedy from the actions of a local authority. In addition, there are two statutory rights of appeal to the Secretary of State: in respect of all harbour authorities, against their dues and, if they are competent harbour authorities under the Pilotage Act 1987, their pilotage charges; and in respect of a few authorities whose local legislation contains power to license works in the harbour area, against their licensing decisions.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to abolish the Clyde port authority and to replace it with another body.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. But I understand that the authority has been considering the possibility of seeking a change in its status.

Vehicle and Component Approvals Division

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the latest annual report of the vehicle and component approvals division is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The report for 1988-89 was published at the end of September. Copies are available in the Library.

The certification work carried out by VCA staff makes an important contribution to road safety through checks on vehicle and equipment design and quality standards. During the year covered by the report, the VCA handled an increased workload and managed to better its first unit cost target.

Further steps were also taken to move to a businesslike footing with adoption of new accounting methods and the preparation of the first business plan. These will help provide a firm financial structure for the proposed move to executive agency status next spring.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Family Law

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the Government Departments represented on the interdepartmental working party established to oversee work on family law and business following the passage of the Children Bill.

The Attorney-General: The Government Departments represented on the family law and administration working party are as follows:

Lord Chancellor's Department
Home Office
Department of Health
Her Majesty's Treasury
Department of Social Security
Welsh Office

Traffic Offences

Mr. Key: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the criteria used by the Crown Prosecution Service in deciding whether or not to prosecute in respect of traffic offences.

The Attorney-General: In deciding whether or not to prosecute in respect of traffic offences, as with all criminal offences, the Crown Prosecution Service has to satisfy the two criteria set out in the code for Crown prosecutors, promulgated under section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. These require that there is sufficient admissible, substantial and reliable evidence to afford a realistic prospect of conviction and that the public interest requires a prosecution in the circumstances.

Northern Ireland Court Service

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes have been made to the cash limit and running cost limit for the Northern Ireland court service.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XI vote 8 has been increased by £21,000 from £14,725,000 to £14,746,000 and the running costs limit by £21,000 from £11,700,000 to £11,721,000. This increase has been charged to the Reserve and will not add to the planned total of public expenditure. The increases arise from a policy decision which transferred responsibility for the funding of the PRAMIS computer project from Northern Ireland Departments 1 (NID 1) to individual Departments (including Northern Ireland Court Service). The corresponding decrease in NID 1's cash limit and running costs limit was announced on 13 July 1989.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

42. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what annual level of inflation has been used to calculate the projected cost of the student loan scheme.

Mr. Jackson: The costings set out in annex E of Cm. 520 were expressed in constant 1990 prices. To estimate the pace at which inflation will erode the real value of the grant, an inflation rate of 3 per cent. per annum was assumed.

43. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the introduction of student loans.

Mr. Jackson: The preparatory work described in my right hon. Friend's statement on 19 June, Official Report, columns 21-22, is proceeding.

Schools (Data Protection Act)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton, Official Report, 17 October, column 87, how many schools he estimates are currently in breach of the Data Protection Act; and if he will place in the Library the guidance to schools he intends to publish.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department does not collect information about schools' compliance with the Data Protection Act. A copy of the promised guidance will be placed in the Library on publication.

Committee of Vice Chancellors

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the Committee of Vice Chancellors; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend discussed a wide range of higher education matters with the committee at its annual meeting on 27 September. We meet representatives of the committee from time to time in the course of normal business.

Teacher Training

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what grant assistance is provided by his Department to local education authorities to fund in-service training for teachers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The main source of grant assistance is the local education authority training grant scheme, details of which are set out in Department of Education and Science circular 20/89, a copy of which is in the Library. In 1990-91 the scheme will support expenditure of £214·7 million with grant of £125·7 million.

Teachers' Negotiating Rights

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that teachers' negotiating rights are restored as soon as possible.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is currently engaged in a series of meetings with the teacher unions and the employers at which a range of possibilities for new permanent pay determination arrangements is being discussed.

European Research Council Meeting

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Research Council meeting in Luxembourg on 17 October.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

I represented Her Majesty's Government at the meeting of the Community's Council of Ministers (Research) in Luxembourg on 17 October.

The Council adopted a common position on a Community programme of research on the competitiveness of agriculture and management of agricultural resources. The programme will receive Community funding of 55 mecu (37 million) over five years. Priority will be given to research work which helps to identify alternative outlets for products and uses for land, conserves natural resources and develops production systems in harmony with the environment.

There was also a further exchange of views on several aspects of the Commission proposal for a framework programme of Community activities in the field of research and technological development (1990-1994).

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the total amounts raised by domestic rates in each of the years 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, (b) the rate in the pound in each year and (c) the estimated number of domestic hereditaments on which rates were payable for each year in the London boroughs of (i) Islington, (ii) Camden and (iii) Lambeth.

Mr. David Hunt: The figures sought are:

	Domestic rate income £m	Average domestic rate poundage Pence	Number of domestic hereditaments '000s
Islington
1984-85	49·1	233·5	68·6
1985-86	46·9	229·1	69·0
1986-87	42·8	184·3	69·4
1987-88	41·5	172·1	70·5
Lambeth
1984-85	62·3	233·1	104·6
1985-86	60·4	224·6	105·4
1986-87	58·4	217·2	106·6
1987-88	54·5	205·6	108·3
Camden
1984-85	59·2	202·7	78·2
1985-86	60·9	209·0	79·2
1986-87	62·6	209·4	80·1
1987-88	65·1	213·2	81·5

Note: Figures for domestic rate income are net of rate relief grant and gross of rebates.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the current cost of a revaluation of domestic properties for rateable purposes.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government do not consider a revaluation of domestic property to be viable using rental values because of the lack of market rental evidence. I have therefore made no such estimate.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policy has applied since 1982 towards the revaluation of domestic properties for rateable purposes; what estimates he has of the number of domestic properties in the London boroughs of (a) Islington, (b) Camden and (c) Lambeth, which have been revalued for rateable purposes since 1982; and what are the general reasons for those revaluations having taken place.

Mr. David Hunt: Since the last general revaluation in 1973 rateable values of domestic properties have been altered most commonly because of a change in the physical state of the property or in its environment. I estimate that some 3,200,000 alterations have been made to the rateable values of domestic property in England since 1982. No estimates are available for particular local authority areas.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage registration for the community charge in the Cherwell district council area.

Mr. Chope: I understand that registration for the community charge is going ahead successfully in Cherwell and that to date some 98 per cent. of chargepayers have been registered.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the community charge.

Mr. Chope: I have received representations from individual local authorities and other bodies. My Department has also held a number of discussions with the local authority associations.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any consideration has been given to exempting foreign language assistants employed in the United Kingdom from paying the community charge.

Mr. Chope: It would not be appropriate to provide exemption for foreign language assistants. They will be subject to a personal community charge if they are solely or mainly resident in Great Britain. Foreign language assistants who fall within the definition of full-time students will be eligible for 80 per cent. relief of the charge. Decisions on whether an individual is solely or mainly resident in Great Britain, and is a full-time student, are initially for the community charges registration officer.

Property Revaluation

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has of the number of domestic properties in England that have been revalued for rateable purposes since 1982; and what are the general reasons for these revaluations having taken place.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today.

Chief Inspector of Pollution (Resignation)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek permission from the author to publish the letter of resignation submitted by Mr. Rod Perriman, the former chief inspector of pollution.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the then Secretary of State for the Environment, my right hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley) on 29 November 1988 at column 135.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now reached his decision on the future of the Property Services Agency in Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The PSA is in the process of reorganising into two main businesses: PSA Projects dealing with major projects, and PSA Building Management dealing with maintenance, estate management and smaller projects. Both businesses intend to maintain offices in Cardiff, drawing their staffing initially from the existing PSA Wales Office.

Sellafield

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an assessment of the recent report by Professor David Bowen of the University of Wales Institute of Earth Studies on the geological stability of the sub-seabed region off Sellafield and the geology below Sellafield with regard to plans to dispose of the radioactive waste underground near the British Nuclear Fuels Sellafield site.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In the first instance it is for UK Nirex Limited to consider such reports in submitting proposals to Government for the development of an underground radioactive waste disposal facility for low and intermediate level waste. In assessing these proposals, HMIP will take into account any relevant information.

Habitats

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the Government's response to the draft European Community directive on the protection of semi-natural habitats and of wild fauna and flora; whether he will seek to amend the draft directive (a) to provide funding to encourage individuals to adopt management and development practices and (b) to tackle the devastation and destruction of habitats outside the envisaged network of special protection areas; and whether he will seek to allow non-governmental organisations to attend meetings under the directive as observers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We have made clear on several occasions that we, in common with all other member states, regard the present draft text as deeply flawed. The House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities reached a similar conclusion in its scrutiny report published in August.

We are keen to see progress towards a worthwhile Community measure in the field of nature conservation. It is for the French Presidency to decide how to take things forward, and I understand that discussions are taking place with a view to breaking the deadlock. Matters such as funding, protection of habitats outside special protection areas, and observer status for non-governmental organisations can be expected to feature in these deliberations. We shall continue to contribute constructively to the discussions on all aspects of the dossier.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new initiatives he will take to reduce the present level of homelessness in young people aged under 18 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The conclusions of our review of the homelessness legislation will be announced shortly.

Radioactive Waste Management

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has met the chairman or officials of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee to discuss (a) environmental management of and (b) international safeguards applicability to plutonium contaminated wastes at civil nuclear facilities and safeguardable nuclear material balance areas in dual-purpose facilities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has not yet met the chairman and members of Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee, but plans to do so in January. The agenda for the meeting has yet to be decided.

Estate Action

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total budget for the current year for Estate Action.

Mr. Chope: A total of £190 million is being made available for my Department's Estate Action programme in 1989-90. In addition, local authorities are normally expected to contribute about 50 per cent. of the total cost of approved projects as a measure of their commitment to those schemes.

Safety Glazing

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the consultation document on the standard of safety glazing to be included in the building regulations.

Mr. Chope: I hope to be in a position to publish the consultative document shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Share Ownership

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent changes have been made to the ceilings of percentage in shares of Rolls-Royce and British Aerospace respectively which may be held by persons or bodies not within the United Kingdom; what communications he has received from the Commission of the European Communities on this and the period within which any such new limitation shall operate; and if he will place copies of any such correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 3 August that the Government had decided that, following discussions with the European Commission on Rolls-Royce, the limit on foreign shareholdings could reasonably be increased for both Rolls-Royce and British Aerospace from 15 per cent. to 29·5 per cent. Extraordinary general meetings of the two companies held respectively on 11 September and 16 August approved special resolutions to raise the limit to the new level. In reaching this decision the Government took into account not only the concern expressed by the Commission about the effect of the restriction on other EC nationals wishing to buy shares in Rolls-Royce, but the wishes of Rolls-Royce and British Aerospace to have the limit increased given the international nature of their business. As the discussions with the European Commission were confidential, documents cannot be placed in the Library. The Government agreed with the Commission that it would review at the end of 1992 the limit on foreign shareholdings in the light of any changes in the structure of the European defence industry and in the pattern of defence procurement over the period.

North East Shipbuilders

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North, on 20 October, Official Report, columns 268-69, if he will estimate the cost to Her Majesty's Government arising from the closure of North East Shipbuilders Ltd., excluding any costs incurred by British Shipbuilders but including (a) unemployment benefit to redundant employees, (b) housing and other social security benefits to redundant employees, (c) remedial measures taken by Her Majesty's Government and (d) any other costs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is very difficult to give an assessment of the Exchequer costs, because no one can reliably forecast the circumstances of Sunderland and other places that would have been affected had those decisions not been taken. For instance, had the Government decided not to close the yards at the end of 1988, very substantial redundancies would in any event have been necessary, and costs would have been incurred elsewhere, particularly on the Clyde, had other sales notified to the Commission in December 1988 been frustrated by delayed EC clearance.

Had the Government decided to notify new shipbuilding proposals in July, the likelihood would have been a delay to the economic recovery of Sunderland as a result of the uncertainty about the enterprise zone and other measures. On the other hand, talks are taking place between British Shipbuilders and interested parties about the use of various of the assets of NESL which in turn may generate additional employment to that likely to result from the enterprise zone.

My right hon. Friend announced on 7 December a remedial package for Sunderland estimated at £45 million. Of that sum, £10·5 million is being provided through British Shipbuilders, to fund the activities of Sunderland Enterprise and Training Ltd., including those being administered by the Wearside Opportunity.

Insurance Companies Act

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will now introduce regulations to require companies to report on their arrangements to meet the duty imposed by section 31A of the Insurance Companies Act 1982.

Mr. Redwood: I undertook on 26 July to consider introducing a new regulation requiring insurance companies to report on their arrangements to meet the duty imposed by section 31A of the Insurance Companies Act 1982. This section requires insurance companies to ensure that adequate arrangements are in force for securing that transactions affecting assets of the company (other than transactions outside its control) do not operate unfairly between different funds of the company. I have now made regulations, which come into effect on 1 March 1990, which have been laid before Parliament today. The regulations require a certificate to be signed by the directors, to be annexed to the annual report, which will state that for the past financial year the company has had in force arrangements to meet this duty.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give (a) the total number of applications for regional selective assistance received between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash and constant prices for each of the Department of Trade and Industry regions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 30 October 1989]: The number of applications for regional selective assistance received between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989 was 2,542. The number of regional selective assistance applications approved between 1 April 1988 and 30 September 1989 was 1893 and the value approved was £165·2 million.

Expenditure on regional selective assistance in 1988-89 by the DTI region was as follows:

	£ million
North East	34
North West	22
Yorkshire and Humberside	21
East Midlands	1
West Midlands	25
South West	4
England
Actual	129
at 1989-90 prices	137

At the regional level the figures include only industrial and training grants. The England total also includes some unallocated project grants and expenditure under the business improvement services and exchange risk guarantee schemes which it is not possible to provide on a regional basis. The figures are net of domestic receipts.

The forecast provision for 1989-90 is £145 million; this figure is contained in the Supply Estimates for 1989-90. The above figure is net of domestic receipts and includes expenditure on industrial and training grants, and the business improvement services and exchange risk guarantee schemes. Figures for future years will be reflected in the 1990 public expenditure White Paper.

Investment and Innovation Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give (a) the total number of applications for investment grants and innovation grants from 1 April 1988 to 30 September 1989, (b) the total number of applications approved, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash and constant prices for each of his Department's regions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 30 October 1989]: Regional enterprise grants (REGs) became available on 1 April 1988 in the development areas and on 1 September 1988 in South Yorkshire. The information requested, for the English regions for which the DTI is responsible, for 1 April 1988 to 30 September 1989 is as follows:

	Number of applications	Number of offers	Value of offers £000
North East	968	692	4,880
North West	857	502	4,240
Yorkshire and Humberside	516	320	3,289
East Midlands	78	56	612
South West	279	197	1,191
Total England	2,698	1,767	14,212

"Total expenditure for regional enterprise grants in 1988-89 was £0·9m (£0·95 million at estimated constant 1989-90 prices).

The provision for investment and innovation grants as published in the June revised supply estimates, for 1989-90 is £27·6m.

Plans for future years will be reflected in the 1990 public expenditure White Paper.

The amount of expenditure which will be paid out in any particular area will depend on demand for the scheme and the appraisal of individual applications."

Regional Development Grants

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give (a) the total number of applications for regional development grants outstanding at 31 March 1988, (b) the total number of applications processed by 30 September 1989, (c) the total amount of expenditure involved and (d) the total estimated expenditure planned for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 in cash and constant prices for each of his Department's regions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [Holding answer 30 October 1989]: The information requested in respect of the revised regional development grant scheme with regard to applications outstanding at 31 March 1988, the number of those processed by 30 September 1989 and the amount approved to date on those applications, is as follows:

	North East	North West	Yorkshire & humberside	East Midlands	South West
Number of applications outstanding at 31 March 1988	3,260	2,740	830	240	540
Number of those applications processed by 30 September 1989	3,251	2,736	830	240	540
Amount approved £m	55	36	9	7	4

Expenditure in respect of the original and revised regional development grant schemes in 1988-89 by DTI region is as follows:

	£ million
North East	79
North West	50
Yorkshire & Humberside	19
East Midlands	8
South West	6
England
Actual	162
1989-90 prices	170

Notes:

The figures shown are net of domestic receipts.

Planned provision in respect of both schemes for 1989-90 is £125 million (as contained in the Supply Estimates for 1989-90). This figure is net of domestic receipts.

The level of provision is expected to be reduced in the forthcoming winter supplementary estimates. Figures for future years will be reflected in the 1990 public expenditure White Paper.

Industrial Output

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will supply figures on the level of industrial output, in constant terms, for each standard planning region of the United Kingdom for every year since 1979 and for each month since 1 January.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 23 October 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the form requested. However current price estimates of regional gross domestic product by industry are published annually in Economic Trends. The latest published figures may be found in Economic Trends No. 421, November 1988 pages 92 and 93: a copy is available in the Library. Constant price estimates are not made because there are no regional price indices.

Investment Spending

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will supply figures on spending on investment expressed in constant value terms, for each standard planning region of the United Kingdom for every year since 1979 and for each month since 1 January.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 23 October 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the form requested. However current price estimates of regional investment by selected industries and by the Government are published annually in Economic Trends. The latest published figures may be found in Economic Trends No. 421, November 1988 pages 97 and 98: a copy is available in the Library. Constant price estimates are not made because there are no regional price indices.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Incomes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year since 1974 the average annual increase in real income for (a) a married man with two children, (b) a single person and (c) a retired person, including tax changes and price rises.

Mr. Lilley: Consistent information since 1974 is available only for pensioners. This is given in table 1. A more limited range of years is available on a constant basis for the other family types and the average annual growth rates in real incomes are given in table 2. Figures are derived from the family expenditure survey and are subject to sampling variation.

Table 1

Percentage annual change in average real net income of pensioners

	per cent.
1974	6·2
1975	−0·5
1976	−0·3
1977	−1·1
1978	7·0
1979	−1·7
1980	1·9
1981	4·9
1982	−0·9
1983	10·5
1984	−1·1
1985	1·7
1986	4·5

Notes:

1. The figures show, for the each year, the percentage increase over the previous year in average real net incomes (ie incomes net of tax, adjusted for changes in the Retail Price Index).

2. Pensioners are defined as all single people over the statutory retirement age together with married couples where the husband is over retirement age.

Table 2

Percentage change in average real net income at an annual rate

	Married man with two children (non-retired) per cent.	Single person (non-retired) per cent.
1979-81	−2·3	−2·1
1981-85	3·1	0·6
1985-86	7·1	8·6

Note:

The figures express at an annual rate the increase between the years shown in average real net incomes (ie incomes net of tax and national insurance adjusted for changes in the Retail Price Index).

Equities

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of United Kingdom quoted equities are held by (a) pension funds, (b) unit trusts and (c) investment trusts.

Mr. Lilley: Reliable up-to-date figures are not available, but I understand that the stock exchange will shortly be publishing a survey giving the proportion of equities held by different types of investor. I will write to my hon. Friend and arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library in due course.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the annual yield of capital gains tax in each year since 1979 (i) at 1979 prices and (ii) at 1989 prices.

Mr. Lilley: Estimates of receipts of capital gains tax paid by individuals and trusts are as follows:

£ million

Year of receipt	Actual receipts	At 1979-80 prices[1]	At 1989-90 prices[1]
1979-80	431	430	860
1980-81	508	430	850
1981-82	526	400	800
1982-83	632	450	900
1983-84	671	460	910
1984-85	730	480	950
1985-86	908	560	1,120
1986-87	1,064	640	1,270
1987-88	1,379	790	1,560
1988-89	2,323	1,230	2,450
1989-90[2]	2,100	1,060	2,100

[1] Converted using the GDP market price deflator.

[2] Forecast.

Receipts in each year result from liabilities incurred over several previous years. These figures exclude receipts from capital gains of companies taxed within corporation tax.

Fiduciary Issue

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to amend the limit of the fiduciary issue as part of his anti-inflationary policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: No. Interest rates are the only way to deal with inflation.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Ryder: Letters from hon. Members to Treasury Ministers receive a deadline for reply of not more than 15 working days. Most are replied to within this period.

Northern Region

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will estimate the number of shareholders in the northern region as a percentage of the adult population.

Mr. Lilley: The Joint Treasury-International Stock Exchange survey in January 1989 estimated that 13 per cent. of adults in the northern region were shareholders. This proportion will have increased as a result of the recent flotation of Abbey National plc.

Delors Report

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in consideration of the Delors report on economic and monetary union in the European Community.

Mr. Major: The Delors report suggests a three-stage process leading to economic and monetary union. The Government's acceptance of stage I, which will start on 1 July 1990, was reported by the Prime Minister in her statement on 29 June, Official Report, columns 1107-22. I have today laid before Parliament, and placed in the Library of the House and in the Vote Office, copies of a paper entitled "An Evolutionary Approach to Economic and Monetary Union". This paper sets out the Government's views on an alternative approach to stages II and III as described in the report by the Delors committee, and will be a contribution to discussion at Ecofin on 13 November.

Interest Rates

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the impact of every 1 per cent. rise in interest rate on the costs to industry, (b) the estimated extra costs likely to have been incurred by industry in the period May 1989 to October 1989 as a result of interest rates rises and (c) the estimated costs to industry of the present interest rate level continuing for a period of three months, six months and 12 months.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 26 October 1989]: The estimated direct cost to industrial and commercial companies of a one percentage point increase in United Kingdom bank base rates is about £0·5 billion in the first year after the change, based on industrial and commercial companies' current holdings of assets and liabilities with variable rates of interest linked to United Kingdom bank base rates. The estimate takes no account of possible changes in net borrowing following a change in interest rates or of consequential changes in tax liabilities.

By comparison a one percentage point interest rate increase costs industrial and commercial companies far less than a one percentage point rise in pay settlements.

It is not possible to answer parts (b) and (c) without making assumptions about the actual responses to interest rates and changes in borrowing for any other reason. But the key point is that industry would suffer much more from a general rise in inflation than from interest rate increases.

Voluntary Giving

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans or programmes he has for publicising schemes for voluntary giving, such as Work Aid, and other similar statutory arrangements; and what funds have been allocated from what votes for what specific purposes.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 17 October 1989]: It is primarily for the voluntary sector to promote voluntary giving. Leaflets are available from the Inland Revenue explaining the tax reliefs for charitable giving. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has made a grant of £25,000 to the Payroll Giving Association to support its work on promoting the payroll giving scheme. The grant is on a matching pound-for-pound basis. A further grant of up to £25,000 may be made on the same basis. The payroll giving scheme is available to all civil servants and to Members of Parliament. This opportunity has been publicised.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to permit sterling to establish its value in the exchange markets without intervention directed to any particular exchange rates with other major currencies.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 31 October 1989]: Foreign exchange intervention will continue to be used as necessary to check undue fluctuations in the exchange rate.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the net contribution to the EEC in 1989.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 31 October 1989]: The Government's latest published estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community budget in 1989 is £1,966 million. A new estimate of the United Kingdom's net payments to European Community institutions for the financial year 1989-90 will be published in the Autumn Statement.

Contingency Reserve

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what amount has been allocated from the contingency reserve so far in the current financial year; and whether he will list the amount by Department.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 1 November 1989]: The Autumn Statement will show the estimated outturn for the 1989-90 planning total by Department, along with changes from the plans in the 1989 public expenditure White Paper.

WALES

Children with Special Needs

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has made any estimate of the extra resources needed to enable children with special needs to participate fully in the national curriculum.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The cost of implementing the national curriculum will be met from the redirection of existing resources. However, the Government are making specific grants available to local education authorities to support the introduction of the national curriculum. In Wales, in this financial year, there is support for almost £7 million expenditure.

It is for authorities to decide how much to spend within this total to enable children with special educational needs to participate fully in the national curriculum where appropriate.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ask health authorities in Wales to review their adherence to WHSC(IS)117 and report back.

Mr. Grist: The 1989 manpower resource planning exercise currently being undertaken in the NHS in Wales includes an assessment by district health authorities of the demand for and availability of staff who are able to practise through the medium of Welsh. We will also be reviewing the guidance contained in WHSC(IS)117 "The Health Service and the Welsh Language" in the light of the Welsh Language Board's strategy document and proposals for the public sector.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure that those patients whose first choice of language is Welsh are adequately provided for.

Mr. Grist: The quality of service provided to all those who come into contact with the Health Service is of paramount importance. The Department recognises that there must be appropriate arrangements for those who are more fluent in Welsh than in English, and for many years the Health Service has been encouraged to adopt a language policy through guidance contained in WHSC(IS)117 "The Health Service and the Welsh Language". We will be reviewing that guidance in the light of the Welsh Language Board's strategy document and proposals for the public sector.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision is proposed for the professions allied to medicine, speech therapy and psychology to receive training in the Welsh language for those whose first language is Welsh, and if he will support the proposed establishment of a centre for health studies in University College of North Wales to develop such training.

Mr. Grist: The future extent, format and location of training provision for these professions in Wales and the proposal to establish a centre for health studies in north Wales are currently being considered in the light of the manpower resource planning exercise being undertaken within the NHS in Wales, the implications of the proposals contained in the White paper "Working for Patients" and the recommendations contained in the report of a review of the role of the combined training institute at Cardiff.

Environmental Research

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his Department's role in the radioactivity, research and environmental monitoring committee since its inception.

Mr. Grist: The Department has been represented on the committee since its inception in 1986 by a scientific adviser who reports to me its activities relevant to the Welsh environment.

Rents into Mortgages Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to promote his rents into mortgages scheme and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already written to every tenant of the Development Board for Rural Wales to explain the basis of flexi-ownership and the Department will be announcing the formal start of the scheme very soon.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the amount a tenant, paying an average Welsh council home rent, would pay if he participated in his Department's rents into mortgages scheme, showing the method of calculation.

Mr. Grist: The Development Board for Rural Wales will make two adjustments to rents when calculating how much tenants will need to pay when buying their homes under flexi-ownership. First, 10 per cent. will be added to the rent to reflict the greater benefit deriving from home ownership, then £5 (£7·50 in the case of flats) will be deducted as a notional allowance for insurance and maintenance costs. So, for example, if the rent was £21·84 (which is the current Welsh average council house rent) adding 10 per cent. and deducting £5 would give a figure of £19·02 per week. The amount of low start mortgage which this figure would buy is the amount the tenant would have to pay initially to buy his house under flexi-ownership. The balance between this amount and the market value of the home would be met by discount and deferred payment. Discounts will be 15 per cent. less than the right-to-buy discount entitlement.

Low-paid Workers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the total numbers of (a) male and (b) female workers in (1) Gwent and (2) the rest of Wales who are in receipt of wages below the wages council's recommended levels.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1988, wages inspectors identified 897 workers in Wales who had been paid less than the statutory minimum due. Inspectorate records do not identify whether workers are male or female. Statistics are not compiled for areas smaller than Wales as a whole.

Environment in Trust

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many copies of the Environment in Trust leaflets and brochures were published by Her Majesty's Government; how many have been distributed in Wales since May; and if he will list all the titles of Environment in Trust literature published to date.

Mr. Grist: A total of 36,000 sets of the leaflets have been printed and about 700 sets have been distributed in Wales since March. Information on numbers issued since May is not available.

The titles are as follows:

Environment in Trust
Cleaner Seas
Air Quality
River Quality
Radioactive Waste Management—A Safe Solution
The Countryside
Pollution Control Systems

A further leaflet in the series entitled "One World" has recently been published and will be distributed in the near future.

Welsh Water

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that the land holdings of Welsh Water plc shall be transferred into a public trust prior to the sale of shares and that the trustees be obliged to oversee such land for the benefit of the people of Wales.

Mr. Grist: The hon. Gentleman no doubt welcomed the announcement made by Welsh Water on Tuesday that a charitable trust has been set up to care for approximately 43,000 acres of its landholdings in the Elan valley. Much of the land remaining in the ownership of Welsh Water is in national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty or other areas of special scientific interest which are safeguarded by the provisions of the Water Act 1989.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that Welsh Water plc shall concentrate on providing high-quality wholesome water and an efficient sewerage service to the people of Wales.

Mr. Grist: The duties of water and sewerage undertakers are set out in the Water Act 1989. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has taken steps to ensure that these will be carried out by appointing Dwr Cymru Cyfyngedig to be the water and sewerage undertakers for the area of the former Welsh water authority.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names, occupations and salaries of the board members of Welsh Water.

Mr. Ian Grist: The information requested concerning appointments to the Welsh Water plc is set out in the following table:

1. Executive Directors:
    John Elfed Jones—Group Chairman (£43,860)
    David Abbot Jeffrey—Group Managing Director (£59,125)
    Graham Alfred Hawker—Group Finance Director (£46,440)

2. Non-executive Directors:
    John Mansel James—(£5,375). Appointed group managing director of Laura Ashley Holdings in 1981 and promoted to chief executive and vice-chairman in 1988. He is also a non-executive director of Control Techniques.
    David Grant Hawkins—(£5,375). Chairman of Target Computer Group where he has been a director since 1980. Prior to this he was, for three years, finance director of Sterling Credit Holdings, a company in the Sterling Credit Group.
    Iain Richard Evans—(£5,375). A founding partner of the LEK partnership and is currently the senior partner in their London office.
    Timothy Knowles—(£5,375). He is a chartered accountant and was, until recently, group managing director of the HTV Group.

Small Bakeries

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy that food regulations affecting Wales shall take into account the operational needs of small bakeries and family bakers in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Consultations have recently been conducted with a number of interested organisations on draft amendments to the food hygiene regulations. The proposed amendments involve particularly extending temperature controls to certain foods for retail sale in order to safeguard public health. It is proposed there should be certain exemptions for bakery products, including pies, pasties and sausage rolls which are for sale within 24 hours of preparation. The comments which have been received in these consultations are currently receiving consideration.

Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list for Wales tables showing (a) the total amount bid for schools' capital expenditure by local education authorities, (b) the total amount allocated by his Department, and (c) the percentage of (b) over (a), broken down by (i) county and voluntary-controlled schools, (ii) voluntary-aided schools, and (iii) all maintained schools for each financial year from 1974-75, and in constant and current prices, and showing the percentage of each year's allocation represented by (i) basic needs and (ii) re-organisations;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report tables showing the capital allocation for each local education authority in Wales made by his Department for capital expenditure for (a) county and voluntary-controlled schools, (b) voluntary-aided schools and (c) all maintained schools, the amount of the bid in respect of each such allocation, and the percentage which each allocation bears to its respective bid, in current prices and in constant prices for each year from 1984-85 to 1989-90.

Mr Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested as the system of capital allocations to local education authorities is formula rather than bid based. Capital allocations since 1984-85 are unhypothecated between services. The public expenditure provisions for education capital at an all-Wales level for those years is shown in table 1.

The system of allocation to voluntary-aided schools falls outside local authority block allocations. Table 2 shows allocations to voluntary-aided schools for new build, alterations and works of repair and maintenance. These figures are shown from 1982-83, which is the earliest year for which they are available, and can be given only on an all-Wales basis. Figures for earlier years and an analysis by local education authority could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bids are required for major new build and alteration work only at voluntary aided schools. The total of those bids since 1982-83 are set out in table 3.

Health Service

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total spending per head on the National Health Service for Wales for the most recent 10 years.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is set out in the following table:

National Health Service Expenditure per Capita (£)

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his proposals for the implementation of the community charge transitional relief scheme.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am completing my talks with local authorities.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodia

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will withdraw United Kingdom recognition from any Cambodian delegation at the United Nations which derives support from the Khmer Rouge; and if he will make a further statement on United Kingdom policy towards Cambodian representation at the United Nations.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 25 October.

Mr. Waring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the various factions contesting for power in Cambodia.

Mr. Maude: We support the non-Communist factions of the Cambodian resistance. We do not support the Khmer Rouge and have made clear our abhorrence of Pol Pot. Neither do we have dealings with the Phnom Penh regime. Our aim is a comprehensive political settlement in which the Cambodian people can elect a Government of their choice.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Maude: As a general rule, letters from hon. Members should receive a substantive reply within a three-week period. In practice, the large majority of letters will receive a reply within two weeks. Exceptionally, replies to some letters about complicated immigration cases or matters receiving considerable public attention at the time of writing, may be delayed until a substantive reply can be sent. In most cases the delay should be no longer than four weeks.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to implement those provisions of (a) the Genocide Act 1969, (b) the Geneva Convention Act 1957, (c) the Nuremberg principles, (d) the Geneva protocal 1977 and (e) all other customary and conventional law which would make it an offence to use, or to plan to use, weapons of mass murder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: While the use of certain weapons of mass destruction is controlled or prohibited by international treaty, there is no treaty dealing specifically with the use of nuclear weapons. However, any such use would be governed by the applicable laws of war, as is the case with other weapons. Since the use of nuclear weapons would, according to the circumstances, be lawful, so the deterrent threat of their legitimate use is similarly lawful. The enforcement of the Acts of Parliament referred to is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will support the proposed referral of the question of the legality of the deployment of nuclear weapons to the International Court of Justice through the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are not aware of any proposed referral of this question to the International Court of Justice.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department was represented at (a) the International Congress of Scientists in London in April; (b) the conference in Brighton in September of the International Peace Bureau; and (c) the conference in The Hague in September of the International Associations of Lawyers against nuclear arms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Human Rights

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the members of the Commonwealth that have not ratified the international convention on human rights.

Mr. Maude: Thirty Commonwealth countries have not yet acceded to or ratified the international covenant on civil and political rights or the international covenant on economic, social an cultural rights: Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Bangladesh, Belize, Botswana, Brunei, Dominica, Ghana, Grenada, Kiribati, Lesotho, Malawi, Malaysia, Maldives, Malta, Nauru, Nigeria, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, St. Kitts and Nevis, St. Lucia, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland, Tonga, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Western Samoa and Zimbabwe.

The Solomon Islands and Uganda have ratified the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights but not the international covenant on civil and political rights.

Conventional Forces Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to publish the report on the verification of a conventional forces treaty in Europe, commissioned jointly from the Verification Technology Information Centre and the United Kingdom Council for Arms Control, and delivered to his Department on 29 September; how many copies of the report will be printed; and to which organisations and bodies he intends to circulate the report.

Mr. Waldegrave: The report was commissioned by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on a classified basis, for use by British officials in formulating policy, both nationally and in consultation with our allies, on the verification of a conventional arms control agreement. The authors are aware that should they wish to produce an unclassified version of the report, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office would be prepared to publish it.

Environmental Protection Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what involvement Ministers and officials of his Department have had in the conference on environmental protection in Sofia in October organised by the conference on security and co-operation in Europe; what papers were presented on behalf of the United Kingdom; and if any official United Kingdom representatives at the conference have had any meeting with the unofficial Ecoglasnost Bulgarian environmentalist organisations.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have sent a delegation to the CSCE meeting in Sofia on the protection of the environment which includes officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department of the Environment and the Health and Safety Executive. A member of the Green Alliance was also in the delegation. Our delegation has not itself submitted any proposals to the meeting, but has played an active part in the processing of ideas advanced during the meeting. It has co-sponsored a proposal drawing attention to the role of independent organisations and individuals in the field of the environment.

Members of the delegation have had a number of contacts with representatives of Bulgarian non-governmental organisations interested in the environment, including Ecoglasnost. Her Majesty's ambassador in Sofia and the head of the United Kingdom delegation jointly hosted a reception at the embassy on 25 October which was attended by representatives of these organisations.

Conventional Forces Reductions

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the prospect for further talks on the reduction of conventional forces in Europe after the conclusion of the current round of negotiations on conventional forces being held in Vienna.

Mr. Waldegrave: The third round of the negotiations on conventional armed forces in Europe (CFE) concluded on 19 October. Progress to date has been encouraging and there is a good prospect of a treaty being achieved by the end of next year.

PRIME MINISTER

Fishing Vessels (Registration)

Q51. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if, following the recent interim injunction of the European Court of Justice, Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to repeal section 14 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988, relating to the registration of British fishing vessels; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: An Order in Council was made yesterday to give effect to the interim order of the president of the European Court of Justice on 10 October 1989. This Order in Council removes the British citizenship requirements (but not the residence and domicile requirements) of section 14 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1989, so far as they relate to fishing vessels which were fishing under the British flag up to 31 March 1988 and were owned by nationals of member states of the European Communities.

Environmental Protection

Q97. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on recent initiatives by the Government to protect the environment.

The Prime Minister: The Government have taken a wide range of initiatives to protect the environment. Nationally this includes the creation of the National Rivers Authority to control water pollution and approval of a major programme of investment by the water industry over the next 10 years. We have recently submitted to the EC a programme for full compliance with the EC bathing waters directive in the 1990s costing £1·1 billion. We have now one of the largest programmes in Europe to control airborne pollution by sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxides.

Internationally this Government have taken a lead in securing commitments to cut down ozone damaging chemicals, and in proposing in the United Nations a conference on global climate change.

We shall build on these achievements in the years to come. At the centre of our efforts will be environmental protection legislation, and a White Paper on the environment to guide policy in the last decade of the century.

West Yorkshire

Q103. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Prime Minister when she next proposes to visit West Yorkshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Q117. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a textile mill in West Yorkshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Education Reform

Q106. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the progress of the Government's education reforms.

The Prime Minister: Substantial progress has been made in implementing the Government's education reforms which will improve the quality, relevance and efficiency of education at all levels.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister on what date she was informed of the difficulties that existed between the Strathclyde police investigating the crash at Lockerbie and the West German federal police; and what action she took to facilitate a speedy resolution of the problems.

The Prime Minister: The Dumfries and Galloway constabulary, who are carrying out the investigation with the assistance of Strathclyde and other forces report to my noble and learned Friend, the Lord Advocate, who has confirmed that a good working relationship has been maintained with the West German police and prosecution authorities.

From very early in this investigation arrangements have been in place to enable the police to obtain the Government's assistance in international aspects of their inquiries. These arrangements have operated very satisfactorily and it has not been necessary for any matters to be referred to me.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if she will convene an inter-departmental committee to promote action to reduce the number of young people under 18 years of age who are homeless.

The Prime Minister: There is already good liaison between the Ministers and Departments with relevant responsibilities, who will continue to keep this area under review.

Engagements

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 November.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 November.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

SCOTLAND

Environmental Protection

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding has the Scottish Office devoted specifically to environmental protection matters in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to provide a breakdown of all Scottish Office expenditure on environmental protection except at disproportionate cost. However, the actual expenditure on (a) the running costs of Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate and of the hazardous waste inspectorate within the Scottish Development Department, and (b) grant paid to local authorities and other bodies are as follows:

Table 1

Year	HMIPI £	HWI £
1983-84	—	20,000
1984-85	—	30,000
1985-86	—	50,000
1986-87	624,630	119,000
1987-88	819,628	124,000
1988-89	920,728	194,000

Note: Until 1987-88 the running costs of HMIPI were partly met by the Health and Safety Commission. The Scottish Office contribution in those years cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Table 2

Year	Clean Air Grants £	Special Environmental Grants £	UK 2000 £

1988-89	52,991	200,000	200,000

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to secure the founding of the European Environment Agency in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The funding of the proposed European Environment Agency is not a matter for the Scottish Office. However, its location is under consideration and siting it in Scotland is one of the options advanced on behalf of the United Kingdom.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average time taken to decide planning appeals submitted to him; how many such appeals are outstanding for the district of Angus; and how long each such appeal has been before him.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average time during 1988 was 34 weeks. There are 14 planning permission appeals currently being processed for the district of Angus. Of these four were accepted as valid appeals in July; two in August; two in September and the remainder in October.

Acid House Parties

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to co-ordinate action against acid house parties; and if he is considering the introduction of a police special intelligence unit similar to that set up in England.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend, in consultation with my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, is keeping this matter under careful review. The policing of parties of this nature is an operational matter for chief constables. They are well aware of the problems which these events might cause and will take whatever action is necessary.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 24 October 1989, at column 456.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Scottish Council for Development and Industry seeking Government action to persuade the European Community to locate the proposed European Environment Agency in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The council's north-east area committee has sent to the Secretary of State a copy of its submission to the Secretary of State for the Environment proposing a location for the agency in the Grampian region.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made a study of the relevance to the Scottish nuclear industry of the 1989 report "Plutonium Fuel: An Assessment" by an expert group of the Nuclear Energy Agency at the Organisation for Environment Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Lang: I am aware of the report. Plutonium fuels are currently in use in Scotland in the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's prototype fast reactor at Dounreay. For technical reasons mixed uranium-plutonium oxide (MOX) fuel is unsuitable for use in Magnox reactors. I am advised that, for economic reasons, it is unlikely to be used in advanced gas-cooled reactors (AGRs) in Scotland.

New Towns

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the full details of the surveys on the transfer of housing assets and related matters undertaken in the new towns of Cumbernauld, Glenrothes, Livingstone and Irvine.

Mr. Lang: It is intended that the full results of the tenants' survey will be published on 30 November 1989 as a Scottish Office central research unit paper. I will place a copy in the Library of the House. Further copies will be available from The Librarian, Room 144, New St. Andrew's House, Edinburgh, priced £3.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of young people under 18 years of age who are currently homeless; and how these estimates have changed over the last three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department does not make such estimates, and the information is not available in that form.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new initiatives he will take to reduce the present level of homelessness in young people under 18 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's continuing concern with the problem of homelessness in relation to young people has been demonstrated by the various initiatives taken to ensure that housing needs in Scotland are more closely matched by housing availability. In particular, the Government have pursued policies to introduce more choice in the housing market, including the revival of the private rented sector and the expansion of the housing association sector, both of which will benefit young people.

The Government are committed to maintaining an effective legislative framework for dealing with homelessness. Section 25 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 makes it clear that homeless families with dependent children have a priority need for accommodation. It is for local authorities to deal with cases of homelessness and the Scottish Development Department has emphasised to them in its code of guidance on the exercise of their homelessness functions that homeless young people who are at risk of sexual or financial exploitation should also have a priority need.

We have also been concerned to ensure that local authorities and other bodies which deal with homelessness are adequately resourced. We have provided grant aid to voluntary bodies such as the Scottish Council for the Single Homeless which are particularly concerned with homeless young people. Local authorities have been encouraged to take additional measures to deal with homelessness, including the adoption of cash incentive schemes to encourage their tenants to move into the private sector, thus releasing houses for homeless families.

The Government will continue to monitor the problems of homelessness and will bring forward new initiatives when appropriate.

Noise

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statutory powers are available to environmental health officers to take action to prevent noise made by commercial premises situated in residential areas disturbing members of the public who live in the vicinity; what plans he has to strengthen those powers; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities' duties and powers in relation to noise are defined in Part III of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and include provision to take legal action against the perpetrators of a noise nuisance. The Act also allows private individuals to take similar action on their own account.

I am not aware of any serious criticism of the noise provisions of the Act.

Glasgow Community Conference

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scottish Office received a request from the organisers to provide a speaker at the Glasgow east end community conference on 28-29 October; whom the Scottish Office provided; what was the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: A request for a speaker was made to the Scottish Conservative party rather than to the Scottish Office. No Scottish Office representative took part in the conference.

NHS Spending

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total spending per head on the national Health Service for Scotland for the most recent 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Total gross expenditure on the National Health Service in Scotland per head of population, since 1979-80, is set out in the table:

Total gross NHS expenditure per head of population in Scotland

	£
1979-80	205
1980-81	259
1981-82	296
1982-83	321
1983-84	344
1984-85	369
1985-86	392
1986-87	419
1987-88	455
1988-89	504

Skye Bridge

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans for further consultations with residents throughout Skye and Lochalsh over the provision of Skye bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is proposed that promotion of the Skye bridge will follow procedures similar to those for a publicly financed scheme in Scotland. There will therefore be the usual scope for discussion and comment on the scheme.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye of 18 October, Official Report, columns 163-64, he will now, in the light of Highland Regional Council's recent decision concerning a Skye bridge, announce approval for replacement ferries on the Kyle of Lochalsh-Kyleakin route; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Caledonian MacBrayne and the Scottish Development Department have already begun a detailed appraisal of the case for replacement ferries in the light of Highland regional council's decision. This will take into account up-to-date information on all relevant factors, including the significant increase in traffic this summer. An announcement will be made as soon as the appraisal has been completed.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show vacancy rates as a proportion of the total stock of dwellings in each tenure in 1989, or in the latest year available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1989]: It is estimated that at 31 March 1989, 3 per cent. of the public sector stock was vacant. Comparable figures for the private sector are not collected centrally.

Respiratory Disease

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information his Department has of the incidence of respiratory disease among the Scottish agricultural work force; and what steps he is taking to promote improvement in this situation.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Only one case of occupational respiratory disease occurring in agricultural workers in Scotland was reported to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985, in the two years 1986-87 and 1987-88, the two years for which information is available. However, data collected under the regulations is regarded as an incomplete measure of the true incidence of occupational disease.

The Executive's employment medical advisory service is about to begin a publicity campaign lasting 12 months, on occupational lung disease with the objective of increasing the awareness of employers, employees and the medical community to this group of diseases. Also, the Executive is currently supporting a project on the surveillance of occupational lung disease from reports of consultant chest physicians and occupational physicians.

ENERGY

Nuclear Plants (Robots)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what research is sponsored by his Department on the use of robots for remote intrusive maintenance of nuclear plants; what consultations he or officers of his Department have had with the United States Department of Energy over its research programme in this field; and whether he has any information on developments in Japan and France in this specific use of robots.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department contributes towards the costs of certain UKAEA programmes which cover a number of robotics and remote handling applications, particularly in the areas of radioactive waste management and decommissioning. My Department is also participating in a European Community research and training programme (TELEMAN), which is concerned with the contribution that robots and remote handling equipment can make to nuclear safety in routine inspection and maintenance, in accident management, and in decommissioning. This programme keeps us in touch with the programmes of our Community partners, including France. (Further details of this programme are available in the Official Journal of the European Communities dated 3 August 1989 and 22 September 1988, copies of which are available in the Library of the House).

Consultations with the United States Department of Energy (USDOE) are carried out under a formal co-operation agreement with the UKAEA. There have also been discussions on the application of robotics to decommissioning with USDOE, both as part of a bilateral agreement and as part of the OECD/Nuclear Energy Agency exchange agreement on decommissioning.

Information on developments in Japan is received through published documents and through the atomic energy counsellor in the British Embassy in Tokyo.

Plutonium Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made a study of the relevance to the United Kingdom's nuclear industry of the 1989 report, "Plutonium Fuel: an assessment", by an expert group of the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organisation for Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Michael Spicer: For technical reasons, mixed uranium/plutonium oxide (MOX) fuel is not suitable for use in Magnox reactors. As stated in the report, its possible use in advanced gas-cooled reactors (AGR) and pressurised water reactors (PWR) has been examined by the Central Electricity Generating Board in conjunction with British Nuclear Fuels Limited. The results suggest that there is more to be gained from MOX use in PWRs than in AGRs. However, it is not envisaged that the recycle of plutonium could be undertaken in the United Kingdom on any significant scale before the turn of the century.

Electricity Boards

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Doncaster, North of 30 October, if he will list the individuals appointed to the electricity boards and their respective backgrounds.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The individuals appointed to the electricity boards since 1 October 1987, in chronological order, are as follows:

J. F. Harris
J. C. Smith, CBE
R. W. Gurney
The Rt. Hon. Baroness Gardner of Parkes, JP
A. Crowder
J. A. Harmsworth
Mrs. V. Pollard
J. M. Griffiths, OBE, JP
M. J. Calvert, JP
A. G. Stoughton-Harris
Mrs. J. M. Wilson
R. T. Gales
I. D. Coutts, CBE
Professor R. J. Eden, OBE
G. A. Squair
R. V. Giordano
W. Waring
D. H. Jones
P. D. Nicholson
Dr. R. H. Cummings, OBE
A. G. Schroeder
J. W. Evans
D. A. Ross
D. J. Prosser
J. N. Hardman
G. M. W. Owen
J. A. Rigg, CBE
K. G. Harvey
G. H. Wilson
R. A. Cox, CBE
D. A. Davis
D. R. Morris
Mrs. D. J. Parker
A. P. Hichens
A. N. Thatcher
C. M. Fisher
D. S. Barber
R. N. Gunn
Sir Ian McLeod JP
P. W. L. Morgan
C. A. Prendergast CBE
A. N. R. Rudd
Mrs. D. C. Eccles
J. N. Duncan
M. S. Schreiber
Sir Graham Wilkins
J. O. Gough MBE
F. C. Graves OBE
L. W. G. Priestley
Sir Keith Stuart
D. B. Clark CBE
J. Porteous

In addition four appointments have been offered but not yet announced, and Mr. Harvey has been appointed twice to different boards.

It is not possible without disproportionate cost to provide details of each appointee's background.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the price of nuclear-generated electricity after privatisation.

Mr. John Wakeham: Negotiations on contracts for the supply of nuclear-generated electricity are currently taking place between National Power and the area electricity boards. I cannot pre-empt their outcome.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has made an assessment of the impact of privatisation on prices of electricity to industry.

Mr. Wakeham: Prices for large industrial users of electricity will depend on the outcome of individual negotiations between customers and suppliers or generators, subject to relevant statutory and licence requirements. The resulting prices are likely to depend on a number of factors, including the degree of load management that the customer is prepared to accept.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has made an estimate of job losses in the coal industry as a result of electricity privatisation.

Mr. Wakeham: The coal industry will need to ensure that its future output and prices meet the needs of its main customers including the privatised electricity generators. Employment in the industry will depend both on demand for coal and on future productivity gains.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has made an estimate of the sale proceeds of National Power, Power Gen, the area boards and the national grid.

Mr. Wakeham: The level of proceeds from the electricity industry sales will depend on a number of factors including the overall capital structure of the individual companies, and the state of the market at the time of flotation. It is therefore too early to speculate on the outcome.

Electricity Industry (Coal)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the tonnage of British coal agreed between National Power, Power Gen and British Coal for the next triennial year.

Mr. Wakeham: This is a matter for commercial negotiation between each of the generators and British Coal.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ministerial Visits

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the occasions on which he has visited the Duchy of Lancaster since he took office.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In the course of my duties with the Duchy of Lancaster I have attended upon Her Majesty on her visit to the Whitewell estate in Lancashire on 7 August.

I have also attended upon my magisterial duties in Birkenhead on 27 September, and have of course visited the Duchy Office in London.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the number of accidents on employment training, fatal, major and minor, for each month since the start of the scheme to the latest available date; and in that same period how many employer-based work placements and how many project-based work placements have either been rejected or closed on health and safety grounds.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training accident figures are collected quarterly the same as for YTS. Table A gives the accident figures.

Table A

		Accidents[1]
	Fatal	Major[2]	Minor
5 September to 31 December 1988	Nil	24	91
1 January to 31 March 1989	Nil	31	161
1 April to 30 June 1989	Nil	53	276
1 July to 30 September	Nil	52	286

Separate figures for closures and rejections for employer-based and project-based work placements are not kept. However table B gives the figures of closures and rejections on health and safety grounds from 5 September 1988 to the present date. These figures are provisional.

Table B

[1] Training Agency figures have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the Training Agency's figures will include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments and road traffic accidents which may not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.

[2] Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number and proportion of employment training leavers who have obtained a recognised qualification on their course and on the nature of the qualifications gained.

Mr. Nicholls: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 7 July, Official Report, column 318.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy on the future of the construction industry training board and its levy.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 31 October 1989. My right hon. Friend hopes to be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

Wages Council Inspectors

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of wages council inspectors per 1,000 workers for each year from 1974 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Statistical returns of the numbers of workers employed in establishments within scope of wages councils are not collected but periodic estimates are made. The information in the following table uses those estimates.

Average number of wages inspectors

Year	per 1,000 workers
1974	0·04
1975	0·04
1976	0·04
1977	0·05
1978	0·05
1979	0·06
1980	0·06
1981	0·04
1982	0·04
1983	0·04
1984	0·04
1985	0·04
1986	0·03
1987	0·03
1988	0·03

Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

The reduction in the inspector/worker ratio for the last three years reflects the simpler and quicker task of checking compliance with wages orders following the reform of the wages council system in 1986.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the number and (b) number per 1,000 claimants of Department of Employment staff employed to investigate benefit fraud by unemployed people claiming benefits in each year from 1978 to the latest available date.

Mr. Eggar: This Department's fraud investigation work was reorganised in 1984 and comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

The number of fraud investigators and the number of fraud investigators per 1,000 claimants are as follows:

	Number of fraud investigators	Number of fraud investigators per 1,000 claimants
1984-85	450	0·15
1985-86	650	0·20
1986-87	720	0·23

	Number of fraud investigators	Number of fraud investigators per 1,000 claimants
1987-88	785	0·29
1988-89	820	0·39

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the amount of money recovered from successful prosecutions of unemployed claimants, in current and constant prices in each year from 1978 to the latest available date.

Mr. Eggar: Actions to recover compensation awards and overpayments are undertaken by the courts and/or local benefit offices. In consequence, the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the number and proportion of unemployed claimants successfully prosecuted for benefit fraud who were prosecuted for claiming benefit whilst working in each year from 1978 to the latest available date;

(2) what was the number and proportion of unemployed claimants successfully prosecuted for benefit fraud in each year from 1978 to the latest available date.

Mr. Eggar: This Department's fraud investigation work was reorganised in 1984 and comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

The number of legal proceedings instituted by this Department are as follows:

	Girocheque fraud	Benefit fraud	Total
1984-85	253	1,997	2,250
1985-86	639	2,161	2,800
1986-87	1,139	2,511	3,650
1987-88	924	3,036	3,960
1988-89	571	3,474	4,045

This Department does not collect information centrally on the outcome of prosecutions and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Young Workers

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the employers who have indicated that they are employing young people whom they would not otherwise have employed because of the removal of young people from wages council protection in 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not this Department's practice to disclose the authorship of correspondence that it receives.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what, in percentage terms, was young workers' pay relative to their adult counterparts in each year from 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information from the new earnings survey is provided in the table:

Earnings of those aged under 18 as a percentage of the earnings of those aged 18 and over

	Percentage
1979	43·7
1980	43·0
1981	42·9
1982	42·4
1983	40·1
1984	38·8
1985	39·8
1986	39·6
1987	40·0
1988	40·8
1989	40·0

Note: Average gross weekly earnings of all full-time employees working a full week, April of each year.

New Claimants (Cumnock)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new claimants signed on each week of 1989 at the Cumnock unemployment benefit office; what delays there are in interviewing them; what requests have been received for additional staff; and what has been his response.

Mr. Eggar: The number of new claimants who signed on each week of 1989 is shown in the table. Claimants are generally interviewed within three days of making an appointment.

The area manager responsible for Cumnock met with the trade union side on 2 October to discuss issues including staffing numbers throughout the area including Cumnock. It was subsequently agreed that an additional executive officer would be posted into the Cumnock office from 13 November 1989.

Note: These figures represent the numbers of new claims for which a national insurance number if readily available input to the Computer. Details of the number of non-computer claims are not available.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current establishment, at each grade, of the unemployment benefit office at Cumnock; how many deal directly with interviewing of new claimants; what representations he has received concerning the lack of staff to deal with claimants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The number of staff in each grade is as follows:

	Number
Higher executive officer	1
Executive officer	[1]3
Administrative officer	14
Administrative assistant	5
Casual administrative assistant	1

[1] Of which one is an administrative officer on temporary promotion.

One executive officer deals directly with new claimants, with a second executive officer having an element of interviewing within his post. Area management met with the trade union side on 2 October to discuss area issues including staffing requirements. It has subsequently been agreed that the third executive officer post would be filled on a permanent basis.

Health and Safety (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, in relation to each of the occupational categories identified in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys occupational mortality decennial supplement, what proportion of each occupational category, by sex, are drawn from ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Information on ethnicity is not available for the occupation categories identified in Office of Population Censuses and Survey's occupational mortality decennial supplement, since questions on ethnic origin were not asked in the 1981 census and are not asked at time of death registration.

The nearest available information on ethnicity by occupation is derived from the labour force survey, a sample survey conducted by Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on behalf of the Department of Employment. From this survey, the Department of Employment publish aggregated years data on ethnicity by broad occupation group. The most recent published data covers the years 1985 to 1987, and can be found in the Department of Employment Gazette, December 1988, page 638. A copy of this and the latest edition of the labour force survey (1987), can be found in the Library.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women aged 60-65 years there are (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in Scotland, (c) in full/part-time employment, United Kingdom and Scotland and (d) married, and receiving their full state pension entitlement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply. The information requested in parts (a), (b) and (c) of the question is supplied in the table. Information is not available as to the number of married women who receive their full state retirement pension.

Since 1 October 1989 women aged 60-65 years are now able to choose to continue working and claim their own, category A, state retirement pension.

HEALTH

Funding

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether additional funding will be given to Oxford regional health authority to ensure a growth range of between 1·25 and 1·75 per cent. is maintained, in view of the higher level of inflation than forecast at the time of this commitment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The range of 1·25 per cent. to 1·75 per cent. to be assumed for real terms growth nationally in 1990-91, published in the Resource Assumptions and Planning Guidelines (HC(89)24), was provided to assist authorities in their short-term planning. The figures form a largely technical part of the planning process and are to be used as a basis for cautious and prudent planning. Actual allocations for 1990-91 have yet to be decided and are dependent on the outcome of this year's public expenditure survey.

Burnley General Hospital

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority regarding the emergency closure at Jackson ward in the Edith Watson maternity ward unit at Burnley general hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no requirement upon district health authorities to report to the Secretary of State for Health when implementing temporary closures or changes in the use of hospital wards. We have been advised that the temporary closure of one of the three maternity wards at Burnley general hospital reflects a reduction in the number of maternity cases since last year and was not undertaken until detailed discussions had taken place with the consultant obstetricians and directors of midwifery services. The situation is being kept under review and the ward will be reopened if there are sufficient patients to justify that decision.

Insulin

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of doctors who have transferred their patients from animal to human insulin.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not collect this information centrally.

Spending

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest comparative figures on health spending per capita and as a proportion of gross domestic product for the United Kingdom and its European Community partners; and what is the effect on these figures of the distinction between public and private funding.

Mr. Freeman: The tables show public, private and total expenditure on health per capita and as a percentage of GDP for the United Kingdom and its European Community partners in 1986, the latest year for which comparative figures are available for most of the countries.

The source of these figures is the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Pay Review

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about pay review procedures for Health Service workers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Pay review bodies were established for doctors and dentists in 1969, and for nurses, midwives and the professions allied to medicine in 1983.

Health Service Review

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what latest representations he has received about the Health Service review; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received more than 12,000 representations regarding the Government White Paper "Working for Patients".

Female General Practitioners

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many female general practitioners are currently in practice; and what was the figure 10 years ago.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1988 there were 5,686 female general practitioners in England. This figure comprises unrestricted principals and assistants. In 1978 the equivalent figure was 3,273.

Alternative Medicine

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to bring suitable forms of alternative medicine within the scope of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health is primarily responsible for medical treatment provided under the NHS, and there is already provision for the use of complementary therapies within it. NHS practitioners can offer to use any form of treatment, including any of the complementary therapies, if they consider it to be in the interest of their patients and they feel competent to provide it.

The wider use of complementary therapies in the NHS depends on those doctors already practising these methods convincing more of their fellow practitioners of the benefits and effectiveness of these forms of treatment.

NHS Reform

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards for the future of medical education and research will be introduced to coincide with the implementation of the National Health Service White Paper; and what will be the effect of the changes to the National Health Service on (a) multi-centre clinical trials and epidemiological studies and (b) rapid dissemination of research results in the service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend explained in a speech on 10 July to leading members of the medical academic community how we will safeguard medical education and research. We have placed copies in the Library. We do not believe that multi-centre clinical trials, epidemiological studies, or the dissemination of research results will in general be harmed by our plans for a more efficient Health Service.

Welsh-speaking Patients

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps will be taken in the National Health Service White Paper to safeguard the linguistic rights of Welsh-speaking patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to take any additional steps to safeguard the linguistic rights of Welsh-speaking patients in England. Nor are we introducing any changes that would adversely effect any existing safeguards. The question of appropriate measures for such patients in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his estimates of the yield of the discount clawback levy imposed from 1 May 1988 on community pharmacists in respect of the assumed trade in parallel imports of pharmaceuticals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The most recent month for which information is available is July 1989. We estimate that in the period between May 1988 and July 1989 some £7 million has been recovered from pharmacies in England in respect of discounts obtained on parallel imports.

Counterfeit Medicines

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many incidents of counterfeit medicines reaching the United Kingdom distribution system have been reported to his Department in the last 12 months; what countries were the alleged sources of fake products; and what estimates he has of the number of National Health Service patients who have been dispensed counterfeit medicines in the current year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: During the past 12 months the Department has had one report of a counterfeit medicine entering the United Kingdom distribution chain. The product was a copy of Greek Zantac 150 mg. The source is under investigation.

The counterfeit was marked with a genuine batch number. The evidence suggests that only one importer may have been supplied with counterfeits. He distributed 240 packs from the batch in question, each containing 20 tablets. This would be sufficient for one month's supply for 80 patients. But it is not known what proportion of the 240 packs may have been counterfeit so no accurate figure can be given of the number of patients to whom counterfeits may have been dispensd. On analysis the counterfeit product appeared to present no hazard to patients. As a fast-moving product, it proved impossible to recall any of the batch from retail pharmacies.

A separate incident also involving counterfeiting of Greek Zantac was reported to the Department in which the importer recognised the product as outside specifications and returned it to his supplier before any of the product was distributed within the United Kingdom. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. and learned Friend gave on 10 March at columns 718-19.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to ensure that National Health Service patients are protected from receiving counterfeit medicines; and whether he has any proposals to tighten the regulations covering the licensing of parallel imports of pharmaceuticals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Existing controls involve;

(1) a sampling and testing programme operated by the Medicines Inspectorate with analysis undertaken by the Royal Pharmaceutical Society's medicines testing laboratory at Edinburgh.

(2) An annual programme of inspection carried out by inspectors of the Medicines Control Agency and the Royal Pharmaceutical Society. All manufacturers, importers, wholesalers and community pharmacists are inspected regularly.

(3) particular checks carried out by licensed importers to verify the identity of each batch of imported material.

We are considering whether any changes may be necessary to the United Kingdom parallel import licensing scheme. We have received proposals and need to consult with all interested parties, taking account of our European Community obligations.

Medicines (Imports)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to reconsider the discount clawback arrangements in respect of purchases of parallel imported medicines by community pharmacists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates he has of the number of community pharmacists who now trade in parallel imports of pharmaceuticals; and what was the figure up to 1 May 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not routinely collect information on the number of pharmacies which dispense parallel imported medicines. An inquiry conducted in 1986 showed that about 1,600 pharmacies were using parallel imports at that time. A further inquiry is taking place this year.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of imports of pharmaceuticals from Greece in 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989 to the latest available figures.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that the information requested, which is contained in division 54 of table 2 of the overseas trade statistics of the United Kingdom, which is available in the Library, is as follows:

	£'000
1986	4,075
1987	6,728
1988	11,845
[1]1989	9,652

January to August

NHS Computer Programme

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest assessment of the cost of the National Health Service computerisation programme; and if he will give an estimate of the extra staff needed to run the system.

Mr. Freeman: In general, the responsibility for deciding how much to spend and how many staff to employ on hospitall computer systems rests with NHS managers. However, hospitals receiving computer based information systems as part of the hospital information and support systems and resource management programmes in 1989-90 will have a substantial part of the cost of those systems met centrally.

Food Temperature Control

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy that food temperature control regulations should be so set as to keep the controls on fresh-baked produce, such as sausage rolls, to the minimum consistent with public health requirements;

(2) whether he will make it his policy that food temperature regulations shall take into account the needs of small and family bakeries which produce traditional products such as pork pies.

Mr. Freeman: Draft amendments to the Food Hygiene Regulations, on which consultations have recently been conducted, propose extending temperature controls to certain foods for retail sale, consistent with the need to protect public health. Certain exemptions are proposed for bakery products, including pies, pasties and sausage rolls for sale within 24 hours of preparation. Comments received in the consultations on the amendments are currently being considered.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make special provision for local authorities to enable them to offer a day place to every mentally handicapped person in their area who requires one.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's proposals for the future organisation and funding of community care announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 12 July at columns 975-98, will create a unified source of funding for social care services. This will enable local authorities to plan and deliver these services so as to meet individual needs more effectively, but the extent of provision of any particular form of service will continue to depend on the resources available locally.

Acute Care at Home

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received a copy of the proceedings of the Kings fund conference on acute care at home held in June; and whether he will take steps to set up a national community care development agency to promote the idea of hospital at home.

Mr. Freeman: An advance copy of the report "Hospital at Home—the Coming Revolution" is being studied by officials. We have no plans to set up a national development agency for community care.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total spending per head on the National Health Service for England for the most recent 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

	NHS spending per head (England) £s
1979-80	166
1980-81	216
1981-82	242
1982-83	264
1983-84	280
1984-85	300
1985-86	316
1986-87	340
1987-88	371
1988-89	411
1989-90	444

Medical Negligence

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in introducing a health authority indemnity scheme for medical negligence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We announced on 25 July that, subject to a satisfactory resolution of the outstanding issues, the Government intended to introduce arrangements with effect from 1 January 1990 whereby health authorities would take financial responsibility for the negligent acts of their medical and dental staff in the course of their National Health Service employment. I am pleased to say that those issues have now been resolved and that the new arrangements will apply to claims for damages (in respect of negligent acts) which were initiated in earlier years as well as to new claims arising from 1 January 1990. This agreement is subject to the satisfactory conclusion of detailed discussions about the allocation of existing assets of the medical defence organisations to meeting liabilities which will be taken over by health authorities. The arrangements will apply to the hospital and community health services only. Detailed guidance on the operation of the new scheme, including the handling of both new and existing claims, will be issued to health authorities in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the criteria for defining a bovine spongiform encephalopathy-free herd.

Mr. Curry: There is no official definition of a bovine spongiform encephalopathy-free herd.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the representatives of the National Farmers Union and the Scottish National Farmers Union with whom he met prior to the implementation on 30 July of new European Community animal health rules on bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Curry: My officials met representatives from the National Farmers Union and a number of other organisations on 27 July to discuss implementation of Commission decision 89/469. The Scottish National Farmers Union, although invited, was not represented. The composition of the delegations attending such meetings is a matter for the organisations concerned.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total money being spent by Government-funded institutions on research into the effects of bovine spongiform encephalopathy on (a) the hereditary chain and (b) the food chain.

Mr. Curry: It is estimated that Government-funded institutions will spend over £2 million on research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy in 1989-90, including some in relation to the hereditary and food chains.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many live cattle have been declared as unfit for export following upon the implementation on 30 July of new European Community animal health rules on bovine spongiform encephalopathy;

(2) how many live cattle, already cleared for export, were returned from exit ports to the farms of origin, as a result of the implementation on 30 July of new European Community animal health rules on bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Curry: I have received no reports of cattle, presented for export following implementation of Commission decision 89/469 on 30 July, being declared unfit for export to other member states because they failed to meet the certification requirements of that decision in relation to bovine spongiform encephalopathy. However, several export consignments had to be rejected before 30 July because the Republic of Ireland unilaterally imposed import restrictions on 25 July. I have no information about the number of live cattle involved.

Cereal Substitutes

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the total tonnage of cereal substitutes imported into the United Kingdom for each of the last five years, indicating the country of origin where possible.

Mr. Curry: The total tonnages of cereal substitutes imported in to the United Kingdom in each of the last five years (1984-88) were set out in columns 284-85 of the Official Report for 10 April 1989 in response to an earlier question.

The 1988 total tonnage has now been revised to 1,108,000 tonnes. Nearly half of the total consists of maize gluten feed, almost all of which comes from the United States of America.

Horses (Transporting)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the retention or amendment of the minimum values regulations governing the conditions under which live horses are transported from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The system of minimum values designed to prevent the export of horses for slaughter is a purely national agreement. As part of the single market programme the Commission has made a proposal for a Community regulation on the protection of animals during transport and as drafted this makes no provision for our controls on horse exports to continue. Our objective will be to ensure that there will be adequate welfare standards during all journeys and that these are implemented and enforced rigorously throughout the Community to protect horses and ponies.

Animal Feed

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the ban on the use of animal protein in animal feed is currently in force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: A ban on feeding ruminant-derived protein to ruminant animals is currently in force.

Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the activities that are carried out in his Department's (a) veterinary investigation centres and (b) farm and countryside service laboratories.

Mr. Gummer: The veterinary investigation centres provide laboratory and veterinary support to the field service of the state veterinary service in respect of my statutory animal and public health obligations and in the investigation of new and emerging diseases. They also provide diagnostic, advisory and consultancy services to the livestock industry through practising veterinary surgeons, liaise with medical and local authorities on the control of zoonotic disease and support approved research and development.

The farm and countryside service laboratories provide professional analytical chemistry, (covering crop husbandry, soil and animal nutrition), entomology, plant pathology, microbiology, and wildlife and storage biology services in respect of my statutory obligations, in support of research and development, and in the provision of advice on a direct commercial basis to the agricultural and related industries.

Food Advisory Committee

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations with whom he consults prior to a Food Advisory Committee meeting about the subjects to be discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The agendas of the Food Advisory Committee meetings are published in advance of each meeting as a press release. This is distributed on a standard circulation list to nearly 900 individuals and organisations known to have an interest in food matters, including trade, academic, consumer and enforcement bodies. Any requests for addition to the list will be sympathetically considered.

Food Safety Directorate

Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the setting up of a food safety directorate within his Department.

Mr. Gummer: The food safety directorate that I am establishing in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, will bring together under the Minister responsible for food, my hon. Friend the Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. David Maclean) all the main aspects of food safety work for which the Minister is responsible. At the same time, I am setting up a consumer panel chaired by my hon. Friend to keep under review from a consumer's viewpoint, the implementation of policies on food safety and consumer protection. The food safety directorate, together with new arrangements for bringing to bear more directly and systematically the views of consumer organisations, will strengthen my Department's organisation for dealing with food safety issues.

The food safety directorate will consist of four main groups, each headed by a grade 3 under-secretary. The food safety group will have overall responsibility for policy on food safety and quality, including composition, labelling, additives, contaminants and new production processes. The food science group, headed by the chief scientist (Food) and staffed at senior levels by scientists, will provide the scientific back-up on food safety issues. This group includes the new food science laboratory at Norwich which will carry out necessary analytical and research work in support of food policy additional to that commissioned from other laboratories. The third group will deal with pesticide safety approvals, veterinary medicines and biotechnology issues. Finally, the fourth group will handle meat hygiene, animal health and the related public health issues, and animal welfare. The initial complement of the food directorate is 695. The resources devoted to this work have been increased and will be kept under review.

The consumer panel will provide a forum in which the Minister will be able to hear directly from representatives of consumers their views on food safety and consumer protection issues. The consumer panel will include representatives nominated by each of the main consumer bodies. The panel will provide a more formal and systematic means of maintaining contact between my Department and the consumer organisations. I shall make an announcement shortly on the membership and terms of reference of the consumer panel.

These new arrangements do not diminish in any way the continuing need for advice from the existing expert and independent committees, namely the food advisory committee, the advisory committee on pesticides and the veterinary products committee, as well as the Department of Health committees on medical aspects of food, toxicity, carcinogenicity and mutagenicity and the joint MAFF/DoH Committee on novel foods and processes. The food safety directorate will work closely with the state veterinary service and will be advised on public health questions by the Government's Chief Medical Officer.

These changes will focus my Ministry's resources more effectively on to maintaining the safety and quality of the nation's food supplies. The food safety directorate will be responsible for keeping the public informed on food safety matters.

Export of Animals

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will undertake to ban all export of animals for scientific purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have no plans to introduce such a ban.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received concerning discrimination on grounds of sex and the state pension age; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We received a total of 274 representations between 19 October 1988 and 17 October 1989.

Young People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment has been made of the minimum income after paying rent and rates required by single people below (a) 25 years, and (b) 18 years to meet other costs of living.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No such assessment has been made. The level of support approved by Parliament for those receiving income-related benefits varies according to personal circumstances, including factors such as disability.

Service Pensions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cumulative total number of those service men who have been in receipt of a war pension or allowance from his Department because their deaths were attributable to their service in the armed forces who died (a) in service, (b) after retirement from the armed forces and (c) after being invalided out of or medically discharged from the armed forces for each year from 1959 to the latest available date; and, for each of the above categories for the latest year for which records exist, what was the number of war widows' pensions in payment from his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A total of 57,571 war widows pensions were in payment at the end of 1988.

Homelessness

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what new initiatives he will take to provide additional benefit to young people who are under 18 years of age and who are homeless.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Homeless people, including 16 and 17-year-olds, continue to be entitled to claim a range of benefits in the usual way.

The need for most 16 and 17-year-olds to rely on benefit was removed in September 1988 when a youth training scheme place, with a training allowance, was guaranteed for all those not in a job or full time education. Certain groups of young people may receive income support. These include lone parents, the disabled and the long-term sick who may claim at any time. Young people forced to live independently can claim income support during the child benefit extension period while they look for work or a youth training scheme place. They can also receive housing benefit. Moreover, a package of changes was introduced in July which recognised the special difficulties being experienced by some 16 and 17-year-olds with no option but to live away from home. An important element of this was to pay them higher rates of both income support and housing benefit.

We have an important safety net which enables those 16 and 17-year-olds who would otherwise not be entitled to be paid income support to prevent severe hardship.

Those who are homeless may claim a social fund crisis loan to enable them to secure accommodation.

We continue to monitor the 1988 Social Security reforms including those affecting young people.

Family Credit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications there have been for family credit in each month since April 1988; and how many awards have been made.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is as follows:

1988	Claims	Awards
April	96,505	40,213
May	41,721
June	52,293	36,145
July	46,100	37,912
August	46,376	40,249
September	47,759	24,158
October	56,373	44,944
November	57,850	46,234
December	44,834	35,797
1989
January	63,638	42,712
February	60,318	45,180
March	68,637	47,184
April	96,752	43,300
May	123,038	39,187
June	107,276	73,778
July	66,075	50,004
August	62,397	48,158
September	80,792	54,498
October	80,670	50,510

Notes:

1. The figures are for the four or five weeks ending on the last Friday of the month.

2. The figures for claims received include those made to renew existing awards and those made more than four weeks before the expiry of an existing award (and therefore invalid).

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what proportion of family credit recipients are women.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A total of 315,000 comprising over 98 per cent. Apart from lone parent families headed by a man, family credit is almost invariably paid to women, since in two-parent families the claim is made by, and payment is made to, the woman unless the circumstances are quite exceptional.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing (a) the number of families and (b) the number of children receiving family credit and what proportion each makes up of those entitled to family credit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest comprehensive information is for July 1989 when over 320,000 families, containing 671,000 children, were receiving family credit. Estimates of the total eligible population at that stage cannot be made until information from the 1989 family expenditure survey becomes available.

Income Support

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social security how many children are in families receiving income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available information is that there are 2,092,000 children in families receiving income support.

War Widows

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was his Department's total expenditure, at 1979 prices, on war widows' pensions in the years 1978-79 to 1988-89.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 October 1989]: The information requested is in the table.

	Actual expenditure £	Expenditure at 1978-79 prices £
1978-79	116,705,438	116,705,438
1979-80	128,840,466	110,455,980
1980-81	145,803,473	105,437,973
1981-82	165,598,881	109,115,611
1982-83	174,091,975	107,127,120
1983-84	177,358,000	104,304,650
1984-85	176,325,000	98,814,576
1985-86	192,859,160	102,449,032
1986-87	191,496,000	98,563,466
1987-88	189,581,000	92,716,484
1988-89	199,695,000	91,020,184

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Statutory Instrument 1989/1824 was referred to the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council; and what advice the council gave.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 31 October 1989]: The proposals relating to the regulations in this statutory instrument were referred to the council in January this year. They did not raise any formal objection.

Child Benefit

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children are in families that will receive child benefit in 1990-91.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to table 15.6 of the Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm 615) published in January this year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anglo-Irish Relations

16. Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recent developments in Anglo-Irish relations.

Mr. Brooke: There have been three recent meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental conference, at which issues affecting the confidence of the community in the security forces figured prominently. Copies of the joint communiques issued after each meeting have been placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office. As a result of recent events a number of measures have been set in train by the Government. The recent difficulties in Anglo-Irish relations have illustrated the value of the agreement in permitting discussion of the issues involved, with a view to resolving differences.

UDR Soldiers (Murder Convictions)

18. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to discover if an injustice may have been done to four Ulster Defence Regiment soldiers convicted of the murder of Adrian Carroll; and if, in the light of experience gained from the Guildford case, he will seek to have examined a radio statement by the main witness that she was deceived into giving incorrect evidence.

Mr. Cope: All the representations made and documents presented in this case to date, along with the transcript of the radio programme, have been carefully examined. No grounds have been found to justify referring the case to the Court of Appeal, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider any new evidence or representations which may be made to him.

Animal Experiments

19. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the use of animals for experiments at Queen's university; how many animals are presently kept at the university; what is the nature of the experiments; and what level of pain and suffering is estimated to be inflicted on the animals.

Mr. Needham: It is not the practice to disclose information about experiments authorised under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 at any particular establishment.

Long-term Unemployment

20. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of the Social Security Order (1989), on the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Needham: It is too early to assess the impact.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

22. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a further date has been arranged for the next meeting of the signatories to the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) earlier today.

Intergovernmental Conference

23. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was discussed at the last Intergovernmental Conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Intergovernmental Conference last met on 18 October. Discussions continued on a range of issues relating to confidence in the security forces and the system of justice. Security co-operation, cross-border economic co-operation and the implementation of the conclusions of the review of the working of the conference were matters also discussed. The joint statement issued after the meeting was placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office.

31. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recent meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

33. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the discussions he has had within the framework of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: There have been three recent meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference, and copies of the joint statements issued after each have been placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office. A large part of the meetings was taken up with issues affecting the confidence of the community in the security forces in Northern Ireland, and further discussions are likely at future conference meetings.

Unemployment

24. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he intends to take to reduce unemployment in west Belfast.

Mr. Needham: Much action has already been taken to tackle the problems of unemployment in west Belfast. The Belfast action team and the "making Belfast work" initiatives have focussed attention and resources on encouraging employment and enterprise in west Belfast. To date these initiatives have proved successful in stimulating local enterprise. Further plans have been drawn up to build on the initial local successes which have been assisted by major private sector investments such as the choice by Montupet of the former De Lorean factory for its 1,000 job project.

28. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he intends to act upon the recommendations of the Phoenix West Belfast development trust.

Mr. Needham: I am pleased to say that many of the recommendations are already being implemented, particularly under the "making Belfast work" and Belfast action team initiatives. Contacts have also been made to enable Phoenix to discuss its proposals for jobs creation directly with IDB and LEDU.

29. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment in the Province.

Mr. Needham: On 14 September 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the Province stood at 103,000 which is its lowest level since November 1982.

UDR Recruits (Vetting)

25. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning vetting procedures for recruits to the Ulster Defence Regiment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Recent events have given rise to concern that a small minority of members of the Ulster Defence Regiment may have associations with members of illegal paramilitary organisations, or other associations, which are incompatible with membership of the security forces. This is unacceptable and the General Officer Commanding has therefore made improvements in the process of screening new recruits to the UDR, including transfers from other Army units, and for follow-up action such as re-screening in cases of doubt. Among the new measures is the establishment of a special unit for screening UDR recruits, which will be manned by members of the Regular Army. They will have advice from the Royal Ulster Constabulary. Some representations have been received which, in general, support these changes.

Local Government

26. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has received in relation to the consultative document on local government in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Over 60 responses to the local government consultative paper were received.

34. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what ways he intends to change the system of local government in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's proposals for changes in the system of local government in Northern Ireland were set out in the local government consultative paper last November. Responses to that paper are being considered.

EC Structural Fund

27. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to promote the types of cross-border developments eligible for European Community structural fund awards.

Mr. Cope: In anticipation of an EC Commission initiative to introduce a transfrontier programme, Ministers from the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland following a recent intergovernmental conference, instructed officials of both Governments to prepare proposals for submission to the Commission. A preliminary list of cross-border proposals has already been passed to the Commission, and further work is continuing. A formal application cannot be lodged until details of the EC programme become available.

40. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to further cross-border programmes eligible for support from the European Community structural fund.

Mr. Cope: In anticipation of an EC Commission initiative to introduce a transfrontier programme, Ministers from the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland following a recent intergovernmental conference, instructed officials of both Governments to prepare proposals for submission to the Commission. A preliminary list of cross-border proposals has already been passed to the Commission and further work is continuing. A formal application cannot be lodged until details of the EC programme become available.

Devolution

30. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland from which constitutional political parties he has received a written submission as a framework for devolution in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I have been told by the leaders of all the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland that they support devolution and they have drawn my attention to ideas, expressed earlier in writing and orally, about how progress towards that objective might be achieved.

Home Helps

32. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he will take to prevent further cutbacks in the home help service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The level of resources devoted to particular services is a matter for Health and Social Services boards to determine. Northern Ireland provides the highest number of home helps per 1,000 population in the United Kingdom, and there has been no reduction in the level of funding for the home help service in 1989-90. There has however been increasing demand, and in order to avoid overspending, several boards have reassessed the need among individual clients for the number and extent of visits. In each case every effort has been made to minimise the effect on clients and to ensure that the service is targeted on those most in need.

Debt Payments

35. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has had seeking the repeal of the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971.

Mr Cope: In the last year there have been three questions from hon. Members and one written representation on this subject.

Transport

36. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the transport needs of Northern Ireland in the context of the single European market.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The transportation programme was submitted to the European Community on 25 September and the Government await a formal response.

Voters (Identification)

37. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take action to simplify the rules for identification of voters at polling stations.

Mr. Cope: The list of specified documents used for electoral purposes is kept under review. I should be pleased to consider any improvement which the right hon. Gentleman or other hon. Members would care to suggest.

UDR

38. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to alter the role of the Ulster Defence Regiment in relation to the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: No.

The Royal Ulster Constabulary has primary responsibility for the maintenance of law and order in Northern Ireland; the Armed Forces, including the Regular Army and Ulster Defence Regiment, will continue to operate in support of the police but only for so long as the threat from terrorism makes that support necessary.

Roadworks

39. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will specify the anticipated completion dates for (a) the Killead bypass and (b) the dualling of the A26.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not possible, at this early stage, to specify the completion date for either of these schemes.

Arts

4. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of spending per capita on arts in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Government spending per capita is £2·85.

Accident Statistics

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the level of public funding in each of the past three years for which figures are available to counter deaths and injuries as a result of (a) road accidents, (b) accidents in the home and (c) terrorist attacks.

Mr. Cope: It is not possible to separate out the precise level of public funding attributable to these purposes.

Maryfield Secretariat

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total cost of the Maryfield secretariat, including security, from the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement to date; and what is the total cost of security for the same period.

Mr. Cope: The cost to the British Government in maintaining the Anglo-Irish secretariat since its establishment in December 1985 to 30 September 1989 was £3,132,000, of which £2,003,000 related to manpower costs for security. The cost to the Irish Government is a matter for them.

Mr. Paul Hill

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of transporting Paul Hill from the Old Bailey to Belfast on 19 October; and what method was used.

Mr. Cope: The cost of transporting Paul Hill from the Old Bailey to Maghaberry prison on 19 October 1989 was £2,890·78. He was flown from RAF Northolt to RAF Aldergrove. Connection journeys were by road.

Japanese Investment

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the level of investment in Northern Ireland by Japanese companies.

Mr. Needham: There are three manufacturing companies in Northern Ireland which are either wholly or partly owned by Japanese companies.

In addition a fourth Japanese company operates a marketing and distribution outlet there.

It is not possible to give precise figures for investment.

Further Education

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend further education in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Enrolment at colleges of further Education has increased by almost 40 per cent. over the last 10 years. The Department of Education and the area boards have responded to increased demands by the provision of new permanent and temporary accommodation, increased staffing and enhancement of equipment.

We will continue to respond to needs as they arise.

Political Parties (Discussions)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of the political parties in Northern Ireland; and what was discussed.

Mr. Brooke: Over the past three months I have had introductory meetings with the leaders of the Alliance party of Northern Ireland, the Democratic Unionist party, the Social Democratic and Labour party, the Ulster Unionist party, the Ulster Popular Unionist party and the Workers party, and with other elected representatives. My meetings with the party leaders covered a wide range of subjects, including especially the prospects for achieving political progress in Northern Ireland.

Education and Library Boards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total membership of each of the five education and library boards; how many female members he has appointed to each of these boards; and if he will make a statement on the level of female representation on the education boards.

Dr. Mawhinney: The membership of each of the five Education and Library boards is:

	Membership	Of whom: are female
Belfast	35	7
South-Eastern	35	3
North-Eastern	35	6
Southern	35	7
Western	32	5

In making appointments to Education and Library boards the Department of Education is keen to ensure that boards are representative of a wide range of educational interests. Bodies which are asked to put forward names for consideration are encouraged to include the names of women.

DEFENCE

UDR

41. Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the Ulster Defence Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ulster Defence Regiment is an indispensable element of the Army's efforts in support of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in Northern Ireland. I have every confidence that the overwhelming majority of the UDR will continue to carry out their duties professionally, loyally and impartially. The UDR will continue to play its part in the fight against terrorism and no changes are envisaged in its role.

Anti-tank Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the design of anti-tank weapons of the development of protective armour on Warsaw pact tanks.

Mr. Alan Clark: The implications of developments in the protective armour of Warsaw pact tanks are kept under review, and, where necessary, improvements made to the design of our anti-armour weapons.

Quality Assurance Headquarters

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report progress on the relocation of the quality assurance headquarters and laboratories from London to a site in Teesside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: My Department is hard at work on a whole range of matters including the definition of user requirements, the selection of an external consultant to manage the design and construction work, negotiations for the purchase of land and the provision of utilities and road access, and various personnel aspects of relocation.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the policy of his Department in relation to the appointment of an external project manager with regard to the relocation of the defence quality assurance headquarters and laboratories to Teesside; what consideration is given to the appointment of local firms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the policy of his Department with regard to the involvement of locally based companies in the process of relocation of offices and services out of London to the provinces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Department's policy generally and in relation to the appoinment of external project managers is to follow the Government rules for fair and open competition. Successful bidders need to demonstrate that they have a clear understanding of departmental requirements, practical and efficient proposals to meet them and the necessary capacity and experience to manage projects of the size and complexity envisaged. Local knowledge is considered to be a useful additional asset.

Decentralisation

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy with regard to decentralisation of offices and services out of London to the provinces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: As has been stated in the House on several occasions, it remains our objective to see a more even spread of defence employment across the regions. We are currently examining a range of further relocation possibilities and shall continue to pursue every opportunity to relocate defence work. But all such moves must be justifiable in both operational and economic terms.

UKADGE

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who owns the intellectual property rights associated with the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member on 7 July at column 302.

Service Pensions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men killed in action from 1 April 1973 to the latest date for which records exist, who were engaged on pensionable terms, failed to complete the minimum period of service required in their rank for the award of an occupational pension from his Department before being killed in action.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Pensions awarded under the occupational scheme for the Armed Forces include long-service pensions, invaliding pensions, and attributable invaliding pensions. Since 31 March 1973 there has been no minimum period of service required to qualify for the award of an attributable invaliding pension. Consequently, all married service men killed in action since that date have been able to qualify their eligible widow for an occupational pension from the Ministry of Defence.

However, I assume that the hon. Member, in referring to the award of an occupational pension, is concerned with those long-service pensions awarded on normal retirement or discharge. The minimum period of reckonable service normally required to qualify for such awards is, for officers, 16 years and, for other ranks, 22 years.

Information on the number of service men killed in action since 1 April 1973 who had not given these periods of service before their death is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cumulative total number of those service men whose deaths were attributable to their service in the armed forces who died (a) in service, (b) after retirement from the armed forces and (c) after being invalidated out of or medically discharged from the armed forces, from 1959 to the latest available date; and, for each of the above categories for the latest year for which records exist, what was the number of war widows' pensions in payment from his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested on the number of service men whose death was attributable to their service in the Armed Forces is not available. Where applicable, war widows pensions corresponding to those deaths are paid by the Department of Social Security.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the award to the widow of a service man of an attributable forces family pension does not assume the promotion of her husband beyond the rank in which he was killed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is normal practice in occupational pension schemes that benefits, whether payable on retirement or death in service, are based on the level of salary actually received by the scheme member at or preceding the last day of service. The Armed Forces pension scheme uses rank held as an alternative to actual salary.

Service Ranks

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average period of time for which a service man remains in the rank of private or equivalent, for the latest year for which records exist and for each of the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The average times spent in the rank of senior aircraftman (SAC) for those leaving the rank on promotion or exit during 1988-89 are given in the table. The time does not include time spent as an aircraftman (AC) or leading aircraftman (LAC). Similar figures are given for promotions during 1988 from able seaman (not including time spent as an ordinary seaman) and marine 1 (not including time spent as marine 2). The average time spent in the ranks of able seaman and marine 1 for those leaving the RN or RM during 1988 are not readily available. Figures for the Army are not readily available.

Average time (in years) spent in the ranks of Able Seaman/Marine 1/SAC

	Total	On promotion	On exit
Able Seaman (1988)	n.a.	4·7	n.a.
Marine 1 (1988)	n.a.	5·7	n.a.
SAC (1988-89)	5·7	6·3	5·3

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what is the average period of time for which a service man remains in the rank of Army captain or equivalent, for the latest year for which records exist and for each of the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The average times spent in the rank of flight lieutenant for those leaving the rank on promotion or exit during 1988-89 are given in the table. Similar figures are given for promotions during 1988-89 from Lt(R[illegible] and Lt(RM). The average times spent in the ranks of Lt(RN) and Lt(RM) for those leaving the Royal Navy or Royal Marines during 1988-89 are not readily available. Figures for the Army are not readily available.

Average time (in years) spent in the ranks of Lt(RN)/Lt(RM)/Fl Lt(RAF)

	Total	On promotion	On exit
Lieutenant (RN)	n/a	8·4	n/a
Lieutenant (RM)	n/a	7·3	n/a
Flight Lieutenant (RAF)	9·4	8·5	10·7

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average period of time for which a service man remains in the rank of corporal or equivalent for the latest year for which records exist and for each of the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The average times spent in the rank of RAF corporal for those leaving the rank on promotion or exit during 1988-89 are given in the table. Similar figures are given for promotions during 1988 from leading hand (RN) and Royal Marines corporal. The average times spent in the ranks of leading hand and RM corporal for those leaving the RN and RM during 1988 are not readily available. Figures for the Army are not readily available.

Average time (in years) spent in the equivalent rank of corporal

	Total	On promotion	On exit
Leading hand (1988)	n/a	4·1	n/a
RM corporal (1988)	n/a	5·8	n/a
RAF corporal (1988/89)	5·7	6·8	4·7

Marconi Communications Sets

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Marconi 2955A radio communications test sets have been ordered for the Royal Air Force and Army; and for which services it is his intention to order more.

Mr. Alan Clark: A total of 330 of these sets were ordered in December 1988 after a competitive tendering action had produced an assessment that they represented the most cost-effective technically viable solution to a particular problem.

Future requirements, should they arise, may also be subject to a competitive tendering exercise.

Submergence Rescue Vehicle

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his intention to publish the results of the recent trials by the Royal Navy of the deep submergence rescue vehicle.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our normal practice to publish the results of such exercises but I can tell the hon. Gentleman that this exercise, which is conducted at regular intervals, successfully achieved all its objectives.

Advanced STOL Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the development of the advanced short take off and vertical landing aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: We are engaged with the United States Government in a bilateral programme of studies into the technologies which might be required for an advanced short take off and vertical landing aircraft. This programme, which began in 1986, is expected to take some five years to complete.

Battle Tanks

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the NATO future main battle tank.

Mr. Alan Clark: For a statement on plans to co-ordinate the development of the next generation of tanks I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones).

Upholder Class Submarine

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the most up-to-date prediction of the date of delivery to the Royal Navy of the first type 2400 Upholder class submarine.

Mr. Neubert: We currently expect that the first type 2400 Upholder class submarine to be delivered to the Royal Navy next summer.

Anti-Air Warfare

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his decision between the NATO anti-air warfare system and the family of anti-air missile systems for Royal Navy warships.

Mr. Neubert: An announcement will be made in the near future.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the 1990 British Army equipment exhibition will be held; and on which days it will be open to (a) overseas customers, (b) the press and (c) the British public.

Mr. Alan Clark: The British Army equipment exhibition will be held at Aldershot during the week 3 to 8 June 1990. 3 June is a press day which the national provincial and technical press may attend. Overseas customers may attend from 4 to 8 June 1989. The exhibition is not open to the general public.

Potton Island (Wastes)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amount of (a) toxic wastes and (b) radioactive wastes arising from military experiments exist at Potton island in Essex; under what environmental regulations these wastes are managed; what is the long-term plan for the disposal of these wastes; and what is his estimate of the total cost of this disposal strategy.

Mr. Neubert: There are no known toxic or radioactive wastes at Potton island. The area is being cleared of residual conventional munitions and explosives. To date this has cost some £40,000.

Nevada Test Site

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total charge levied by the United States in collective historic pounds and in current pounds for United Kingdom use of the Nevada test site for the nuclear testing of United Kingdom warheads (a) since the programme began and (b) since 1979; and what arrangements have been made by the United States authorities for the management and disposal of radioactive wastes arising from these United Kingdom nuclear warheads.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our policy to publish the costs of these tests. Arrangements for the management and disposal of radioactive wastes are included in the costs levied by the United States authorities. Such wastes are disposed of by the United States under recognised procedures.

Chemical Warfare Agents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what volumes and what types of chemical warfare agents are maintained at the Porton Down chemical warfare research establishment as part of his Department's defensive prophylactic research programme; when the entire stocks of these chemical warfare agents will be destroyed; and under what conditions.

Mr. Neubert: As has frequently been stated in previous answers, the MOD does not possess a chemical warfare research establishment. The role of the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, is to provide effective protective measures for the United Kingdom Armed Forces against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. The United Kingdom abandoned all offensive chemical warfare work over 30 years ago.

As stated in my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member on 25 January at column 653, the MOD holds small experimental quantities of agent, for research into protective measures against chemical and biological attack.

These small quantities will be maintained for as long as necessary. As stated in my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member on 23 March at column 754, the MOD does not disclose details of the location of these small quantities for security reasons.

Military Aircraft Flights

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if flights by non-Royal Air Force military aircraft over the United Kingdom require prior authorisation; and if all such flights are recorded.

Mr. Neubert: It is standing operational practice for each flight undertaken by a military aircraft operating within the airspace of the United Kingdom to be authorised by a competent authority. No central record of such flights is maintained.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions, to the latest available date in 1989, and in each of the last three years, unauthorised flights by military aircraft have taken place over the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Reports of unauthorised flights are investigated by the appropriate authorities. No central records are kept of such flights.

Frigates

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there has been any alteration in the last six months of the long-term plans to order type 23 frigates;

(2) if there has been any alteration in the level of funds available for future orders for the type 23 frigate.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to comment on long-term planning assumptions. Decisions on orders will be announced as appropriate. The Government remain committed to maintaining a force of about 50 destroyers and frigates and will order sufficient new ships to achieve this target.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ability those type 23 frigates not fitted with an automated command and control system will possess to identify aircraft as either friendly or hostile.

Mr. Neubert: The classification of an aircraft as friendly or hostile is based on information from a variety of sources including the ships identification friend or foe (IFF) system and other sensors. In T23 frigates not fitted with a command system this information will be available but will not be correlated automatically.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the average annual number of frigates that have been ordered between 1982 and 1988, excluding those vessels ordered to replace Falkland losses.

Mr. Neubert: Fourteen frigates were ordered in the period. Excluding the four ordered to replace Falkland losses, this gives an average annual number of 1·4.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what regard he has had to the employment implications of future orders for the type 23 frigate;

(2) what regard he has had to the industrial investment implications of future orders for the type 23 frigate.

Mr. Neubert: The Government's policy is to place orders for warships following competition, the aim being to secure best value for money for the defence budget. Tender prices and compliance with contract conditions will be the major considerations in the current competition for type 23 frigates.

However, as the MOD confirmed in its response to the 31 report from the Committee of Public Accounts (Session 1987-88), its strategy is to maintain sufficient warship-building capacity to meet likely future defence requirements and a competitive base and these twin objectives are always taken into account in the placing of individual ship and submarine orders.

RAF Flights

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Royal Air Force is able to account for all flights by its aircraft over the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: No detailed account of such flights is required.

Destroyers

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the implications of the Government's withdrawal from the NFR90 collaborative project;

(2) what assessment has been made of the need to replace the type 42 destoyer.

Mr. Neubert: The Royal Navy has a continuing requirement for a replacement for the type 42 destroyer to come into service at the turn of the century. Following the United Kingdom's withdrawal from the NFR90 programme, we are now addressing how best to proceed with this requirement, including the possibility of alternative collaborative arrangements for elements of the programme.

Warship Building

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the amounts of Government subsidy provided to warship building yards in other NATO nations.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Thailand and Cambodia

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what military assistance has been provided to the Government of Thailand in the last 10 years;

(2) whether any Cambodian nationals have received military training or instruction from serving members of the British armed forces at any time in the last 10 years;

(3) whether any military assistance has been provided by the Government for Cambodian guerrillas at any time in the last 10 years;

(4) whether any service personnel, apart from those attached to the British embassy, have worked in Thailand at any time in the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 30 October 1989 at column 43.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Staff Statistics

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) civil servants with higher education responsibilities, and (b) Her Majesty's inspectors (higher education), UGC/UFC, and NAB/PCFC, have been employed in 1987-88 and 1988-89; and how many extra it is proposed to recruit in 1989-90.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follows:

	[1]1987-88	[1]1988-89	[1]1989-90
Civil Servants with responsibility for policy on higher education	57	54	51
HMI (Higher Education)[2]	150	150	150
UGC	70	68	—
UFC	—	—	80
NAB	30	33	—
PCFC	—	—	63

Notes

[1] Staff in post on 1 October.

[2] The majority of HMI with responsibilities in higher education also have further education responsibilities. It is not possible to disaggregate the time spent on higher education.

Most of the additional staff budgeted for in 1989-90 have already been recruited and are included in the third column. Any further net additions should not be significant.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ministerial Duties (Mileage)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average mileage per day travelled by the Minister for Overseas Development in performing her official duties; and what was the figure for her predecessor.

Mrs. Chalker: Between mid-1988 and mid-1989 my predecessor, the right hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) travelled over 100,000 miles, an average of nearly 300 miles per day, in the course of his official duties. I expect my travel to follow a similar pattern.

Consultants

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Overseas Development Administration maintains a list of approved consultants.

Mrs. Chalker: The ODA maintains a register of consultants but inclusion on this register does not imply that ODA approves of the firm or individual concerned, nor that they will necessarily be invited to tender for projects.

Overseas Civil Service (Pensions)

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements have been made to include Hong Kong and other colonies in the arrangements for pensioners of Her Majesty's overseas Civil Service to include pre-appointment war service in the calculation of their pensions.

Mrs. Chalker: Any overseas pensioner from one of our dependencies who also receives a pension paid under the terms of the Overseas Pensions Act 1973, will be eligible for consideration under the terms of the Colonial Service Officers' Pensions Addition for War Service (United Kingdom) Scheme 1989.

We have written to Hong Kong and other dependencies whose expatriate pensions do not come within the scope of the Act, to ask if they will introduce arrangements which would parallel our scheme. Bermuda and the Cayman Islands have advised us that they have no pensioners to whom the terms would apply; we still await replies from the others, including Hong Kong whose Government have previously expressed a desire to intoduce credit for war service.

PRIME MINISTER

Public Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister what steps are taken to encourage scientific civil servants working on areas related to public safety to draw public attention to threats to public safety.

The Prime Minister: This will depend on the circumstances in each case. In bringing matters to the attention of the public all civil servants are required to act in accordance with the principles concerning the provision of information set out in chapter 6 of the "Personnel Management Handbook", copies of which are available in the House Libraries.

WALES

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much of the money currently spent on residential care in Wales is specifically allocated to services for disabled people.

Mr. Grist: The only relevant figures available are those for expenditure by local authorities on residential homes for different categories of resident as shown in the following table.

Residential homes for	Net current expenditure (1987-88) (£)
The elderly	29,623,980
The younger physically disabled blind and deaf	1,869,453
Persons with a mental illness—Staffed homes	1,168,760
Persons with a mental illness—Unstaffed homes	11,287
Persons with a mental handicap—Staffed homes	5,947,987
Persons with a mental handicap—Unstaffed homes	43,406
Residential accommodation for mixed client groups	39,883

Residential homes for	Net current expenditure (1987-88) (£)
TOTAL	38,724,756

Note—Includes expenditure on employees and running expenditure financed from relevant specific grants, rates and balances. Excludes expenditure financed by local income and non-relevant specific grants.

Excludes expenditure associated with the All-Wales Mental Handicap Strategy.

Farmers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions during 1988 and 1989 either he, or his officials, have met representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have met representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales on seven occasions and my officials have on 25 occasions. In addition there are frequent but irregular meetings with officials at the four divisional offices dealing with matters involving either individual farmers or of a more general, but essentially local, interest. Central records are not kept of these local meetings.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken to monitor the linguistic rights of elderly Welsh-speaking people within private sector nursing and old people's homes.

Mr. Grist: It is for the individual elderly person to select a home which suits his/her particular language requirements. In exercising their responsibilities, several registration authorities have issued guidance to proprietors on how to cater for the Welsh-language needs of residents.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the subjects on which he is not prepared to answer parliamentary questions.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is not possible to provide a definite and exhaustive list of questions which I might exceptionally decline to answer on grounds other than cost and commercial confidence. Each question will continue to be considered on its merits.

Welsh Water plc

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether it was with his authority that Welsh Water plc joined with Saur UK Ltd. to form a joint subsidiary company to undertake a variety of commercial activities.

Mr. Grist: We welcome Welsh Water's proposals to diversify its activities including its joint venture with SAUR about which we have been kept fully informed.

Rural Housing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) those county, district and community councils which have submitted comments on the letter dated 30 June entitled, land for low cost housing in rural areas in Wales draft planning guidance and (b) the authorities which were sent a copy of this letter.

Mr. Grist: The information is shown as follows:

(a) Clwyd County Council
Colwyn Borough Council
Delyn Borough Council
Glyndwr District Council
Rhuddlan Borough Council
Wrexham Maelor Borough Council
Dyfed County Council
Carmarthen District Council
Ceredigion District Council
Dinefwr Borough Council
Preseli Pembrokeshire District Council
South Pembrokeshire District Council
Gwent County Council
Monmouth Borough Council
Gwynedd County Council
Aberconwy Borough Council
Arfon Borough Council
Dwyfor District Council
Ynys Môn—Isle of Anglesey Borough Council
Ogwr Borough Council
Powys County Council
Brecknock Borough Council
Montgomeryshire District Council
South Glamorgan County Council
Cardiff City Council
Vale of Glamorgan Borough Council
West Glamorgan County Council
Neath Borough Council
Port Talbot Borough Council

The Brecon Beacons, Pembrokeshire Coast and Snowdonia National Park Committees also commented on the draft guidance.

No Community Council has submitted comments.

(b) All District and County Councils in Wales together with the three Welsh National Park Committees. The Welsh Counties Committee, the Council of Welsh Districts and the Welsh Association of Town and Community Councils were also consulted on the draft guidance.

Mr. W. D. Harries

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department will pay the agricultural capital grant of £904·55 under the agriculture and horticultural development scheme in respect of sheep fencing for holding number 55/443/16 Mr. W. D. Harries, Crafty farm, Hayscastle cross, Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire, which was submitted in May.

Mr. Peter Walker: Mr. W. D. Harries has already been informed that his claim has been approved for payment. He should receive his payment order by mid-November.

SOCIAL SECURITY

EC Charter of Rights

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to implement paragraph 29 of the European Community charter of fundamental social rights.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The charter has not been agreed by member states. Discussion of its implementation is therefore premature at this stage.

Computer Centre (Livingston)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guarantees his Department has gained from the company EDS, awarded the contract to run the computer centre at Livingston, that a continuous service will be maintained.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Contractual arrangements are in place to ensure effective performance by EDS. Failure to meet the agreed levels of service will result in financial penalties.

Chief Adjudication Officer Guidance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will place a copy of any guidance issued by the chief adjudication officer as a result of Commissioner's decision R(SB)6/89 in the Library.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The guidance issued by the chief adjudication officer as a result of Commissioner's decision R(SB)6/89 is contained in AOG Memo Vol. 3/22 which has been placed in the Library.

Personal Pensions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for men and women aged 16, 20, 30 and 40 years in April 1988, the ages at which it would pay the person concerned to cease contributing to a personal pension or other money purchase scheme, assuming rates of return of 0·5 per cent. and 2·5 per cent. above the annual increase in average earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is not possible to give such a table because of the wide range of other factors, in addition to the rate of return, which would affect the amount of the personal pension.

Ms. Marsha Basaj

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will investigate the circumstances surrounding the visit to Ms. Marsha Basaj by two regionally based fraud investigators responsible to the Central Office for Scotland CN (Fraud) branch.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have called for a report on this case and will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Social Fund

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the Government have spent on social fund loans and community grants; how many people have been refused help by the social fund from its inception to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Information relating to 1988-89 is contained in the Secretary of State's annual report to Parliament.

Information for the current year is available from the national summary statistics which are placed in the Library monthly. The latest month for which information is available is September 1989.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he is proposing to take about the administration of the social fund following the report by the Social Fund Commission for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Social Fund Commissioner's first annual report, which was published in July, discharged her responsibility to report annually on the standard of reviews by social fund inspectors. I was pleased to note that 90 per cent. of the decisions monitored "met fully or exceeded the required standard" and that of the remainder very few "were found to be fundamentally flawed". I agree fully with the Commissioner's conclusion that the results of her monitoring will encourage public confidence in the review system.

The Commissioner also made a number of recommendations to the Department. These are all issues on which the Department's views have been made known to the Commissioner, or on which the Department has already taken action. I understand that the Commissioner's next annual report will refer to this year's recommendations and the Department's response to them.

TRANSPORT

British Rail (Expenditure)

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the following totals at constant prices: (a) capital expenditure out of the public service obligation grant to British Rail and (b) other capital expenditure by British Rail authorised by his Department for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The public service obligation grant meets the difference between costs and revenues for grant-supported services. Eligible costs include depreciation, a supplement to fund capital renewals, and interest. Grant therefore provides support for capital investment, but grant is not allocated to particular categories of expenditure.

Figures for total BR investment are given in the table:

£ million 1989-90 prices

	Total BR investment
1979	518
1980	529
1981	433
1982	352
1983	347
1984	368
1985-86	491
1986-87	475
1987-88	594
1988-89	600

Note:—1984-85 was a 15 month financial period. The 1984 figure is the 12 month internally reported result. Figures exclude the laying of continuous welded track which BR no longer classify as investment.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Atkins: Ministerial colleagues and I aim to deal with all correspondence in three weeks.

Manually kept records show that of approximately 15,000 letters received from hon. Members since January 1989, 378 are currently outstanding. These have raised complex questions or problems which inevitably take longer to research.

Road Improvement Contracts

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Hexham on 10 January, Official Report, column 617, if he will list (a) those trunk road improvement contracts that have been awarded since the start of the financial year 1989-90, together with the name of the successful tenderer and the value of the contract, (b) those contracts on which tenders have been invited but contracts have not yet been awarded and (c) those contracts on which tenders have not yet been invited but are expected to be let by the end of the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Atkins: The following contracts have been awarded since 1 April 1989:

Scheme and Successful Tenderer	Contract Price £ million
M1 J34 Meadowhall Development[1]—Birse Construction	1·2
M3 Compton-Bassett Widening—John Mowlem	41·5
M20 Maidstone-Ashford (Contract 2)—Wimpey Construction	28·7
M40 Waterstock-Wendlebury Section—Fairclough/Alfred McAlpine	63·9
A23 Waddon Marsh Bridge—Balfour Beatty	2·7
A27 Brighton Bypass (Dyke Road/Patcham)—Alfred McAlpine	16·7
A41 Chester Improvement—Fairclough	17·5
A41 Bicester Bypass State 1—John Mowlem	4·7
A42 Castle Donnington North (Contract 1)—A F Budge (Construction)	24·7
A65 Addingham Bypass—Cumbrian Industrials	3·1
A69 Brampton Bypass—Cumbrian Industrials	4·9
A127 Rayleigh Weir GSJ—Christiani and Nielsen	11·8
A282 Dartford Third Crossing Approach Roads—Balfour Beatty	27·7
A303 Ilchester to South Petherton—Wimpey Construction	12·8
A406 Chingford Road to Hale Road—Cementation Construction	60·3
A604 M1-A1 Link:
Contract 6 (Kettering-Thrapston)—A. F. Budge (Construction)	25·7
Contract 7 (Thrapston-Brampton phase 1)—Tarmac Construction	14·2

[1] Grant aided scheme.

Tenders have been invited for the following schemes and the contracts should be awarded before the end of the financial year:

A6	Quorn and Mountsorrel Bypass
A16	Boston Algakirk Diversion
A16	Louth Bypass
A23	Warninglid to Brighton (Sayers Common to Muddlewood)
A43	Castle Donzington North (Contract 2)
A47	Castor and Ailsworth Bypass
A47	Eye Bypass
A418	Leighton Linslade Bypass[1]
A523	Macclesfield Inner Relief Road
A604	M1-A1 Link:
	Contract 1 (Catthorpe Interchange)
	Contract 4 (Rothwell to Kettering)
	Contract 5 (Kettering Southern Bypass)
A650	Drighlington Bypass
A1079	Market Weighton Bypass

[1] Grant aided scheme

Subject to completion of statutory procedures further tenders for other schemes may be invited before the end of the financial year.

Cars (Anti-theft Systems)

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has assessed whether the development of electronic anti-theft systems for cars has reached the point in cost and effectiveness at which he will consider legislation to make their installation mandatory.

Mr. Atkins: Every new car sold in Britain since 1978 has had to have a steering lock. Britain has developed, in co-operation with manufacturers, new standards to improve car locks and to shield window mechanisms. We are pressing for these to be adopted in the EC.

Many cars are also fitted with alarm systems. The variations in their design and location contribute to their effectiveness. The greater standardisation likely to result from obligatory installation might diminish that effectiveness. Moreover, there is a growing volume of complaints about the environmental effects of alarms set off with no apparent attempt at theft.

Parking sensibly, locking up carefully and avoiding leaving valuables in view are all strong deterrents to thieves.

Lorry Weights

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspectors are employed at ports to ensure that lorry weights from incoming vessels are within United Kingdom requirements; and how many prosecutions were undertaken in 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989 to the most recent practicable date.

Mr. Atkins: The Department currently has a force of 235 traffic examiners who carry out lorry weight checks at inland sites as well as at major ferry ports. Vehicles found to be overweight in ports are prohibited from further movement but are not normally prosecuted because an offence has not taken place until the vehicle has been on a public road. Separate figures for prohibitions in ports are not kept. The number of prosecutions nationally for overloading, with in brackets figures for prohibitions, in each of the years 1986-88 were, respectively, 6,400 (5,700), 5,500 (4,250) and 7,600 (7,700). The figures for the first half of 1989-90 were 3,250 and 2,900. These figures do not include offences taken by the police and local authority trading standards staff.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many of the short-span bridges on non-trunk roads will not meet 40-tonne lorry weights; what will be the cost of repairing or replacing such bridges; and what is the estimated cost of the traffic delays arising from such work;

(2) whether his Department has carried out an assessment of the likely extra strengthening costs in the event of the EEC directive on 40-tonne lorries being applied in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It was agreed at a meeting of the European Council of Transport Ministers in July that the United Kingdom's derogation from the directive permitting the use of lorries weighing 40 tonnes should end on 31 December 1998.

In 1988 my Department began a programme—expected to last 10 years—to assess all the bridges on trunk roads and to strengthen them, where necessary, to cater for heavier lorries. The increase from 38 tonnes to 40 tonnes will require about another 400 bridges to be assessed, but it is expected to account for only a relatively small proportion of the total cost of strengthening work.

Last December, the Government made provision through the rate support grant settlement for an additional £27 million expenditure by local authorities in England in 1989-90 so that a start could be made on the long-term programmes of work necessary on their roads. It is too soon to say what proportion of their bridges will eventually need to be strengthened, but a sample survey carried out by my Department in 1987 suggested that it might be about 20 per cent.

In some cases, strengthening may not be the only option. It will be more appropriate to restrict some bridges to vehicles of a lower weight; in other cases, it would be possible to cater for heavier lorries by reducing the number of lanes of traffic.

It is inevitable that there will be traffic delays while some of the work is carried out, but it is not possible to predict where these will occur or their economic cost. My Department's regional offices will assist in co-ordination of the work to help keep delays to a minimum.

Articulated Lorries

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what research has been undertaken on the use of 16·5 m articulated lorries in the United Kingdom; what alterations will be required to existing tractor units, what design requirements will be needed for compatible tractor units for the 13·6 m trailer; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to lay the order allowing 16·5 m articulated lorries in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(3) why he is advancing by 12 months the implementation of the EEC directive permitting 16·5 m articulated lorries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Once the EC date was imposed on us, there was a serious risk of detriment to the interests of British manufacturers. We therefore advanced implementation to January 1990 from January 1991.

The order will be laid as soon as possible, subject to the completion of the necessary detailed consultation. No specific research was carried out on the proposals leading to the EC directive. The new 13·6 m semi-trailer will require the use of a tractor unit slightly longer than the shortest units now in use: some already exist. The shortest tractor units can still be used with semi-trailers slightly shorter than 13·6 m.

Commercial Vehicles

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the total numbers of commercial vehicles in each category of unladen weight registered for 1989; what were the totals for each year from 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Information on vehicle stock for 1989 is not yet available. Details of the number of commercial vehicles registered in Great Britain are available by gross weight and were published in "Heavy Goods Vehicles in Great Britain 1988", transport statistics report, August 1989, a copy of which was placed in the House of Commons Library.

The number of heavy goods vehicles has fallen from 506,000 in 1979 to 462,000 in 1988 despite a 25 per cent. increase in road freight activity.

Channel Tunnel (Rail Services)

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been reported to him in the provision of rail services between the Channel tunnel and London; and whether it remains the Government's policy not to subsidise this project.

Mr. Parkinson: British Rail is planning to spend over £1 billion on upgrading the rail network in Kent and London, on developing Waterloo station and on rolling stock, so that a full international passenger and freight service can commence on the day that the Channel tunnel opens.

In July of last year British Rail began consultations on the proposal to build a new line which would be needed by the end of the century. On the basis of consultation on four route options, British Rail narrowed the choice to a preferred route in March of this year. British Rail also isued an invitation to the private sector to participate in a joint venture. Five positive responses to this invitation were received, and BR subsequently shortlisted two consortia.

Today British Rail has announced that it has selected its preferred partner in a joint venture for Channel tunnel rail services, and that is Eurorail, comprising Trafalgar House and BICC. I very much welcome this announcement.

The broad scope of the joint venture has been settled. It includes the operation of international rail services, not just the construction of the link. The details are still to be negotiated and my approval to the final agreement will be necessary. At this stage, however, I am greatly encouraged by the clear indications that I have had from the private sector that Channel tunnel rail services, including a new Channel tunnel rail link, can be financed commercially and that the new link can still be brought into operation in 1998.

I have been greatly impressed by the confidence, expertise and commitment shown by both the shortlisted consortia, Eurorail and the Acer Group. Eurorail is satisfied that detailed work carried out on the route through Kent confirms that the route proposed by BR is the best solution. It is confident that an acceptable way can be found of continuing the route from the outskirts of London to Waterloo and to a second terminal at Kings Cross with its excellent connections to the north.

This confirmation of the route through Kent, on which so much work has already been done to minimise the environmental consequences, will help to end uncertainty in the county. I welcome that as I welcome the decision to bring forward immediately legislative proposals to allow Ashford international passenger station to be relocated so as to open in 1993, but to fit in with the new line. It is for British Rail and its partner to determine the best route and terminals to be included in a parliamentary Bill, and I accept that now that BR and Eurorail have reached agreement it will not be practicable or sensible for them to examine other possible alternative proposals and projects. It will be for Parliament to decide whether the route can be accepted.

I think that it must be primarily for BR and Eurorail to judge how and when to seek the necessary legislative approval for their proposals. I accept BR's judgment that it is wiser to wait until all the details of the route through London have been finalised before introducing a Private Bill and that will also give the opportunity for further refinement of the detailed measures proposed for Kent. I welcome their stated intention to introduce a Bill in 1990.

The provision of the Channel tunnel link is now the responsibility of BR and its chosen partner, Eurorail. I confirm that it remains the policy of the Government that no subsidy will be given to Channel tunnel rail services.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many gainers and losers his Department now estimates there will be after the introduction of the poll tax in England.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 1 November 1989, at column 75.

Lindane

Mr. Graham Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been and will be the environmental consequences to the United Kingdom of the recent loss of a container of lindane in the Channel.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No signs of lindane pollution have been detected from the continuing joint Anglo-French monitoring programme, set up immediately after the incident.

British and French scientists are confident that any increases in lindane concentrations in the marine environment could be easily detected at levels well below those at which they would represent a risk to human health. They further agree, after having carefully considered the probable rate of dissolution of the lindane in its container and its likely rate of release to the sea, that the chances of the lindane having any significant detectable effect are very slight.

As a precaution joint monitoring continues and if any leakage is detected this would provide important clues as to the whereabouts of the container and so assist recovery action, should this be necessary.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider giving additional incentives to councils to encourage the introduction of further schemes for the recycling of domestic waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Our proposals to improve waste management on which we hope to legislate shortly should encourage local authorities to promote recycling. In addition we are carefully considering what further measures might be taken to encourage recycling both at the collection and disposal stages, and are evaluating examples of current best practice and the major experiment in recycling—"Recycling City"—which is now taking place in Sheffield, with the support of the Government.

Litter

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce legislation to allow local authorities to appoint designated officers for the purpose of taking the name and address of any alleged litter offender for subsequent prosecution.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that our proposals for legislation to tackle the problem of litter, published on 20 July, include a provision which will allow all district and borough councils to operate a fixed penalty scheme for littering. Under such a scheme an authorised officer of the authority will be empowered to issue tickets to litterers requiring payment of a fixed penalty within a set period. Failure to pay the fixed penalty will render the offender liable to prosecution. We are not, however, proposing to give the authorised officer extra powers to demand the name and address of the offender.

Housing Finance (Leicester)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the financial years 1981 to 1988 inclusive the following information: (a) the housing investment allocation paid to Leicester city council for each of the years and (b) the housing investment allocation in real terms for each of those years.

Mr. Chope: The following figures give Leicester city council's housing investment programme allocations and also its outturn expenditure for the years requested, in both actual and real terms.

	£ million Allocation		£ million Outturn
Year	Actual	Real terms	Actual	Real terms
1981-82	17·036	24·628	19·464	28·137
1982-83	18·496	24·971	21·063	28·436
1983-84	17·373	22·416	22·488	29·016
1984-85	18·900	23·238	30·604	37·628
1985-86	15·000	17·482	28·395	33·093
1986-87	13·285	15·002	26·013	29·375
1987-88	14·277	15·319	23·983	25·733
1988-89	13·716	13·716	32·393	32·393

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the subjects on which he is not prepared to answer parliamentary questions.

Mr. Patten: I would normally expect to answer questions within my area of responsibility other than those involving disproportionate cost.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's Government intend to ratify the Basel convention on the control of transboundary movement of hazardous wastes and their disposal.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Yes, together with our European Community partners.

Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to proceed with the restructuring of the Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission as outlined by the previous Secretary of State for the Environment on 11 July.

Mr. Trippier: Yes.

Green Belt (Derbyshire)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an assurance that he will uphold the terms of the north-east Derbyshire green belt local plan (paragraph 5.20, proposal 6) and reject any application lodged on appeal by British Coal to begin opencast mining in the green belt and around Barlborough.

Mr. Moynihan: No. I cannot give such an assurance. This would clearly prejudice the position of the Secretary of State were an application to come before him on appeal. Minerals can be worked only where they occur, but extraction, including opencast coal, need not be incompatible with green belt objectives provided high environmental standards are maintained and sites are restored to a good standard. As Derbyshire's green belt local plan makes clear, mineral working is a temporary operation which can be acceptable in green belt areas and is not incompatible with the eventual restoration of the area to an open use.

Water Authorities (Foreign Investment)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the extent of foreign investment in British water authorities.

Mr. Howard: The successor companies to the nine water authorities in England are wholly owned by the Crown.

Works of Art Committee

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will appoint a new member to the advisory committee on works of art in the House of Commons following the resignation from the committee of the hon. Member for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Callaghan).

Mr. Patten: I am pleased to announce that, with Mr. Speaker's agreement, I have appointed the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) to the advisory committee.

Water Privatisation

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made with preparations for the forthcoming water share offers.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have today placed in the Library the "Pathfinder" prospectus for the 10 water share offers which has been published today. It gives details of the forthcoming offers, apart from the price, share capital and related information. The share price will be announced on 22 November.

Benzene (Toxicity)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the toxic and carcinogenic properties of unleaded petrol; and what assessment he has made of the effects of using benzene in such petrol.

Mr. Roger Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

We are not aware of any information to suggest that there are toxic or carcinogenic properties specific to unleaded petrol.

Benzene is toxic at high doses and is classified by the International Agency for Research on Cancer as a human carcinogen on the basis of data from workers who were exposed to high levels in the past. The concentration of benzene permitted in petrol is regulated under a European directive and it is not used as an additive to substitute for lead.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Scotch Whisky (Korea)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to persuade the Korean Government to equalise the levels of duty on Scotch whisky and other spirits.

Mr. Redwood: It has been our objective for some time to remove the discriminatory features of Korea's tax and tariff treatment of Scotch whisky and other imported spirits, as well as other restrictions on the import and distribution of these products. There has been some liberalisation which has benefited Scotch whisky but discriminatory treatment continues to hold back sales in Korea. We have made strong representations to the Korean Government and will continue to take every opportunity to do so, both bilaterally and through the European Community.

Scotch Whisky (Taiwan)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to overcome the import restrictions faced by Scotch whisky exports to Taiwan.

Mr. Redwood: The authorities in Taiwan are well aware of United Kingdom concerns. Her Majesty's Government have no dealings with the Taiwanese authorities but United Kingdom concerns on this and other matters are put across very clearly in Taipei and London by the Anglo-Taiwan trade committee, a private organisation set up to promote British exports to Taiwan.

Selling by Telephone

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which recommendations of the Office of Fair Trading set out in the document "Selling by telephone," in 1983 he has accepted; which of these have been implemented; and what are his reasons for not implementing the remainder.

Mr. Forth: Two of the recommendations in the 1984 report by the Office of Fair Trading on selling by telephone were addressed to Government.

The first related to automatic dialling equipment. Such equipment which transmits recorded messages or synthesised speech may only be used with the consent in writing of the intended recipient. Other such equipment which transmits speech or data has only been approved by the Director General of Telecommunications for connection to the public network where there are legitimate reasons for its use.

The Government have accepted the more recent advice of the Director General of Telecommunications that the new branch systems general licence, which will soon be granted under the Telecommunications Act 1984, should contain a condition requiring anyone making telephone sales calls not to do so in respect of any user who requests them to stop.

On the second recommendation, the Government are not convinced that there have been sufficient problems to require the introduction of a statutory cooling-off period for oral contracts resulting from unsolicited telephone calls.

Northern Region

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list all offers of regional selective assistance in the Darlington area for each year since 1982; and whether he will provide the same information for (a) Stockton-on-Tees and (b) Middlesbrough.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The offers of regional selective assistance in the Darlington, Stockton and Middlesbrough areas in each year since 1 April 1982 are as follows:

Notes:

[1] In accordance with normal practice, information has been restricted to that published in the quarterly tables in "British Business".

[2] The figures relate to the Parliamentary Constituency areas of
- (a) Darlington
- (b) Stockton North
- (c) Stockton South

and to the local authority area of
- (d) Middlesbrough, excluding that part of the Stockton South Parliamentary Constituency within the borough boundary.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs have been created or safeguarded by regional aid in the Northern region since 1984.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of jobs expected to be created or safeguarded in the Northern region[1] through offers of regional develpment grant (RDG) and regional selective assistance (RSA) since 1984 is:

Regional Development Grants

Financial Year	Jobs
1984-85	[2]846
1985-86	11,340
1986-87	18,389
1987-88	21,156
1988-89	25,013
Total	76,744

Regional Selective Assistance

Financial Year	Jobs
1983-84	14,133
1984-85	13,579
1985-86	5,984
1986-87	9,600
1987-88	6,123
1988-89	4,487
1989-90[3]	3,708
Total	57,614

[1] The northern region is the north east region plus Cumbria.

[2] Offers were made under the revised RGD scheme from 29 November 1984. Following the closure of the scheme on 31 March 1988, all outstanding offers were made in the period ending 31 March 1989. Prior to November 1984, RDG's were not linked to the creation or preservation of jobs, so no estimate is available of the effect on employment of payments under that scheme.

[3] Period to 30 October 1989.

Notes:

1. Some RSA and RGD offers will relate to the same jobs but it is not practicable accurately to identify these.
2. The figures for both schemes are based on offers made.
3. Regional enterprise grants have also been available for firms employing less than 25 people in development areas since April 1988. Job creation or safeguarding is not, however, a condition of the scheme.
4. Other Government Departments have no job-linked regional aid schemes.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the subjects on which he is not prepared to answer parliamentary questions.

Mr. Ridley: It is not possible to provide a definite and exhaustive list of questions which I might exceptionally decline to answer on grounds other than cost and commercial confidence. Each question will continue to be considered on its merits.

Ticket Touts

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy to introduce a system of licensing for ticket touts.

Mr. Forth: No.

Crown Immunity

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to remove Crown immunity from those establishments run by his Department subject to consumer protection and environmental health laws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my hon. Friend gave to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 20 October 1989 at column 279.

Export Seminar

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the cost to small firms wishing to attend the seminar organised by his Department on exporting to Belgium and Germany on 21 November.

Mr. Redwood: The exporting to Belgium seminar on 21 November costs £35 per delegate, including lunch.

European Trade Committee

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what trade union representation exists on the European trade committee.

Mr. Redwood: There is no trade union representation on the European trade committee. Members are selected on the basis of their wide experience of exporting and their knowledge of western Europe.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide information covering each of the last five years showing the number of employees whose earnings fell below (a) the national insurance contributions lower earnings limit; and (b) the PAYE threshold; and if he will estimate what proportion of these employees are (i) women, (ii) female part-timers and (iii) part-timers.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information from the new earnings survey is not sufficiently precise to make reliable estimates separately distinguishing the numbers with earnings below these two thresholds. However, the numbers are broadly estimated to be in the following ranges:

April	Millions
1984	2½—3
1985	2¾—3¼
1986	2¾—3¼
1987	3—3½
1988	3—3½

It is estimated that women account for 75 per cent. of these employees, that female part-timers account for 70 per cent. and that all part-timers account for 90 per cent.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when results from the Restart cohort survey will be available; if a copy of any preliminary findings and subsequently the full results will be published or placed in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The final results from the Restart cohort study are likely to be available in the middle of 1991. A decision on publication will be taken in due course.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is collected on the ET2 form which is completed for each employment training trainee by training managers; and if he will give as much information as he has for each region and for Great Britain as a whole showing how many employment training trainees have achieved vocational qualifications; how many have received any form of training bonus; and how much.

Mr. Nicholls: The information which is collected from the ET2 trainee record form is detailed in the following table. Information from the forms on qualifications obtained and numbers receiving training bonuses is still being analysed and its reliability assessed. No information is available about the amount of training bonus paid to trainees.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why there has been a delay in assessing employment training training managers for ATO status; what effect this has had on the original timetable; how many employment training training managers passed stage one; how many have been told to make improvements; how many have failed; and if he will make a statement about the future timetable for carrying out the full assessment of ATO status in employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: Area office staff began the assessment of employment training training managers for ATO status immediately the programme began and they have continued that process.

It was originally hoped the process would be completed within 18 months of the beginning of the programme. It was recognised that training of managers, many of whom were new to training of this type, needed sufficient time to provide the evidence of the high standards of training required to satisfy the stringent criteria leading to the award of approved status. For this reason, the timetable allowed for the approval process is now set at two years from the date of commencement of operation.

At 31 October 1989, 338 training managers had passed stage 1. The monitoring activities for approved status provide for Training Agency staff to work in partnership with all training managers to offer advice about the developments necessary to achieve full status.

No training managers have failed.

The timetable for approved status is set as described.

Women Managers

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the steps being taken by Her Majesty's Government to encourage the employment of women in management jobs.

Mr. Nicholls: Employers are bound by the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to afford equal opportunities at all occupational levels to women and men. The careers service, the employment service and the Training Agency take every opportunity to bring openings in management and other senior appointments to the attention of appropriate women and to advise them of the necessary qualifications and available training.

I and colleagues frequently remind employers of the need to use women's talents to the full, particularly at managerial level, and to emphasise that women must be treated equally with men. We are also supporting initiatives which help to promote women's enterprise. It is encouraging that the number of women managers is rising and that the Institute of Employment Research predicts that by 1995 two fifths of managers and entrepreneurs will be women.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex-Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex-Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. Eggar: My Department plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the detail requested.

Computers (Public Safety)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure all aspects of decision-making at all levels involving public safety will not be compromised by the commercial secrecy of any computer codes which may be involved in such decision-making.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive is working with Government Departments to develop guidelines and standards for the use of computer software in safety-related applications. Under section 20 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, inspectors have powers to make any necessary examination or investigation.

Industrial Accident Regulations

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will extend the scope of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard (CIMAH) Regulations to cover nuclear installations.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Such an extension is neither appropriate nor necessary. The operation of nuclear installations is already closely controlled by the conditions attached to nuclear site licences granted by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965.

The HSE is currently developing regulations which will apply to nuclear installations requirements similar to those of the CIMAH regulations on the preparation of off-site emergency plans by local authorities and the provision of information to the public.

New Businesses

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses registered for value added tax in Derbyshire in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: In 1988, the estimated number of new registrations for value added tax in Derbyshire was 3,110. The net increase in the number of VAT-registered businesses in Derbyshire in 1988 was 740, or 3·3 per cent. bringing the total number of VAT- registered businesses in Derbyshire to 22,770.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Derbyshire were benefiting from the enterprise allowance scheme in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Eggar: In the financial year April 1988 to March 1989 a total of 1,555 people joined the enterprise allowance scheme in Derbyshire.

Construction Industry (Injuries)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many occupational injuries per 1,000 workers were reported in the construction industry (a) in total, (b) for employees, (c) for the self-employed and (d) others for each year from 1979 to 1988-89.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 2 November 1989]: The available information is given in the table. Figures for the periods 1979-80, 1981 to 1985 and 1986 onwards are not comparable owing to changes in reporting arrangements. Figures for 1988-89 are provisional.

[1] Rates based on injuries reported to Health and Safety Executive's Factory and Agricultural Inspectorates and all other relevant enforcing authorities, under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1980 (NADOR) for 1981 to 1985 and the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR) for later years. Rates for the years 1979-80 are based on reports made under various legislation to the Health and Safety Executive's Inspectorate only.

[3] The major injury category was first introduced by NADOR. The definition of a major injury was widened with the introduction of RIDDOR on 1 April 1986.

[4] Includes injuries causing incapacity for work for more than three days. For the years 1979-80 and from 1986-87 over three day injury data is based on employers' reports to enforcing authorities. For 1981-82 the over three day injury data is based on industrial injury benefit claims.

[5] Year beginning 1 April.

[6] Provisional.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Trade Deficit

Mr. Orme: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the balance of trade deficit.

Mr. Major: The deficit on visible trade in the third quarter of 1989 was £6·8 billion. In that quarter exports, in both value and volume terms, were at an all-time high. Excluding oil and erratics, export volumes were 8½ per cent. higher than in the third quarter of 1988. Imports in the third quarter of 1989 were also at an all-time high, but import growth has slowed down significantly since last year. As domestic demand slows further, import growth should also continue to decline.

Crown Estates (Revenue)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the revenue raised by the Crown Estate for the last five years by sea area for (a) dredging licences and (b) mooring rights.

Mr. Major: Statistics on dredging activity are collated by main dredging area. The revenues raised by the Crown Estate from licences to dredge aggregate for the last five calendar years were:

	£ million
	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
East Coast	0·9	1·1	1·3	1·5	1·9
Thames Estuary	0·4	0·4	0·4	0·4	0·5
South Coast	0·5	0·6	0·6	0·7	0·9
Solent and Spithead	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1
Bristol channel	0·3	0·3	0·4	0·5	0·5
Liverpool Bay and River Mersey	0·05	0·05	0·06	0·07	0·07

Statistics for the revenue from mooring rights for the last five years are not readily available on the same basis. However, revenue for the 1988-89 financial year by main area of activity was:

	£ (thousands)
East Coast of England	10·2
South Coast of England	96·8
West Coast of England (with Wales and Northern Ireland)	8·3
Scottish Waters	46·8

Child Care

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules he applies to parents receiving vouchers or allowances in lieu of child care facilities not provided by employers; and what concessions he makes to those employers who do.

Mr. Lilley: Under the normal business tax rules, employers qualify for tax relief on day-to-day expenditure on all forms of child care provision for their employees' children, including cash allowances and vouchers. Tax relief is also available for certain capital expenditure on child care facilities. Cash allowances or vouchers given by employers to employees in lieu of child care facilities are taxable under the normal income tax rules.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider a change in the law in relation to the taxation of workplace nurseries and child care subsidies.

Mr. Lilley: Proposals to change the tax law in relation to workplace nurseries and child care subsidies were considered and rejected by the House during the passage of this year's Finance Bill. My right hon. Friend has no plans to reopen this matter.

Emergency Communications

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the liaison arrangements between the Central Office of Information and United States civilian or military authorities on the proposed content of emergency radio and television broadcasts in the United Kingdom during a pre-war crisis.

Mr. Ryder: No liaison arrangements have been made between the Central Office of Information and United States civilian or military authorities on the proposed content of emergency radio and television broadcasts in the United Kingdom during a pre-war crisis.

Benjamin Report

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will arrange for a copy of the report by Professor Bernard Benjamin, "Accessibility and other problems relating to statistics used by social scientists", to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 31 October at cols. 153-54. I understand that the report is available on request from the Economic and Social Research Council.

Pensions

Mr. Neil Thorne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider removing the attributable forces family pension from taxation.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 27 October 1989]: I have no plans to do so.

War Widows

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his Department's definition of a war widow for the purpose of taxation.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 27 October 1989]: There is no definition of war widow in tax legislation. Section 318 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 defines the pensions and allowances, generally regarded as war widows' pensions, which are not treated as income for tax purposes.

Rugby Players (Tax)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 25 October to the hon. Member for Wakefield, if he will specify the information that is available about income tax paid by rugby union players in respect of relevant earnings.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 30 October 1989]: For the reason given in my reply of 25 October to the hon. Member at column 451, no such information is available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

County Courts

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to make county courts more accessible for disabled people, especially in terms of physical accessibility, provision for the hard of hearing, clarity of signposting.

The Attorney-General: New and adapted or reconditioned court buildings provide, to the maximum possible extent, all the facilities required for the disabled, including lifts and ramps as necessary. Other buildings have had improvements incorporated where this has been feasible. New court rooms are designed to high acoustic standards which benefit the hard of hearing. Internal signs are made as clear as possible. Court staff are always available to assist disabled court users.

Court Fees

Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney-General how much money was raised by county court fees, respectively, in the years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89; how much money was spent on county court services, other than on judicial salaries in each of these years; how much money was raised in High Court fees in each of these years; and how much money was spent on High Court services other than on judicial salaries in each of these years.

The Attorney-General: The income raised by fees in the county court and the Supreme Court (High Court and Court of Appeal) respectively for the last three years, and the total cost of the civil courts, exclusive of judicial costs, are shown in the table. It is not possible to give a precise breakdown of costs between the Supreme Court and county courts. Civil business is treated as a single entity and many of the components of the overall figure, for example administrative overheads, are not broken down in this way. However, an estimate based on 1988-89 figures suggests that 75 per cent. of the cost is attributable to county court and district registry services, and 25 per cent. to other Supreme Court services.

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
County Court fees	91·5	96·4	97·4
Supreme Court fees	43·2	47·0	52·5
Total fees	134·7	143·4	149·9
Non judicial cost of civil courts	121·1	133·5	143·9
Excess of fees over cost	13·6	9·9	6·0

County Courts (Civil Justice Review)

Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney-General what additional staff accommodation, judges and registrars will be made available to the county court in order to implement the recommendations of the civil justice review.

The Attorney-General: Implementation of the civil justice review recommendations are to be phased over a period of five years. Resources for the first stages of the programme are currently the subject of public expenditure survey negotiations.

Legal Aid

Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney-General what was the percentage increase (a) in legal aid fees and (b) in total costs per legal aid certificate in each year since 1979.

The Attorney-General: (a) No rates are prescribed for non-matrimonial civil cases. From 1 October 1988 a system of prescribed rates and fees was introduced for legally aided matrimonial work, which were increased by 6 per cent. with effect from 1 April 1989. Rates for non-matrimonial legal aid work remain in the discretion of individual court taxing officers.

For criminal cases prior to 1982 there were no prescribed rates for remuneration. With effect from 1 October 1982 rates were prescribed by regulations. Those rates have been increased by the following percentages:

	Solicitors per cent.	Counsel per cent.
1983-84	5	5
1984-85	4·5	4·5
1985-86	4	4
1986-87	[1]5	5
	[2]6·5	5
1987-88	6	5
1988-89	5·4	5·2

[1] with effect from 1 April 1986

[2] with effect from 1 October 1986

(b) For civil cases the percentage increase in total costs per legal aid certificate in each year since 1979 was:

	per cent.
1979-80	18·44
1980-81	14·91
1981-82	26·25
1982-83	17·89
1983-84	14·18
1984-85	10·36
1985-86	10·16
1986-87	10·22
1987-88	8·99
1988-89	16·22

For criminal proceedings in magistrates courts the percentage increase in total costs per legal certificate in each year since 1979 was:

	Per cent.
1979-80	19·08
1980-81	23·50
1981-82	5·98
1982-83	6·93
1983-84	7·73
1984-85	8·85
1985-86	7·46
1986-87	11·54
1987-88	14·95
1988-89	10·06

For criminal proceedings in the higher courts information is available only from 1985. The percentage increase in total costs per legal aid order for solicitors from that year was:

	Per cent.
1985-86	9·79
1986-87	13·53
1987-88	11·32
1988-89	4·40

No information is available on counsel's fees by reference to legal aid orders for the higher courts.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Naturalisation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for naturalisation were made to the immigration and nationality department in (a) 1987, (b) 1988 and (c) the current year to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of applications for naturalisation received in caseworking groups was as follows:

	Number
1987	22,696
1988	24,632
1989	46,515

Because of delays in the initial processing of applications, the figures for the years in question may include applications received in a previous year.

Citizenship

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of applications received for registration for citizenship by 31 December 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of applications for registration for citizenship received in caseworking groups during 1987 was 57,322. In addition, there were a substantial number of applications for registration received in the Home Office which were received in groups after 1987. A figure for this is not currently available.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy not to grant any licence under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to Perrycroft Lodge kennels in Malvern.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications for licences and certificates under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are considered individually on their merits but it is not our practice to comment on particular applications.

Game Licences

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to review the system of game licences in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to review the system of game licences.

Deportations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been deported from the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years (a) for being illegal immigrants and (b) for other reasons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on persons removed from the United Kingdom between 1987 and 1988 under the enforcement powers in the Immigration Act 1971, either as illegal entrants or under the deportation process, is published in tables 23 and 24 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1988" (Cm. 726), a copy of which is in the Library.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will advise chief constables to make available police pathology lab photographs of the bodies of dead drug addicts to schools and parents in order to show the effects more realistically.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans to give such advice. Many schools have already introduced a programme of drugs education and all schools will be required to do so under the national curriculum.

HM Prison, Shrewsbury

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the causes for delay in selling houses owned by his Department in Shrewsbury to prison officers based at Her Majesty's prison, Shrewsbury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Since the introduction of the discount sale scheme of quarters to prison officers in June 1987, over 4,500 applications have been received in England and Wales. Approximately 3,400—75 per cent.—sales have so far been completed, with a further 500 accepted offers currently with solicitors.

Inevitably there have been some delays in dealing with difficult cases and at Shrewsbury there have been particular problems with four properties in The Dana opposite the prison. A detailed survey was needed to determine the areas of land to be sold with each property and the question of rights of way and inclusion of associated lock-up garages had also to be considered. The deeds, dating back to 1598, were rather obscure and had to be investigated by the Treasury Solicitor to establish proper title.

The delay in these cases is regretted but the Treasury Solicitor is in possession of all necessary deeds and documents, together with detailed plans for conveyance purposes, and is reaching completions as quickly as possible.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board between the receiving of a claim and bringing the matter to settlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 17 October 1989 at column 16 .

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the efficiency and staffing of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: To deal with the steep rise in the number of applications the board's complement has been increased from 220 in 1987 to 320 now and a new office has been opened in Glasgow. We are in close touch with the chairman of the board about ways of improving efficiency at the board and tackling the problems of delay and backlog caused by the increased workload.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will instigate a report to discover the sociological and psychological backgrounds on child abusers;

(2) if he will instigate a research project to discover how widespread the problem of child abuse is within the community; and what are the effects upon the individual child, the family unit concerned, and the sentencing and removal of the abuser.

Mr. John Patten: A table listing recent, current and planned research into child abuse funded by all Government Departments was placed in the Library in May this year. This covers the period 1989-90 and includes projects on the perpetrators, prevalence and effects of child abuse to be undertaken mainly by health departments. The Home Office is undertaking research into prevention and evidential matters. We are also preparing for publication a statistical study of criminal proceedings for offences against children, taking in sentencing. It is too early to say what projects Departments will be including in 1990-91 research programmes.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a national prevention programme against child abuse.

Mr. John Patten: The Government are supporting a number of preventive measures. An important factor in preventing child abuse is to ensure that children are taught how to keep themselves safe, and to this end a set of guidelines for parents, drawn up by the organisation KIDSCAPE, has been incorporated in the Home Office crime prevention handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime". Three million copies of the handbook have been distributed.

The Department of Health provides a financial contribution towards the administrative expenses of a number of national voluntary organisations which campaign for the prevention of child abuse, for example the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and Childline. The Department of Health also funded the production of a training package by the Open university which was launched earlier this year and which aims to provide people who have had little or no knowledge of the subject of child abuse, as well as professionals and voluntary workers, with greater awareness and recognition skills.

Broadwater Farm (Police Raid)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many police officers and other personnel were used in the raid on Broadwater Farm by the police on Friday 29 September; if any armed police officers were used; how many press, radio and television journalists accompanied the police, and representing which newspapers, radio and television stations; how many observers accompanied the police and from where; what briefing was given to the observers and the press by the police; and where and for how long the observers and the press were kept incommunicado.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 229 police officers were involved in the operation but none of them was armed. Eight media organisations accompanied the police. There were four personnel (one reporter, three crew) from Independent Television News, three (one reporter, two crew) from BBC News, two (one reporter, one photographer) from the Press Association, and one journalist from each of The Mail on Sunday, BBC Radio News, the News of the World, the Tottenham and Hornsey Journal and Independent Radio News. Four observers accompanied the police, of which three were members of the Haringey police liaison committee and the fourth was the director of criminal justice studies at Reading university. All the observers and the media representatives were present throughout the entire main briefing given to the police officers at the police training centre at Hendon. They were incommunicado from the time they joined police early on the morning of 29 September until about 5 pm that afternoon when the operation commenced.

Attempted Suicides

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attempted suicides have been recorded in prison establishments in England and Wales during 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: We have received reports of 463 apparent suicide attempts made by inmates in prison service custody so far during 1989.

Suicides

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides in England and Wales have occurred during 1989 (a) at prison establishments and (b) in remand establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: At the end of October 1989 verdicts of suicide had been returned on 20 inmates who died in prison establishments in England and Wales during 1989. Of these inmates eight were on remand. Inquests have yet to be held on 13 other inmates, of whom 10 were on remand, who have died in prison department custody during this period and whose deaths are thought to have been suicides.

Prisoners

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the sentence and remand prison population for England and Wales for the latest date available, and for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The latest available information is that in September 1989, 10,536 remand, 222 non-criminal and 37,851 sentenced prisoners were held in prison service establishments. A further 30, most of whom were on remand, were held in police cells. Average populations in each of the last 11 years were published in table 1.5 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1988" (Cm 825), a copy of which is in the Library.

Acid House Parties

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many arrests for drug-related offences have been made to date at events described as acid house parties;

(2) what information he has on which drugs and in what quantities have been seized by police at events described as acid house parties.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Drugs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in each of the last 10 years have been fined for drug-related offences.

Mr. John Patten: The information is published in table 1.1 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 30/89, "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs: Seizures and Offenders Dealt With, United Kingdom, 1988", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were convicted for unlawful possession of (a) cannabis, (b) cocaine, (c) LSD, (d) heroin, and (e) crack for each year from 1979.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of persons found guilty, cautioned or dealt with by compounding for unlawful possession of cannabis, cocaine, LSD and heroin for each year since 1979 is published in tables S2.29, S2.17, S2.23 and S2.21 respectively of "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs: Seizures and Offenders Dealt With, United Kingdom, 1988—Supplementary tables", a copy of which is in the Library. Corresponding tables S2.28, S2.16, S2.22 and S2.20 give the number of persons found guilty in 1988. Crack offences are included in those for cocaine.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of registered addicts in the United Kingdom for each year from 1979.

Mr. Waddington: There is no system of registration of addicts. Information on the numbers of addicts notified to the chief medical officer at the Home Office in the years 1979 to 1988 was published in Statistical Bulletin issue 13/89 "Statistics of drug addicts notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom, 1988", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the current street price of crack.

Mr. Waddington: Information from the national drugs intelligence unit suggests that the street price of crack is in the region of £20 to £25 for a piece of about 0·2gs.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the levels of addiction of hard drugs in (a) West Germany, (b) France, (c) Netherlands, (d) Switzerland, (e) Spain, (f Italy, (g) Belgium, and (h) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: Information about the numbers of drug addicts notified to the Home Office in 1988 was published in Home Office statistical bulletin issue 13/89, "Statistics of Drug Addicts Notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom, 1988," a copy of which is in the Library. In addition, the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, in its report "Aids and Drug Misuse part 1," estimated that there might have been between 75,000 and 150,000 misusers of notified drugs in the United Kingdom during 1986, together with as many again (excluding cannabis users) who are using a variety of non-notifiable drugs (such as amphetamines) on an experimental or occasional basis. Comparable information about addiction levels in other European countries is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the numbers of young people aged 16 or under, arrested or cautioned for possession of drugs.

Mr. Waddington: The number of persons aged 16 or under dealt with in the United Kingdom in 1988 for unlawful possession of drugs was 831. This includes persons dealt with at court and cautioned, and cases where other action (such as informal warnings and no further action) was taken. There is likely to be under-recording of persons in the last group.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the use of the drug ectasy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: MDMA, known as "ecstasy", has been a controlled drug since 1977. Seizures of MDMA have increased in recent years but still remain small compared to those of drugs such as heroin, cocaine, amphetamines and cannabis. Informaton from the forensic science service indicates that some 90 MDMA seizures were analysed in 1988.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average sentence given for (a) unlawful possession and (b) possession with intent to supply drugs.

Mr. Waddington: The information is published in table S2.6 of "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs: Seizures and Offenders Dealt With, United Kingdom, 1988—Supplementary tables", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the weight of the seizures of (a) cannabis, (b) cocaine, (c) LSD, (d) heroin and (e) crack for each year from 1979.

Mr. Waddington: The information is published in tables 2.4 and 2.5 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 30/89, "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs: Seizures and Offenders Dealt With, United Kingdom, 1988", a copy of which is in the Library. Crack seizures are included in cocaine seizures.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prison suicides is among those inmates serving sentences for drug-related offences.

Mr. Waddington: The table gives the figures for inmates held in prison establishments in England and Wales in each of the last five years.

	Total suicides[1]	Suicides by sentenced inmates[1]	Suicides by inmates serving sentences for drug related offences[1]
1984	23	11	1
1985	23	9	—
1986	17	5	—
1987	42	14	2
1988	30	11	2
1989	[2]20	[2]12	[2]1

[1] The table gives the number of deaths for which suicide verdicts were returned at the inquest.

[2] Inquests have yet to be held on 13 other inmates who have died in 1989 and whose deaths are thought to have been suicides. Of these two were serving sentences for drug related offences.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the gaol population of the United Kingdom is in detention for (a) drug and (b) cannabis-related offences.

Mr. Waddington: The latest readily available information was published in table 1*(b)* of "Prison statistics England and Wales 1988" (Cm 825), a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek powers for the police to be able to apply for a court order to allow them access to information about a suspected drug dealer's tax affairs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Courts already have powers under sections 27 and 30 of the Drug Trafficking Offences

Act 1986 to make an order authorising the police to gain access to information about the tax affairs of any person who is suspected of involvement in drug trafficking.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is able to estimate per year (a) the approximate levels of consumption in the United Kingdom of cannabis, cocaine, LSD, heroin and crack and (b) the total value of each of these drugs.

Mr. Waddington: No. But information on seizures of these drugs is published annually by the Home Office.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is able to estimate the number of police officers in the United Kingdom who are solely engaged in combating crime from drug-related offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We estimate that by the end of 1988 a total of 1,323 police officers were solely engaged in the investigation of drug-related offences at force and regional level in England and Wales. Twenty posts from the 1989-90 manpower programme have been allocated to regional crime squad drugs wings.

In addition, very many police officers at force and crime squad level will contribute to the prevention and investigation of drug-related offences in the course of their duties.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is able to give an estimation of the cost per year of prosecuting and convicting individuals accused of drug-related offences.

Mr. Waddington: No. But information on persons dealt with for drug offences is published annually by the Home Office.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is considering the greater use of confiscation orders for drug trafficking convictions.

Mr. John Patten: The Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 already provides that, when a person is convicted of a drug trafficking offence, the court must determine whether he has ever benefited from drug trafficking and, if he has, impose a confiscation order to deprive him of his proceeds.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will undertake a review of the penalties for drug-related offences.

Mr. John Patten: No. The courts have adequate powers to deal with drug-related offences. For the production, supply or possession with intent to supply a class A drug the maximum penalty is life imprisonment; for class B drugs, it is 14 years and five years for class C drugs. Sentencing is a matter for the courts and the Court of Appeal has given guidance on sentencing drug offences.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department collects regular information on the street prices of drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No. But the national drugs intelligence unit collates information on the approximate street prices provided by police forces for intelligence purposes.

Crack

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the first seizure of crack was made in the United Kingdom; and how much has been seized to date.

Mr. Waddington: The first seizure of crack recorded by the national drugs intelligence unit was in 1986, although it is possible that earlier seizures were made but reported as of cocaine. The total numbers of seizures of crack recorded so far are as follows:

	Number
1986	5
1987	12
1988	27
1989[1]	75

[1] January to September.

Kurdish People

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kurdish asylum seekers have been detained, and for what period, since 1 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1989]: The information is not available in the form requested. Of approximately 3,900 Turkish nationals who have claimed asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom since 1 January some 300 have been detained at some time, for periods ranging from one day to five months. On 26 October, four Turkish asylum seekers, one of whom arrived in May and three in June, remained in detention, their applications for asylum having been considered and refused. On the same date two other Turkish nationals who were being treated as illegal entrants and were detained had applied for asylum. One had been in prison—following a criminal conviction, the other was detained in September 1989.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kurdish people from Turkey have arrived at Heathrow airport and then returned to Turkey without seeking entry to Britain since 1 January.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1989]: Information on passengers subject to control who seek leave to enter is maintained by nationality not ethnic or religious origin. There are no records of passengers who do not seek leave to enter, for example because they are in direct transit. Up to 26 October a total of 232 Turkish asylum seekers had departed voluntarily without awaiting the outcome of their applications.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date Siho Iyiguven arrived in Britain; for what periods he was detained; how many representations were received on his behalf; who took the decision to remove him; whether his Department will pay for the return of his body to Turkey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1989]: Mr. Siho Iyiguven arrived in Britain on 2 May 1989. He was detained on 22 August for one night and on 4 October until the fire on 5 October which led to his death. Representations were received on his behalf on five occasions. The decision that he did not qualify for asylum in this country was taken in the refugee section of the immigration and nationality department and removal directions were issued by the immigration service. The inquest into Mr. Iyiguven's death has been adjourned and I understand that his next of kin have yet to decide what arrangements to make for his remains.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of Kurdish asylum seekers from Turkey who have arrived in Britain since 1 January; and how many have (a) made voluntary departures, (b) been given exceptional leave to remain, (c) been granted asylum and (d) been removed to Turkey.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1989]: Immigration statistics do not record ethnic origins of asylum seekers. From 1 January until 25 October some 3,900 Turkish nationals had applied for asylum on arrival (a) 232 had made voluntary departures, (b) 270 had been given exceptional leave to enter, (c) 75 had been granted asylum and (d) 38 had been removed to Turkey.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations from human rights and church organisations he has received concerning the treatment of Kurdish asylum seekers since 1 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1989]: Representations have been received from various individuals and organisations about general and specific issues concerned with Turkish asylum seekers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Polish Economic Delegations

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if visits by Polish economic delegations which include seminars at the Adam Smith Institute are being subsidised by his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. But we have funded a seminar on privatisation in Warsaw organised by the Adam Smith Institute. Polish economists, whose visits here are financed by us, sometimes have talks with the institute.

Cambodia

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy towards the continuing membership at the United Nations of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 25 October at column 491.

Political Groups (EC)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will tabulate in the Official Report the amounts paid, in 1988 pound sterling equivalents, to each of the political groups of the European Parliament together with an indication of any allocated expenditure within the totals and the total expected expenditure in 1990.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his reply, 24 October 1989, c. 402]: The amounts paid in 1988 to the political groups of the European Parliament were:

	ECU	£(at 1·5057 ecu = £1)
Contribution to administrative/ secretarial operating expenses of the political groups and non-attached members	6,851,970	4,550,687
European Information Campaign (information activities on the role and work of the European Parliament, its political groups and their members)	27,700,000	18,396,758
Purchase of data-processing equipment	800,000	531,314
Hire and maintenance of equipment	330,000	219,167
Other activities	3,496,100	2,321,910

No breakdown of the payments to each political group is available.

ENERGY

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what percentage of letters from hon. Members to his Department received a reply (a) in under four weeks, (b) within four to six weeks, (c) within six to eight weeks and (d) over eight weeks, in each of the last three years;

(2) what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Wakeham: The Department's general objective is to answer letters from hon. Members within three weeks of receipt. At present the Department has no letters awaiting a reply which have been outstanding for longer than that period. The specific information requested by the hon. Member can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Risley Programmes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of the Chardis, Thor and Supersomite programes at Risley.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the UKAEA and I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Reactors (Privatisation)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the privatisation of advanced gas-cooled reactors and the pressurised water reactors under construction.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House on 24 July by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Energy at columns 744-45.

Electricity Industry

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the competitive structure of the United Kingdom electricity industry and other member nations of the EEC.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The electricity industries of EC member states show a variety of structures. Some are dominated by a single state monopoly; in others, dominant generators play a significant role in transmission; regional monopolies in supply are also common. In England and Wales, the Government are putting in place a competitive structure. Use of the distribution and transmission system will be open to all on published and regulated terms. There will be competition between generators from day one. And the market in supply to customers will be progressively opened up to competition. There will be no permanent monopolies in supply or generation.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies he has carried out regarding the effect of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry on British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since it has responsibility for the coal industry, my Department naturally monitors closely and continuously the implications for British Coal of electricity privatisation.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on European Community investigations into the nuclear provisions in the electricity privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government have kept the EC Commission fully informed of their proposals relating to the privatisation of the electricity industry. The dialogue is continuing. We are confident that the arrangements for the new industry will be consistent with the United Kingdom's Community obligations.

Wylfa B Power Station

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will cancel plans for the public inquiry into the proposed Wylfa B pressurised water reactor station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has received formal objections to the CEGB's application for his consent to construct a PWR nuclear power station at Wylfa from both the Isle of Anglesey borough council and the Gwynedd county council. He is therefore obliged to arrange a public inquiry pursuant to section 34(1) of the Electricity Act 1957.

Hinkley Point C Power Station

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will cancel plans to build the Hinkley Point C pressurised water reactor station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB's application for my right hon. Friend's consent to construct a PWR nuclear power station at Hinkley Point C is currently the subject of a public inquiry.

My right hon. Friend will wish to consider the inspector's report before deciding whether or not to grant his consent to the CEGB's application.

The construction of new nuclear power stations in England and Wales is a matter for the CEGB.

Coal Productivity (North-East)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will give the latest figures for productivity for the north-east coal field; and if he will give those for 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Productivity in the north-east coalfield rose from 2·23 tonnes per man shift in 1985-86 to 3·82 tonnes in 1988-89.

Nato Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the detail required.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the annual load factor achieved by United Kingdom nuclear power plants.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The average load factor of the Central Electricity Generating Board's nuclear power stations for the first six months of the current financial year was 60·6 per cent. The equivalent load factor for the South of Scotland Electricity Board's nuclear power stations was 62·8 per cent.

Fast Breeder Reactors

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of the fast breeder reactor programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House on 21 July last year by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Energy at column 1288.

Magnox Plants

34. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he now expects to be able to announce the estimated decommissioning costs for the Magnox nuclear power plants.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Members for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) and for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 24 October at column 381.

DEFENCE

Armed Services (Privatisation)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to evaluate the benefits to the efficiency of national defence of privatisation of the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

B2

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any request from the United States administration to base the B2 stealth nuclear bomber in the United Kingdom, under the updated 1948 Anglo-American military air bases agreement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Collisions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report all instances of Royal Navy surface or submarine vessels in collision, or otherwise in contact, with commercial vessels in the Irish sea since May 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In the case of surface vessels, this information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and effort. Incidents in which Royal Navy submarines have been in collision with surface vessels or their gear since 1 January 1980, in or around the Irish sea, are as follows:

Date
17 November 1981	FV Sapphire	Clyde Area
18 April 1982	FV Sharelga	Irish Sea
10 March 1983	FV Targuen	Irish Sea
11 August 1984	FV Huntress	Clyde Area
6 December 1987	FV Prevail	North Channel
2 July 1988	Yacht Dalriada	North Channel
16 July 1988	Yacht Drum	North Channel
27 October 1988	FV Brilliant Star	Sound of Bute
28 June 1989	FV Huntress	Clyde Area
12 September 1989	FV Contester	Irish Sea

Contester (Incident)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the incident in the Irish sea off Skerries, county Dublin, involving the trawler Contester and a Royal Navy vessel; and what communications have been received by Her Majesty's ambassador in Dublin over this incident.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At 1830 hours on 12 September 1989, some 25 miles north-east of Dublin, a communications buoy being towed by a Royal Navy submarine became caught in the nets of the Irish fishing vessel Contester; the buoy wire parted shortly afterwards. The submarine came to periscope depth, made a very careful visual examination of Contester, which had been monitored on sonar throughout, and listened on radio circuits to ensure that all was well. Once it had been established that neither Contester nor any of the other fishing vessels in sight were in any difficulty, the submarine proceeded on her way.

The British embassy in Dublin has been in contact with the relevant authorities in the Irish Republic and has also received letters from interested organisations and individuals in connection with this incident.

Australian Service Men (Compensation)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Australian Government have sought any financial compensation from the United Kingdom to offset payments they agreed to make, on 4 September, to Australian service men contaminated by radioactive fallout from United Kingdom nuclear weapons tested in Australia in the 1950s.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have not received any such request from the Australian Federal Government, nor would we expect to do so.

Hydrographer's Department (Sales)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will authorise the Hydrographer's department to reproduce old charts, pilots and fleet review anchor plans for sale to the general public.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The hydrographic office already makes photocopies of old charts and documents available to researchers and other individual inquirers for specific purposes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence informed the House on 18 October at column 155 that the hydrographic office is planned to become a defence support agency from 1 April 1990. I hope that, as such an agency, the office would more easily pursue commercially viable opportunities for wider sales of reproductions of the historic collections in its archives.

Nuclear Tests (Safety)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek advice from the Health and Safety Executive under section 11(5)(b) of the Health and Safety at Work, Etc. Act 1974 as to the health of the United Kingdom participants in the British nuclear weapons test programme 1952-67.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: With regard to the health of United Kingdom participants in the British nuclear weapons test programme, we are completely satisfied with the independent and expert advice already being provided by the national Radiological Protection Board, which is engaged in an ongoing study and is free to consult whichever experts it sees fit. It is not for the Government to dictate the conduct or methodology of that study. Furthermore, the Health and Safety at Work Act did not come into force until 1974 and therefore the Health and Safety Executive had no direct involvement in the trials. It would, therefore, seem inappropriate to consult them and the NRPB has not advised us to do so.

Open Skies

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the open skies aerial surveillance and reconnaissance proposals for co-operation between NATO and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the May 1989 NATO summit declaration made clear, we consider President Bush's call for an open skies regime to be an important intitiative. It is currently the subject of study and consultations.

Uniter

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Uniter RAF telecom system; what was the original cost and target completion date; what are his current estimates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Uniter will provide the RAF with a new secure voice and data communications system to support the effective operation of a number of new equipments and systems coming into service in the next few years. Uniter stage 1, involving 12 improved United Kindom air defence ground environment stations, was commissioned and handed over to the RAF in December 1988. Stage 2, involving a further 48 sites, will come into service in the early 1990s.

The equipment delivery programme for stage 2 is proceeding according to schedule. Some equipment costs have, however, increased; and greater than foreseen difficulties with the substantial works programme, combined with high cost escalation in recent years in the civil construction industry, have led to cost and timescale overruns for the programme as a whole. I am considering proposals to strengthen the management arrangements for the remainder of the programme in order to minimise the likelihood of further delays or cost increases.

Red Arrows

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what factors are taken into consideration when deciding the annual programme of appearances at air displays for the Red Arrows; and if he will make a statement regarding next year's programme;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the annual programme for the Red Arrows display team; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: To date, the Ministry of Defence has received nearly 200 requests for public appearances by the Red Arrows in 1990.

At the end of each year, a Ministry of Defence committee considers all the requests received for appearances by the Red Arrows, and other RAF display teams and aircraft, at public events the following year. The main aims of RAF participation in such events are to create good public relations and to attract recruits into the service. With these aims in mind, the committee considers factors such as likely crowd size, expected media coverage, geographical location, whether repeat performances are being sought, and financial and practical considerations.

The committee plans to meet in December 1989 to decide the programme for the Red Arrows, and the other RAF display teams and aircraft, for 1990.

Weapons (Dismantlement)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investment in terms of finance and personnel his Department has made in arms control and disarmament verification in the sectors of (a) nuclear weapons dismantlement, (b) nuclear warhead dismantlement, (c) conventional weapons dismantlement and (d) chemical and biological weapons detection and dismantlement, in each year since 1979; and what has been for each year the proportion of the annual defence budget devoted to verification issues.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 2 November 1989]: Demands on the defence budget connected with arms control verification have been met from existing resources and are not accounted for separately. The information requested could therefore be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had any discussions or plans any future discussions with the defence Minister of any country not party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty on the joint developments with the United Kingdom of stand-off air-launched nuclear weapons systems.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As I have made clear on several occasions, discussions are taking place with both the United States and French Governments on procurement options for the possible replacement of WE177 free-fall bomb.

Army Presentation Team

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Army presentation team started to give presentations on the British Army to invited audiences throughout the United Kingdom; and if he will state the dates and occasions of presentations by the Army presentation team on the British Army to invited audiences in the last 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Army presentation team was established to explain the vital role of the Army, both regular and reserve, in the defence of the United Kingdom. The first presentation was given in Tunbridge Wells on 4 September 1989, since when further presentations have been given as follows:

	Date
Canterbury	5 September
Guildford	6 September
Portsmouth	11 September
Bletchley	13 September
Shrivenham	14 September
Stirling	26 September
Glasgow	27 September
Galashiels	28 September
Harrow	9 October
Walthamstow	11 October
Marble Arch	17 October
Twickenham	18 October
Lewisham	19 October
Stoke-on-Trent	31 October
Shrewsbury	1 November
Wolverhampton	2 November

Presentations are open to all, and are publicised via the local media.

Ambulances

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's ambulances are (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) overseas; and if he will estimate the normal requirements of the service in peacetime.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The armed forces have approximately 1,000 ambulances of various types in service in the United Kingdom and approximately 700 overseas. The services also maintain stocks of vehicles for use in the event of war, however details of such holdings are classified.

The military requirement for ambulances in peacetime centres on the need to provide day-to-day emergency medical cover at service establishments and also the need to ensure that appropriate numbers of vehicles are available for training and exercises. The current size of the military ambulance fleet reflects this.

Cambodia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance Her Majesty's Government are giving towards the military training of each of the factions contending for power in Cambodia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) on 30 October 1989 at column 43.

SCOTLAND

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Alan Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the subjects on which he is not prepared to answer parliamentary questions.

Mr. Rifkind: No. I answer all questions which appear to be proper to my responsibilities.

Land Renewal

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the total amount of expenditure on land renewal by the Scottish Development Agency in each of the years 1979-80 to 1988-89 inclusive and (b) the estimated expenditure on land renewal in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, at current and constant prices.

Mr. Lang: This information is set out in the table and includes the agency's expenditure on urban renewal and environmental improvement generally. The Government's expenditure plans for the years beyond 1989-90 will be expenditure White Paper early in the New Year.

£ millions

Year	Cash	1988-89 prices
1979-80	24·9	46·8
1980-81	31·6	50·1
1981-82	24·0	34·7
1982-83	30·7	41·4
1983-84	30·3	39·0
1984-85	36·4	44·7
1985-86	41·2	48·0
1986-87	44·1	49·7
1987-88	44·9	48·2
1988-89	46·5	46·5
[1]1989-90	47·7	[2]44·6

[2] Estimated.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the total number of land renewal schemes started by the Scottish Development Agency in each of the years 1979-80 to 1988-89 inclusive and (b) the estimated number of schemes to be started in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the following table. Wide variations in the agency's level of support for individual schemes makes it impossible to give realistic forecasts of the number of schemes which will receive assistance this year or in 1990-91. From 1991-92 onwards, this will of course be a matter for Scottish Enterprise.

	Number of schemes started
1979-80	210
1980-81	70
1981-82	116
1982-83	448
1983-84	264
1984-85	173
1985-86	242
1986-87	287
1987-88	336
1988-89	364

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total expenditure from the land renewal budget of the Scottish Development Agency on the Glasgow garden festival in each of the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table. The table also shows expenditure on the festival in 1988-89.

Year	Cash	1988-89
1985-86	2·9	3·4

1988-89	3·6	3·6

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy as to whether the Countryside Commission for Scotland will be permitted to fund the erection of a structure which substantially altered the value of a right of way without a variation order being obtained.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 November 1989]: The Countryside Commission for Scotland operates in conformity with the powers and duties contained in the Countryside (Scotland) Act 1967. Under the Act, it is the duty of local planning authorities and not of the Commission to assert and protect public rights of way. Questions about the application and interpretation of this duty are matters for the courts to decide.

HEALTH

Hospital Facilities (Closures)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contingency provisions he has made or is contemplating to avoid bed closures and other temporary closures of hospital facilities during Christmas and winter of the current year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for health authorities to decide how health services should be provided to meet local needs and priorities within the resources allocated by the Government.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new district general hospitals have been built or approved in principle in the last 10 years; what was their size in area and in bed provision; and what is the population of the health districts they serve.

Mr. Freeman: District general hospitals are normally developed on a phased basis, each phase or scheme being the subject of a separate approval in principle submission and construction contract. Information held centrally is not therefore in the form requested and could not be provided without incurring disproportionate expense. I have, however, placed in the Library of the House a list of 482 schemes costing over £1 million completed or approved in principle since 1 January 1980, giving the number of beds in each case. (There is some undercounting because (a) before 1986 information was only collected on schemes over £2 million and (b) central records for 1980-82 are incomplete). Information on the population of health districts is set out in OPCS Monitor PP1/89/1. However hospitals often treat patients from outside their own district boundaries.

Elderly Patients

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of acute hospital in-patients are over the age of 70 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the year ending March 1988, the latest year for which information is available centrally, 24 per cent. of acute patients treated were aged 65 years and over and 12 per cent. were 75 years and over.

Maternity Units

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his Department's guidelines as to the number of births per annum in a district hospital maternity unit for it to be recognised as a training establishment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is not a matter for the Department. The design and accreditation of training for these professional staff is the responsibility of the relevant statutory and professional bodies: the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists.

Shropshire Health Authority

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what increase in patient through put he expected to result from the opening of Telford district hospital at the time he decided to approve plans by the Shropshire health authority to close hospitals in the county and reduce the number of beds available within Shrewsbury.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Shropshire district health authority's consultation document "The future of health services in Shropshire" (January 1988) indicated that the number of in-patients treated across the district would increase in 1990 by about 2,000 a year.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the special programmes for social workers that include training in handling specific cases of child abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government introduced this year the training support programme (child care), which makes available to local authorities grants of 70 per cent. in support of expenditure of £10 million on training for social services staff working in the child care field. Within the programme authorities were asked to give particular emphasis to training for staff handling child abuse and child sexual abuse. The programme will continue in the next financial year.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the definition of child abuse used by his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department's guidance "Working Together" (1988), copies of which are available in the Library, describes child abuse as harm to children by parents, relatives, carers, acquaintances or strangers. Paragraph 5.31 of the guidance details definitions of neglect, physical abuse, emotional and sexual abuse. It states that these categories are not necessarily exhaustive nor mutually exclusive; and that all are encompassed within the term "child abuse".

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what facilities are available for child abusers under the age of 12 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Child abusers under the age of 12 years are eligible for the full range of assessment, treatment and support services provided by local authority social services departments and health authorities. These may include for example placement in residential or foster care, including secure accommodation where appropriate, or provision of psychological and psychiatric services.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in South Yorkshire are currently on the child abuse register.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Child protection registers record those children who are the subject of an inter-agency plan for the protection of the child. The most recent published information about children and young persons on child protection registers is contained in "Survey of Children and Young Persons on Child Protection Registers Year Ended 31 March 1988". Copies are available in the Library.

NHS Accommodation

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of nurses and other hospital staff living in National Health Service accommodation in the west midlands.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The West Midlands regional health authority estimates that 3,852 nurses and 2,762 other staff were living in NHS accommodation on 23 October 1989.

HIV-positive People

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to issue an update of the Cox estimate of the number of HIV-positive individuals in England and Wales as at the end of 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The estimates of the Cox report are being considered by a group of experts. It is expected that the revised changes will be published early next year.

Waltham Forest Health Authority

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy not to merge Waltham Forest district health authority with any other district health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans for a merger involving Waltham Forest district health authority.

Health Authorities (Capital Charges)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish updated estimates of the capital charges for health authorities under his White Paper proposals.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities are making good progress in compiling asset registers in preparation for capital charging. Estimates of capital charges will be available when these have been completed and valued.

Community Care

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those district health authorities which are most advanced in the provision of care for the mentally ill in the community.

Mr. Freeman: Many district health authorities are responsible for examples of good practice in relation to health care for people with a mental illness being treated in the community and I referred to some in the written answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 13 July at columns 620-25. We do not have within the Department the information necessary to compile a definitive list of such districts.

BMA

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of the British Medical Association; and what subject was discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I met Dr. John Marks, the chairman of the British Medical Association, with some of his colleagues on 18 October when we discussed details of the implementation of the proposals in the White Paper, "Working For Patients". It was a friendly and useful meeting.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has recently made to, or received from, the British Medical Association.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Ministers met the British Medical Association on 18 October to discuss the implementation of our proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients". We have also received a number of letters from the BMA about the details of our proposals.

Treatment (Boundaries)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to enable patients to cross district health authority boundaries for treatment in authority areas other than their own, where their own authority cannot provide the treatment concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: GPs are free to refer patients to the consultant of their choice, and consultants are free to refuse or accept such referrals. Sometimes referrals are not accepted when they involve patients from outside the health authority boundary for whom the authority is not remunerated.

Proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" will make it easier for patients to get treatment outside their home district if they choose to do so. Districts will ignore administrative boundaries in ensuring that a comprehensive range of high quality services is available to their population. Money will follow the patient so that all hospitals will have an incentive to offer their services widely. The most popular hospitals that attract patients by the quality of their care will be rewarded. The effect will be to give patients greater choice and better access to the highest standards of service.

Hampstead Health Authority

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the spending per head of the population served by Hampstead district health authority in the year 1987-88; and what is the figure per head on the most nearly comparable basis for (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Freeman: Figures for spending per head of resident population for 1987-88 are shown in the table:

Revenue expenditure per head of resident population
Hospital and community health services[1]

	£
Hampstead District Health Authority	592
England—average for all district health authorities	227
United Kingdom	238

[1] Includes hospital, community health, patient transport (ie. ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.

Sources:

(a) 1987-88 annual accounts of district health authorities in England and those of the analogous health authorities, boards and agencies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland—as submitted to the central health department in each country.

(b) Mid-year estimates of populations—1987 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes to the table

1. Capital expenditure on hospital and community health services is excluded. Expenditure on family practitioner services (which cannot be strictly attributed to particular districts) and expenditure on personal social services (which in Northern Ireland is accounted for by Health and Social Services Boards) is also excluded.
2. Significant variations in figures for spending per head of population at district level arise principally because:
    - (a) people travel across district boundaries for treatment and resource allocations reflect the pattern of service provision locally;
    - (b) the population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one district who receive treatment in another or for differences in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to commission a study of possible adverse health effects of abandoned and leaking toxic waste dumps.

Mr. Freeman: The Department, with others concerned, would commission a study if there were reasonable grounds to consider that there might be adverse health effects associated with a localised source of pollution.

The Department, with others, has established a small health statistics unit at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine. This independent unit is developing new techniques specifically to undertake studies of this sort.

Officials will be discussing with officials at the Department of the Environment whether there are any particular sites used for the disposal of toxic chemicals where environmental contamination may be occurring in circumstances which would make a health study appropriate.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment gave to him on 26 October at columns 552-53.

NHS Supplies

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to ensure that in no circumstance the National Health Service should pay more for supplies than the private sector, and that it should pay less when there is a large and regular order.

Mr. Freeman: Existing policy is to seek maximum value for money and commercial awareness in all NHS tendering and contracting practices and procedures.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South on 26 October whether the main suppliers who have offered to supply commercial hearing aid equipment to the National Health Service at reduced prices are now charging the National Health Service the same prices as those charged to private hearing aid dispensers; what is meant by the term main suppliers; and which suppliers are still charging the National Health Service more than they charge the private sector;

(2) pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South on 26 October, if he will request those suppliers of hearing aids who have overcharged the National Health Service either to pay immediate compensation or to lower their prices for a fixed period to such an extent as to fully compensate the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Mersey RHA has completed negotiations on behalf of the NHS with the relatively small group of suppliers who provide commercial hearing aid products to the NHS for special requirement which fall outside that of the established NHS hearing aid range. The NHS accounts for only a small market share of such products in this country.

We welcome the fact that all the suppliers concerned have agreed to supply the NHS at the same wholesale prices as supplied to private hearing aid dispensers. Contract terms and conditions are being established with each supplier by Mersey RHA and the new prices will be effective nationally from 1 December 1989. Suppliers have previously provided hearing aids on the basis of contracts freely entered into by individual health authorities. In these circumstances where there is no evidence of any breach of contract it would not be appropriate to claim compensation.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South on 26 October, if the National Health Service procurement directorate routinely compares prices charged to the National Health Service with those charged to the private sector; when was the last occasion that a major supplier was found to be charging the National Health Service more than the private sector; and what action was taken.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Action is continuously taken by NHS purchasing officers to secure more competitive prices by reference to market or other conditions. It would not be practicable for the procurement directorate to monitor every price charged to the 3,000 points of delivery that exist in the NHS, or to ensure that prices were always lower than those charged to every other purchaser. The NHS is by no means always a main or dominant purchaser, and prices may vary between health authorities according to delivery, service and volume requirements.

Methadone Substitution

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many addicts are on methadone substitution programmes.

Mr. Freeman: The figures published in the Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 13/89, a copy of which is in the Library, record that there were 12,339 drug addicts in the United Kingdom recorded as receiving methadone to treat their addiction as at 31 December 1988.

Vinegar

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the health implications of the consumption of vinegar.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are not aware of any adverse health implications from the normal usage of vinegar (acetic acid).

Drug Treatment Centres

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure by Her Majesty's Government on specialised drug treatment centres, for each year from 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Information relating to the expenditure by health authorities on specialised drug treatment centres is not held centrally.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he is able to estimate the cost per year to the National Health Service of patients suffering from the effects of illegal drugs.

Mr. Freeman: Because drug misuse has many different effects, which will be treated by a wide range of specific and general medical services, it is not possible to estimate the overall cost to the National Health Service.

However, since 1984 we have committed nearly £65 million of new money to preventing drug misuse and providing services.

Hormone Replacement Therapy

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to fund a research centre at King's College hospital, London to investigate the beneficial effects of hormone replacement therapy on menopausally related problems.

Mr. Freeman: This matter is still under consideration.

NHS Reform

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the units that have expressed interest in self-governing status intend to prepare applications to become National Health Service community trusts or National Health Service hospital trusts in April 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I will not be able to receive any formal applications until Parliament has given approval to the necessary legislation. Since it is for the sponsor of the proposal in individual units to decide whether and when to prepare an application, the picture is likely to change over time. Amongst those units interested in self-governing status, some are more advanced than others and are likely to be in a position to apply to become an NHS trust in the first wave in April 1991. Others will follow in due course. The preparation of applications is proceeding in many places and the local sponsors are drawing up plans for service development that concentrate on the benefits that establishing an NHS trust could bring to the unit and its patients. Neither I nor any local sponsors have entered into any final commitment at this stage in respect of any unit. Seventy-nine units currently intend to prepare draft applications for NHS Trust status in 1991. The units are listed in the table.

Pregnancy-related Disease

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women aged 14-16 years, 17-21 years, 22-24 years, 25-30 years, 31-35 years and 36-40 years died from pregnancy-related diseases in each year since 1959.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 28 July 1989]: The information is not available precisely in the form requested. Details have been extracted from the reports of the confidential inquiry into maternal deaths in England and Wales, which are produced triennially rather than annually. The breakdown of information among age groups is comprehensive but not exactly the same as the age groups requested.

Definitions used in the classification of maternal deaths altered in 1972. Before then they were sub-classified as "true" maternal deaths—resulting from complications of pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium; or "associated" maternal deaths—due to other causes when the deceased woman was know to be pregnant, or had been pregnant within one year.

From 1973 maternal deaths have been sub-classified as "direct"—resulting from obstetric complications of pregnancy, labour and childbirth; "indirect"—resulting from previous existing disease or a disease which developed during pregnancy and which was aggravated by pregnancy; or "fortuitous"—resulting from causes not related to or influenced by pregnancy.

The request for information about "deaths from pregnancy-related diseases" has been interpreted as a request for information on "associated maternal deaths" up to 1972 and to "indirect deaths" thereafter.

Single Mothers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage of single mothers aged 16 to 19 years, by county, in England and Wales.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of families consisting of a single mother with one or more children in each county are not known. However, the county percentages of all births outside marriage in 1988 which were to women aged 16-19 were as follows:

Area	per cent.
England and Wales	24·5

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Recycled Paper

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether his Department has taken any steps to consider the use of recycled paper for House of Commons publications; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Much of the material published for the House is of archival significance and must be printed on paper of suitable archival quality which is not currently obtainable in paper produced from recycled waste.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will allow fibre-producing or other animals to be added to existing set-aside scheme provision.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to my written answer to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 31 October 1989 at column 129.

Respiratory Disease

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has on the incidence of respiratory disease among the agricultural work force; and what steps he is taking to promote improvement in this situation.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Nineteen cases of occupational respiratory disease occurring in agricultural workers in England and Wales were reported to the Health and Safety Executive under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985, in the two years 1986-87 and 1987-88, the two years for which information is available. However, data collected under these regulations is regarded as an incomplete measure of the true incidence of occupational disease. The Executive's employment medical advisory service is about to begin a publicity campaign, lasting 12 months, on occupational lung disease with the objective of increasing the awareness of employers, employees and the medical community to this group of diseases. Also, the Executive is currently supporting a project on the surveillance of occupational lung disease from reports of consultant chest physicians and occupational physicians.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Curry: I met representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations on 25 October when we discussed the 1989 allocations of North sea haddock.

Farm Animal Welfare Council

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many veterinary surgeons are appointed to the Farm Animal Welfare Council; and how many meetings they have participated in during the last two years.

Mr. Curry: The three registered veterinary surgeons referred to in the reply are Professor Webster of Bristol university, Mr. Haxby, ex-president of the BVA and RCVS, and Mr. MacPherson, veterinary consultant and member of the RCVS council.

Meat and Meat Products

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state any current restriction placed by any member state of the European Economic Communities, or any Community authority, on the import into any Community member other than the United Kingdom of meat or meat products currently permitted for sale in the United Kingdom together with the related reasons, and showing what categories of slaughterhouses, or food processing plants, are unacceptable to any of the authorities concerned; and what action he is taking to make such exports possible.

Mr. Currry: West Germany has recently announced that it requires additional certification for beef from the United Kingdom and that it will not accept bovine slaughter by-products for human consumption. We consider these restrictions unjustified on public health grounds and are pursuing the matter with the authorities of the Federal Republic as a matter of urgency.

Slaughterhouse and processing plants in any member state which wish to engage in intra-community trade must be approved as meeting the requirements of directives 64/433 (red meat), 71/118 (poultrymeat) and 77/99 (meat products). Plants operating only under the national rules of member states are not permitted to export. We shall be discussing with the EC Commission and other member states the rules which are to apply to all meat plants on completion of the internal market.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions have been placed by Britain's trading partners on the importation of British meat and bone meal of ruminant derivation.

Mr. Curry: France, West Germany and Israel have set conditions for the import of British meat and bone meal. France requires that British meat and bone meal should not be fed to ruminants. West Germany seeks to require certification that the material is not derived from cattle confirmed or suspected of having BSE. Such cattle in the United Kingdom would in any case be compulsorily slaughtered and their carcases destroyed. Exports to Israel are restricted to meat and bone meal derived from poultry.

Swales Moor Mink Factory

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his inspectors last visited Swales Moor mink factory; what their findings were; and if he will place a copy of the inspector's report in the Library.

Mr. Curry: Officials of the Ministry's wildlife and storage biology discipline and the state veterinary service last visited Swales Moor farm on 26 September and 11 October respectively.

Reports on specific premises obtained during the course of statutory duties are not made public.

Fur Farming

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what minimum conditions have to be complied with by applicants for fur farming licences; and how many such licences are currently extant.

Mr. Curry: A total of 55 licences were issued for the farming of mink in England and eight in Scotland during 1988-89. There are no licensing controls for other species farmed for fur.

Mink farm owners must satisfy the security arrangements specified in the Mink (Keeping) Regulations 1975, as amended in 1982.

Food Irradiation

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has made for the vitamins value of irradiated foodstuffs to be checked; and when he expects to have the results of such tests.

Mr. Maclean: Extensive research by a number of expert bodies has established that food irradiation does not result in any greater loss of vitamins than other comparable food preservation processes. Nevertheless the Government intend, if Parliament approves the introduction of food irradiation, to require details of vitamin content before and after irradiation to be provided by those licensed to undertake the process. This information would be made available to the steering group on food surveillance (SGFS) who would keep under review the nutritional implications of the consumption of irradiated food. The SGFS regularly publishes the results of its work.

Live Animals (Export)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will now establish an independent and representative inquiry into the economics, welfare and transport implications of the export trade in live animals.

Mr. Curry: I have no plans for a specific inquiry but we will take the factors referred to fully into account in negotiating new EC controls on the welfare of animals during transport.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in each of the past five years his officials have accompanied shipments of live food animals to destinations in Europe; and with what results.

Mr. Curry: Monitoring the welfare of animals transported in other Community countries is essentially a matter for the authorities of those countries. Nevertheless in the last five years nine export journeys of food animals have been accompanied by representatives of our state veterinary service under arrangements agreed with the countries concerned.

Myopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has on the incidence of myopathy in deer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has no information on the incidence of myopathy in deer.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total expenditure on structural and support measures in the common agricultural policy in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what is the total British contribution to the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: Total expenditure in the European Community on structural and support measures under the common agricultural policy was 28·9 billion ECU (£19·6 billion) in 1988. This was about 65 per cent. of the total EC budget. The United Kingdom's net contribution to the EC budget in 1988 was £1·36 billion.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the release of lactating sow badgers trapped as part of his Department's tuberculosis control scheme; and whether he authorises any exceptions to this policy.

Mr. Curry: Lactating sow badgers trapped during official badger removal operations are released.

All possible precautions are taken to avoid taking them by mistake and, as such, where doubt exists, they are released.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions during the last 12 months operatives from or on behalf of his Department have used snares for the purpose of catching badgers under the tuberculosis control scheme.

Mr. Curry: Since 1 November 1988 snares have been employed in eight badger investigations. Snares are used as a last resort, under careful supervision, when it is either not possible to use traps or when traps have proved ineffective.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has revised his guidelines on the trapping of badgers under tuberculosis control release; whether any trapping is authorised other than on farms where tuberculosis has recently been confirmed; and what definition is used for these purposes of the word "recently."

Mr. Curry: Revised procedures, allowing a single trapping period of four months rather than a three-month period with follow-up trapping, have been introduced. There have been no other changes in the guidelines for trapping procedures, which are based upon the recommendations of the Dunnet report published in 1986. No trapping is carried out beyond those breakdown farms where badgers have been implicated in the transmission of the disease to cattle. Investigations into the cause of breakdowns are carried out as quickly as is practicable and the word recently is not used.

Cereals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the respective acreages and yields for the last five years of (a) wheat, (b) barley, (c) oats, (d) rye and (e) other cereals produced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows:

Cereal area and yield 1985-1989
Area ('000 ha.) Yield (tonnes/ha.)

	1985		1986		1987		1988		[1]1989

Eggs

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many laying hens producing eggs for human consumption there were on British farms in (a) September 1988 and (b) September 1989; and how many individual flocks of such poultry there were on the same dates.

Mr. Curry: Information is not available in the form requested.

Details of the numbers of fowls laying eggs for human consumption, and the number of holdings in Great Britain on which laying fowls are recorded, taken from the agricultural census which is held in June each year, are given in the table.

Year	Number of fowls producing eggs for eating (millions)	Number of holdings (thousands)
1988	33·931	38·2
1989[1]	31·216	36·6

[1] Provisional.

Very small holdings which make only occasional returns are excluded from these figures.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he anticipates announcing modifications to the Testing of Poulty Flocks Order to assist the smaller egg producer.

Mr. Curry: The Poultry Laying Flocks (Testing and Registration etc.) Order 1989 came into operation on 26 October 1989, replacing the provisions in the Testing of Poultry Flocks Order 1989 which related to flocks producing eggs for human consumption. The new order reduces the required frequency of sampling and provides for a simpler sampling method involving the collection of droppings. These changes will, without compromising the protection of public health, lead to a considerable reduction in the cost of testing, particularly for small flocks.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table of average egg prices for each month of the current year.

Mr. Curry: The average packer to producer price (in terms of pence per dozen) for each of the last 12 months has been as follows:

	pence
January	25·0
February	28·5
March	29·7
April	32·0
May	35·7
June	36·2
July	35·1
August	38·9
September	45·1
[1]October	45·7

[1] provisional.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of laying hens in the United Kingdom at the latest date for which figures are available and on the equivalent date of 1988.

Mr. Curry: Details of the size of the laying flock in the United Kingdom, taken from the United Kingdom agricultural census which is held in June each year, are given in the table. These figures are for fowls laying eggs for human consumption and include estimates for very small holdings in England and Wales (but not for Scotland or Northern Ireland).

Farmers Union of Wales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in 1988 and 1989 either he, or his predecessor, or his officials, have met representatives of the Farmers Union of Wales.

Mr. Curry: Meetings with the Farmers Union of Wales are, in the first instance, for the Secretary of State for Wales, my right hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Walker), and his Department. However, there are occasional meetings between representatives of the union and Ministers and officials of my Department. The most recent such occasion occurred last week, when I held discussions on sheep scab.

EC (Fraud)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent measures his Department has taken to combat European Community fraud.

Mr. Curry: The Government have taken the initiative in the Council of Ministers on several occasions to press for further action to deal with fraud in the common agricultural policy and good progress is now being made on strengthening controls. Proposals are currently under discussion which would require member states to carry out annual physical checks on intervention stocks and a minimum level of inspections on consignments attracting export refunds; and to improve the system of audit checks on firms making or receiving CAP payments. My Department is actively involved in these negotiations and is working towards early implementation. In addition, new anti-fraud controls and penalties have recently been introduced into a number of CAP schemes, such as the suckler-cow premium beef special premium and durum wheat production aid.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bostik

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received representations concerning the proposed sale by Black and Decker of Bostik of Leicester to Orkem.

Mr. Redwood: I am not aware of having received any such representations.

Computer Codes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government are taking to construct satisfactory criteria to be met by all computer codes which may be used as part of the decision-making processes involving public safety.

Mr. Forth: The Government are particularly concerned to ensure that safety-related systems are constructed to satisfactory standards; the identification and apportionment of risk attributable to software within systems is part of this process. They are actively taking steps to encourage the development of suitable standards and guidelines, at both national and international levels, to be met by all systems incorporating software on which public safety may in some way depend. The work is motivated not by a recognition of particular present dangers; rather by a desire to anticipate and forestall hazards which may arise with the very rapid pace of technical change.

Activity is being co-ordinated by a working group of the Interdepartmental Committee on Software Engineering (ICSE) on which all interested Government Departments are represented.

The working group, drawing on expertise from outside Government, is currently devising a strategy which includes the development of a requirement for harmonised standards applicable to the civil and defence sectors. The strategy will also embrace research and development, education and training, and the encouragement of technology transfer to equip software producers for the high quality of work to be demanded. The ICSE work on safety-related software is a particular aspect of the efforts of the Department of Trade and Industry to encourage higher quality software in general through the promotion of best practice, support for standards-making, and the establishment of certification schemes where appropriate.

A number of studies have recently been carried out, for example, by the Health and Safety Executive, and jointly by the Institution of Electrical Engineers and the British Computer Society (with financial support from the Department of Trade and Industry). The recommendations resulting from this work are being considered by ICSE in the development of its strategy. In particular, ICSE is working on a standards framework proposed by the Health and Safety Executive, which will take into account interim defence standards 00-55 (requirements for the procurement of safety critical software in defence equipment) and 00-56 (requirements for the analysis of safety critical hazards) as well as international standards currently being produced. The framework which eventually emerges from the ICSE work will, after normal consultation with United Kingdom industry, be presented to the International Electro Technical Commission, a body with a wide membership, whose responsibilities include the production of international standards for computer-based systems and the software used therein.

"Single Market News"

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidelines are followed when allowing firms to advertise within his departmental publication "Single Market News".

Mr. Forth [holding answer 3 November 1989]: Advertising is accepted on normal commercial terms and in accordance with the British code of advertising practice.

Inward Investment

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a breakdown of inward investment in the United Kingdom, by standard English regions and for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, for each of the years 1979-80 to 1988-89 inclusive showing (a) the total number of investments, (b) the number received as a percentage of the total in each year, (c) the total number of associated jobs both new and safeguarded, (d) the number of jobs as a percentage of the total in each year and (e) the total amount of Government financial assistance provided.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 30 October 1989]: The table sets out the number of inward investment decisions known to the invest in Britain bureau for the calendar years 1979-88, together with the value of regional selective assistance offers to foreign-owned companies in England, Scotland and Wales and the financial assistance offered in Northern Ireland to such companies. It is currently not possible to provide all the information requested on a financial year basis.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are (a) the most recent figures for homelessness by county and metropolitan district in England and (b) as a percentage of the population in county and metropolitan districts in England;

(2) what are the most recent figures for homelessness for England and by English regions as a percentage of the population;

(3) what are the most recent figures for homelessness for England, with regional breakdowns.

Mr. Chope: Figures for homelessness for non-metropolitan and metropolitan districts appear in table 7 of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the second quarter 1989. Supplementary Tables". This table gives the numbers of homeless acceptances and acceptances per 1,000 households for those districts which reported.

The latest estimates of households accepted as homeless expressed as numbers and per 1,000 households for England and by regions appear respectively in tables 1(a) and 1(b) of the same publication. Tables 1(a) and 1(b) include estimates for non-responders.

A copy of the supplementary tables is available in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of young people under 18 years of age who are currently homeless; and how these estimates have changed over the last three years.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 November 1989]: The numbers of young people among the households accepted as homeless are not reported by local authorities and my Department has no estimates.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department's records of correspondence from hon. Members are stored on a computer system. The system incorporates certain basic data for each case, including the length of time taken to send a reply to each letter.

Council House Sales

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is considering introducing any new schemes to promote the sale of council homes in England.

Mr. Chope: I shall be considering the experimental schemes recently announced in Scotland and Wales to enable tenants to buy their homes while deferring payment of part of the purchase price.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council homes were sold in 1988; what were the figures for five, 10 and 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows:

Local authority and new town sales, England

(Thousands)

	1973	1978	1983	1988
Number of sales	39	30	137	142

It is clear that the right to buy, introduced in 1980, continues to meet the desire of very many tenants to take on the responsibilities of home ownership.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold in the northern region since 1980.

Mr. Chope: From April 1980 to June 1989 an estimated 74,000 dwellings were sold by local authorities and new towns in the northern region.

Housing (Rents)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the average (a) council home rent, (b) new town development corporation home rent, and (c) housing association rent in England.

Mr. Chope: The estimated average weekly unrebated rent for local authority dwellings in England in April 1989 was £20·62; for new town dwellings it was £21·20.

For housing associations the average rent for fair rent lettings in the first half of 1989 was £26·47. Since January this year most new lettings by housing associations have been on assured tenancies but information about the rents charged under such tenancies is not yet available.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Housing Corporation has been given permission to issue index-linked housing loan stock to participants in self-build schemes for rent.

Mr. Chope: The Housing Corporation and the Department are currently examining a proposition of this kind.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which body will make the final decision about the location of the European Environment Agency.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It will be for the Council of Ministers to make the final decision about the location of the European Environment Agency.

Land Sales

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres of publicly-owned land in the northern region have been sold since 1980; and how many are still held.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is not held centrally. The Department's land register for public bodies covered by part X of the Local Government Planning and Land Act 1980 records unused and underused land. At 30 September the register shows that in the northern region pubic bodies had disposed of 4,700 acres of such land since 1980; 10,100 acres remained on the register.

Hazardous Waste Cargoes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the requirements for cargo checks and physical assay of hazardous and toxic waste cargoes imported into the United Kingdom when border deregulation is implemented with the single European Market on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Trippier: Controls over tranfrontier movement of hazardous wastes are based on prior notifications to the waste disposal authority responsible for the intended disposal facility and do not depend on cargo checks or assay at borders. Waste disposal authorities already have wide powers to inspect and take samples, wherever necessary, in the performance of their functions. The European Commission has accepted that after the creation of the single market controls on movements of hazardous waste between member states will still be necessary.

Industrial Pollution

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money was spent on clearing up pollution and environmental damage resulting from the release of pollutants into the environment by industry, in each of the last 10 years for the United Kingdom as a whole; and how much of this sum was spent in Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is not collected in the form requested. Some expenditures incurred by public undertakings in dealing with environmental pollution are published for England and Wales in my Department's digest of environmental protection and water statistics but these cover much more than clearing up.

Community Charge

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to amend the community charge legislation in order to exempt from liability to pay the charge all persons who are in receipt of attendance allowance.

Mr. Chope: No, but my right hon. Friend intends to amend the legislation by order to enable anyone who is in receipt of attendance allowance, or constant attendance allowance, and who is severely mentally impaired to be exempt from the community charge. This will enable people suffering from degenerative disorders such as Alzheimer's disease to qualify for exemption.

Radioactive Waste, Drigg

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the letter dated 6 October from the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) to the hon. Member for Hornsey and Woodgreen relating to the Sixth Report of the Environment Committee, session 1988-89 "Disposal of Low-level Radioactive Waste at Drigg."

Mr. Trippier: Yes. The text of my hon. Friend's letter is as follows:

> "I was interested to see your Committee's report on the "Disposal of Low-Level Radioactive Waste at Drigg" which was published in August. I am pleased that the Committee welcomed the progress that has been made by British Nuclear Fuels plc to respond to the Committee's earlier criticisms of the Drigg operation and to implement the Committee's recommendations.
>
> BNFL has made substantial efforts to improve the Drigg site and to reduce any environmental impact. This, and the company's commitment to further improvements, is encouraging news.
>
> I note, however, that the Committee considers there is still some work to be done in reducing the volume of waste being sent to the site. The Department agrees and will continue to press the waste producers to reduce the volume of the waste prior to disposal".

Pollution

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguards there are to ensure that public funds do not go to businesses or activities which cause pollution and environmental damage.

Mr. Trippier: We have a legislative framework which provides systems for controlling pollution across all environmental media. We have strengthened the control of water pollution with the passage of the Water Act 1989. We propose to improve the effectiveness of other control systems with further environmental protection legislation. This framework provides the safeguard, and industrial and other activities, whether supported by public funds or not, must be regulated by these controls.

Public Standpipes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how payment is to be made to water undertakers for water taken from a public standpipe for domestic use when drought conditions exist.

Mr. Howard: There is no separate charge to domestic consumers for water taken from public standpipes erected during a period of water shortage.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report details of those sections of his Department which have been relocated in the last five years, indicating the sites to which they have been moved; whether consideration is being given to future relocation of London-based sections of his Department to sites outside London; and whether the central Borders of Scotland has been identified as a suitable area for any future moves.

Mr. Chris Patten: Around 38 per cent. of the Department of the Environment's staff of approximately 6,000 (excluding the Property Services Agency) are already located outside London, 24 per cent. outside the south-east. The Department's eastern regional office moved from London to Bedford last year. Staff working for the newly-established Historic Royal Palaces Agency have recently moved from central London to Hampton Court palace.

Information about the Department's review currently being carried out of the scope for further relocation was given in reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 21 July (Official Report, Vol. 157, col. 785.)

Apart from the Property Services Agency, the Department's work is principally concerned with policies affecting England. We have not, therefore, considered locating posts in Scotland.

Seventy per cent. of the PSA's staff of 22,800 are already located outside London, 45 per cent. outside the south-east. The PSA is being restructured in preparation for privatisation, and the scope for further relocation is being examined through the business planning process.

Council House Building

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council dwellings were started in England and Wales for 1988; and how many starts have occurred in 1989.

Mr. Chope: Figures of local authority and new town housebuilding starts in England appear in table 2 of my Department's press release number 577 issued on 2 November 1989, a copy of which is available in the Library.

For information on Wales I refer to the hon. Member to the Secretary of State for Wales.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement in respect of damage in Yorkshire and Humberside to sites of special scientific interest (a) at Thorne, Crowle and Goole Moors (b) Sandall Beat wood and (c) Shirley Pool.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The latest information on these sites is being assembled by the Nature Conservancy Council. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the table placed in the Library on 19 July illustrating the impact, in each local authority area, of a system of local government finance based on a local income tax and on a system which combines local income tax with capital value based domestic rates, making the same assumptions but reflecting his estimates of 1990-91 expenditure, standard spending assessments and aggregate external finance.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today placed a table in the Library showing the figures requested, consistent with the announcements my right hon. Friend made in his statement today and with the exemplications of his proposals which he has sent to local authorities.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms for the payment of community charge transitional relief in 1991-92 and 1992-93; and what will be the amount of relief granted.

Mr. Chris Patten: On 11 October my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State announced in the other place details of the community charge transitional relief scheme. In 1990-91 the estimated cost of relief is £300 million. Transitional relief will be phased out over a three year period. The arrangements for future years are that in 1991-92 the amount of relief granted to an individual in 1990-91 will be reduced by 25p a week and by a further 25p in 1992-93. The cost of relief in 1991-92 is estimated to be £230 million and in 1992-93 £180 million.

Travel Passes

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to provide the money to local authorities to ensure that free bus travel passes are available for retired persons.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 3 November 1989]: The main avenue for Government support for local authority services will be revenue support grant, which is in aid of services generally. It is for local authorities to decide how much to spend on any particular activity, and in particular to decide the extent to which they support concessionary fare schemes.

Housing (Barnsley)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met Barnsley metropolitan borough council to discuss its housing needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 3 November 1989]: My officials met Barnsley metropolitan borough council on 3 October 1989 to discuss the district's housing needs and the council's proposed housing investment programme. The outcome of these discussions will be taken into account when the decisions are taken on the allocation of housing resources to Barnsley for the next financial year.

Right to Buy

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many right-to-buy applicants in each of the London boroughs were awaiting the determination of appeals to the district valuer at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 30 October 1989]: The following table gives the number of right to buy valuation appeals awaiting determination by district valuers at 19 October. It excludes appeals which have not yet passed to district valuers or which have recently been the subject of determination reports to the local authority and the applicant:

District	Number
Barking	20
Barnet	19
Bexley	4
Brent	24
Bromley	2
Camden	323
Croydon	44
Ealing	11
Enfield	8
Greenwich	384
Hackney	33
Hammersmith and Fulham	36
Haringey	18
Harrow	4
Havering	38
Hillingdon	4
Hounslow	21
Islington	51
Kensington and Chelsea	3
Kingston	3
Lambeth	34
Lewisham	81
Merton	9
Newham	68
Redbridge	18
Richmond	2
Southwark	59
Sutton	18
Tower Hamlets	93
Waltham Forest	11
Wandsworth	17
Westminster	29
City	0

These figures suggest that the boroughs with very high numbers of appeals to the district valuer should be reviewing their valuation policies.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the arrangements that have been made to assist overseas Governments, should they have a major nuclear accident.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom signed the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) convention on assistance in the case of a nuclear accident or radiological emergency as soon as it was opened for signature in September 1986. As at 28 September 1989 this convention had been signed by 70 states and ratified by 37 states. Copies of this convention are available in the Library (Cm. 566).

We undertook, on signature, to act as if bound by the convention pending ratification which is expected to take place early next year.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if she will set up a special unit in Downing street to deal with the problem of child abuse.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

United Nations Environment Programme

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to announce an increase in the United Kingdom contribution to the United Nations environment programme when she addresses the United Nations General Assembly in New York on 8 November.

The Prime Minister: I announced in March this year that the United Kingdom will increase its contribution to the United Nations environment programme to £3 million.

Textile Industry

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if she will appoint a Minister of the House responsible for policy relating to the textile industry; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied with the present arrangements.

Immigration and Nationality Policy

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister why responsibility for immigration and nationality policy has been passed to a Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Home Office; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Responsibility for immigration and nationality policy rests with the Secretary of State for the Home Department. He will be assisted in the discharge of this duty by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Fareham (Mr. Lloyd). They will continue the firm and fair administration of our immigration laws.

ENERGY

Electricity Privatisation

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the model transitional agreements which he has suggested as viable contractual agreements between British Coal and National Power and Power Gen to take effect after the privatisation of electricity.

Mr. Wakeham: Coal contracts are a matter for commercial negotiation between British Coal and the generators.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what date has now been fixed for the sale to the private sector of each component branch of the electricity supply industry; and what level of certainty he attaches to the proposed date of each such sale.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are firmly committed to completing the privatisation of the industry within this Parliament. The area boards will be offered for sale in autumn 1990. The two generating companies will be offered for sale in the first half of 1991. The precise timing for this has yet to be settled.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the likely effects of electricity privatisation on levels of employment in the British coal mining industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The coal industry will need to ensure that its future output and prices meet the needs of its main customers including the privatised electricity generators. Employment in the industry will depend both on demand for coal and future productivity gains. It is for British Coal to determine what its manpower requirements are and how it will meet them.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report details of those sections of his Department which have been relocated in the last five years, indicating the sites to which they have been moved; whether consideration is being given to future relocation of London-based sections of his Department to sites outside London; and whether the central borders of Scotland has been identified as a suitable area for any future moves.

Mr. Wakeham: There are no plans for relocation. As I told the hon. Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 26 July 1989 (col. 720), the position will be reviewed in early 1991 when the Department will have had some 18 months' experience of working in its new headquarters building. No sections of my Department have been relocated in the last five years.

Energy Costs

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the energy cost of each Government Department for the past five years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Property Services Agency is currently responsible for paying fuel bills on behalf of most Departments. They will be writing to my right hon. Friend giving the precise information within two weeks.

Energy Savings (London)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the energy savings of each London borough council for the past five years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information on the energy savings of each London borough council is not available centrally.

TRANSPORT

Concessionary Fares Scheme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals there are for changes to the operation of the concessionary fares scheme in Greater London.

Mr. Portillo: I am not aware of any such proposals. Decisions on concessionary fares rest with the London local authorities in negotiation with London Regional Transport.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will amend the law to provide that any fares imposed on users of concessionary travel permits in London will require parliamentary approval.

Mr. Portillo: This is a matter for the London boroughs and the City of London who pay for the concessionary fares scheme.

Passenger Rail Services

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail management about reopening to passenger traffic lines now used only for freight traffic, or where the trackbed remains wholly or substantially intact; if he has discussed the case put by the Wealden line campaign for the reopening of the Lewes-Uckfield link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I am aware of the campaign to re-open the Lewes-Uckfield line. It is for the British Railways Board to decide on the re-opening of freight railway lines to experimental passenger services, as they are empowered to do under the Transport Act 1962 (Amendment) Act 1981, (the "Speller" Act).

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assurance he has received from British Rail regarding the availability for use when the tunnel opens of a high-speed rail link to London from the Channel tunnel for passengers and freight.

Mr. Portillo: In the early years of the tunnel's operation, BR plan to use existing lines, upgraded as necessary, for international passenger and freight services. British Rail and their joint venture partners, Eurorail, are planning to build a new passenger rail link between the Channel tunnel and London to overcome capacity constraints on the existing network. This new line, which is expected to be operational in 1998, will release additional capacity on existing lines for the growth of international freight traffic.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assurance he has received from British Rail regarding the availability of the station facilities required in the Ashford area for the Channel tunnel link at the opening of cross-Channel services.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail and Eurorail have reaffirmed their intention to have an international passenger station at Ashford when the Channel tunnel opens. To this end the board has announced its intention to introduce a private Bill later this month to seek powers to change the proposed location of Ashford IPS in order to fit in with the proposed new Channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what engineering and costing investigations have been made by his Department into the viability of tunnelling the high-speed rail link to King's Cross through south-east London.

Mr. Portillo: Engineering and costing investigations for the Channel tunnel rail link are for British Rail and Eurorail, not the Department.

Prestwick Airport

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley, Official Report, 23 October, columns 371-72, he will state (a) how many of the 1,815 acres of land and buildings not directly or immediately required for airport operations were adjacent to Prestwick airport and (b) what was the value of land not directly or immediately required for airport operations at or adjacent to Prestwick airport at 8 July 1987.

Mr. McLoughlin: The prospectus issued when BAA plc shares were offered for sale noted that of these 1,815 acres, 938 acres were at BAA's Scottish airports, predominantly at Prestwick. Plans showing this land are in the House Library.

The gross current cost valuation of land and buildings at Prestwick, shown in the 1987 BAA company accounts, includes the value of land and buildings not immediately or directly required for airport operation. A separate valuation was not identified.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Disarmament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any proposals from the Soviet Union for its complete unilateral disarmament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will hold urgent talks with the West German Government about the level of co-operation available to the Scottish police force investigating the Lockerbie crash.

Mr. Maude: No such talks are necessary. The close contact which the investigating authorities have enjoyed with their West German colleagues has been an important and productive feature throughout the investigation and will continue.

Dashevsky Family

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Soviet Government so as to obtain permission for Vladimir Dashevsky of 26 Bakinskich Icomissarov, Moscow, to leave the Soviet Union to travel to Israel together with his wife and three children.

Mr. Waldegrave: We take every opportunity to press the Soviet authorities on individual refusenik cases such as Vladimir Dashevsky. My right hon. and learned Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised this case most recently when he met Mr. Shevardnadze in New York on 29 September. We shall maintain our pressure until Vladimir Dashevsky is given permission to emigrate from the Soviet Union.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report details of those sections of his Department which have been relocated in the last five years, indicating the sites to which they have been moved; whether consideration is being given to future relocation of London-based sections of his Department to sites outside London; and whether the central Borders of Scotland has been identified as a suitable area for any future moves.

Mr. Maude: The diplomatic wing has not relocated any jobs in the last five years, but some 250 jobs, (mainly in administration departments) have been identified for relocation from central London to the FCO estate at Hanslope park near Milton Keynes by 1995.

In the aid wing, 18 jobs have been relocated to the East Kilbride office in the last five years following the relocation of 427 jobs there in 1981; and some 390 jobs from the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute are being relocated from London and the Thames Valley to Chatham between 1988 and 1990, most of which have already been transferred. In addition, about 100 further aid wing jobs will move from London, mostly to East Kilbride. The exact number of jobs and timing have yet to be decided.

Mr. Raghubinder Singh

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department's migration and visa correspondence unit intends to reply to the letter dated 4 September from the hon. Member for Woolwich about the case of Mr. Raghubinder Singh.

Mr. Maude: The hon. Member's letter has not been received in the MV correspondence unit. I understand that he is sending a duplicate, which will receive prompt attention.

Missile Technology Control

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions are taking place between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government concerning ways of strengthening the missile technology control regime.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have had frequent discussions of this subject with the American Government at both ministerial and official level. We are agreed that the most effective means of strengthening the regime is to encourage more countries to participate. We hope in the near future to host a meeting of partners to discuss expanding the regime.

ASEAN

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has received or sent to the Association of South-East Asian Nations countries concerning their nuclear-free policies.

Mr. Waldegrave: There have been no communications on this issue recently with the member states of the Association of South-East Asian Nations.

Southern Africa

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the claims of the South African Foreign Minister arising from interception of communications of United Kingdom units serving as UNTAG border monitors.

Mr. Waldegrave: United Nations' investigations have found no evidence to support the South African claims. We have no reason to question this judgment.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nursery School Places

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures he plans to take to increase the number of nursery school places to encourage mothers to return to work; and what representations he has had on this subject.

Mrs. Rumbold: Nursery education takes place within the hours of the school day and children commonly attend part time. Day care facilities such as day nurseries play a more important part in enabling mothers to return to work. They are the responsibility at Government level of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Disabled Students

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he plans to take account of the additional costs for disabled students in his current proposals in the White Paper on top-up loans for students.

Mr. Jackson: Disabled students will continue to qualify for the additional allowances available with the grant. They are also specifically exempted from the ending of students' benefit entitlements. After their courses, they will be protected by the provisions for deferment of repayments and write-off of the debt if their income is low.

Teachers

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what assessment has made of whether the 5·3 per cent. salary offer to teachers in maintained further education colleges will attract and retain top quality graduates and people with industrial and business expertise;

(2) what steps he will take to ensure that teachers remain attracted and committed to a career in further education; whether he has received the report by Hay Management Consultants on pay of principals of maintained sector colleges and if he will make a statement.

(3) whether he will bring forward proposals to establish for those teachers employed in adult education a properly graded salary structure.

Mr. Jackson: The pay and conditions of lecturers in further education, including adult education, are a matter for their local authority employers. At national level, they are negotiated by the employers and the lecturer unions in the National Joint Council (Further Education).

Human Genome Organisations

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial contributions he expects will be made from United Kingdom sources to the human genome organisations in 1989-90 and in each of the following four financial years.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the Medical Research Council has not been approached to make a financial contribution to the human genome organisation. We have no information about possible approaches to private funding sources.

Disabled Students' Grant

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities follow procedures which enable them to pay the full three years disabled students' grant in a single lump sum.

Mr. Jackson: This informaton is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, how many local education authorities have guidelines governing the award of disabled students' grants.

Mr. Jackson: The Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations empower local education authorities to assess extra grant in respect of certain types of expenditure incurred by disabled students. Within the framework specified in the regulations, how this power is exercised is a matter for individual authorities. Information about their procedures is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how many disabled students following higher education courses incur costs related to their disability that exceed the level of the disabled students' grant.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not collected centrally.

Fire Safety (Schools)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken or is considering to improve fire safety in schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 23 October 1989 at column 323.

Top-up Loans

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to amend the financial assumptions upon which the top-up loans White Paper is based.

Mr. Jackson: We have no plans to adjust the assumptions made for the purpose of Cm. 520 as to the long-term rates of take-up, deferment, default or inflation. The size of the loan facility offered to students in any year will be determined the previous autumn in the light of actual and anticipated cost increases.

Open University

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision for inflation he will make in calculating grant aid to the Open university in 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson: The Treasury's expectation of price movements in the economy in 1990-91 will be announced in the Autumn Statement. Changes in the planned provision for the Open university in the forthcoming three years will be announced following the Autumn Statement.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Justice Act

62. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to bring section 43 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 into effect.

Mr. John Patten: Section 43 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 came into effect on 31 July this year. By subsection (5), the wider power it gives the Court of Appeal to order a retrial does not apply where notice of appeal or application for leave to appeal was given before that date.

Drug Prevention Units

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy when considering the location for the recently announced drug prevention units, to consider Bolton as a base for a unit.

Mr. Mellor: Drug prevention units will be located in those areas judged most at risk from drug misuse and in particular from a threat of cocaine and crack. We are not yet in a position to announce which areas will be chosen.

Bingo

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to amend section 42 of the Gaming Act 1968 to allow bingo organisers to advertise specific games of bingo at pre-arranged times and places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 1 November at column 185 to an earlier question from him about the advertising of licensed bingo clubs.

Guildford Four

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that interim compensation is paid immediately to Paul Hill, Gerard Conlon, Patrick Armstrong and Carole Richardson in light of the Appeal Court's decision in their case.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has made interim payments of compensation to all four.

May Inquiry

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that Sir John May's inquiry into the case of the Guildford Four and Maguire Seven be held in public.

Mr. John Patten: The conduct of the inquiry is a matter for Sir John May, but I understand that it is his intention that as much of the evidence as possible will be heard in public.

Terrorism Suspects (Interviews)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure tighter safeguards for persons in custody on suspicion of terrorist offences; and if he will introduce video and sound recordings of all interviews of such persons, and immediate access to legal advice.

Mr. Waddington: There are already safeguards in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the Prevention of Terrorism Act 1989 to ensure that interviews under the terrorist provisions are carried out properly and that those detained are properly treated. New provision was made in schedule 3 of the 1989 Act, in accordance with Lord Colville's recommendations in his report on the workings of the Prevention of Terrorism Act 1984, for the supervision of the detention and examination powers in the Act by means of regular reviews during the first 48 hours. Any extension of detention beyond that period (up to a maximum of a further five days) requires my authority.

Preparatory work is now underway for the trial use of tape-recording in interviews with those held under the Prevention of Terrorism Act. There are no proposals for video recordings in these cases.

There is already a right of access to legal advice for those detained under the Prevention of Terrorism Act but I believe that it is essential that the police should continue to have the power to delay the exercise of that right for a prescribed period where it is necessary to do so and the statutory criteria are met.

Prisoner No. B51715

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received an application for the temporary transfer of prisoner No. B51715 from Frankland prison to a prison in Northern Ireland; if he will outline the compassionate grounds on which the application was based; and if he will give sympathetic consideration to immediately granting this application.

Mr. Mellor: On 14 August 1989 the inmate concerned submitted a petition requesting temporary transfer to a prison in Northern Ireland in order to receive accumulated visits from members of his family who live in Belfast. The petition expressed concern about the strain being experienced by the inmate's family and particularly about the wellbeing of the inmate's wife, daughter and mother. We and the Northern Ireland Office need to take both security and compassionate considerations into account before deciding whether the request can be granted. No decision has yet been reached. I should add that the inmate has also submitted a petition for permanent transfer to Northern Ireland. This, too, is being carefully considered.

James Armstrong

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the internal inquiry into the death of James Armstrong at Risley remand centre revealed.

Mr. Mellor: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the inquiries which, in accordance with standard practice, were carried out at the time by the governor of Risley into Mr. Armstrong's death. Those inquiries established the facts of the case as subsequently disclosed at the coroner's inquest and as summarised in correspondence with the hon. Member.

Cable Authority

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to ensure that companies being awarded cable franchises by the Cable Authority proceed to actual cabling within an agreed time scale.

Mr. Mellor: This is primarily a matter for the Cable Authority. There is inevitably some delay between the award of a cable franchise and the subsequent issue of the licences under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984 and the Telecommunications Act 1984 which enable the operator to start operations. Before franchise holders can be granted such licences they need to be able to satisfy the Cable Authority and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (who is responsible for the issue of licences under the Telecommunications Act) on a range of matters. I understand that the Cable Authority has recently announced that it will review franchises after one year, with a view to withdrawing them if the holder has not made satisfactory progress in this regard.

Before a Telecommunications Act licence is issued, the cable operator has to agree a schedule for the construction of his system in consultation with the Department of Trade and Industry, the Director General of Telecommunications and the Cable Authority. Monitoring compliance with the Telecommunications Act licence is a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish a table showing (a) the list of cable franchises awarded by the Cable Authority, showing the name of the franchise, the successful applicant and the responsibility of the company who has won the franchise, and (b) a list of cable franchises currently on offer by the Cable Authority.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Cable Authority that a total of 53 cable franchises have been granted, of which 16 have been licensed by the Cable Authority, and 14 are operational. Copies of the lists requested have been placed in the Library.

Prisons

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will (a) give the optimum operation capacity of each prison in England and Wales and (b) the actual numbers of prisoners currently housed in each prison in England and Wales.

Mr. Waddington: The maximum number of inmates an establishment can hold without some overcrowding is known as its certified normal accommodation (CNA).

The latest figures available for:

(i) CNA; and

(ii) population of each establishment in England and Wales is as follows:

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will actively facilitate the transfer of those prisoners in British gaols who have requested to serve their sentences in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mellor: All such requests are considered in the light of the criteria governing such transfers, which were set out in the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) on 23 June 1989 at column 263.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make his reply to the report of Her Majesty's inspectorate of prisons on conditions within Wandsworth prison.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) published his response to the report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons on Wandsworth on 20 October 1989 and a copy was placed in the Library.

Mr. Lorrain Esme Osman

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish all the representations he has received about Mr. Lorrain Esme Osman.

Mr. John Patten: It is not normal practice to publish such correspondence, and I can see no reason to make an exception in this case.

Drugs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the estimated cost of the Metropolitan police drugs raid on Broadwater Farm estate on 29 September; and what type and quantity of drugs were seized during the raid.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 27 October 1989]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the additional overtime costs were about £42,500. There were some other minor additional costs but these cannot readily be identified. The forensic examination and weighing of the drugs found has not yet been completed, but an initial examination indicates that about a kilo of cannabis was seized as well as some cocaine.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his written answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross) of 27 July, Official Report, column 856, if he will indicate the particular section of the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order (SI 1983. No. 764) which makes provision to appeal from decision to destroy a dog which has bitten a person.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Article 33(1) of the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 requires a court to make an order directing that a dog be destroyed where it appears to the court that the dog has attacked any person or attacked or killed livestock.

Articles 143 and 146 of the Magistrates Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 as applied and modified by article 33(6) of the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 enable an owner to appeal to a county court from an order for the destruction of a dog or, where a point of law is involved, to apply to the magistrates' court to state a case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal.

Students

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost of providing education for European Community students in Northern Ireland in (a) the current academic year and (b) each of the last three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is not possible to disaggregate such overall costs.

The cost of remitting the tuition fees of eligible European students for the previous three years was:

Year	Amount £
1988–89	702,650
1987–88	418,000
1986–87	216,000

Current year figures are not yet available.

Mr. Gerard Slane

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the circumstances of the murder of Mr. Gerard Slane in respect of whether any leaking of official photographs and documents relating to Mr. Slane were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: No. However, at the request of the chief constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the deputy chief constable of Cambridgeshire, Mr. John Stevens, is already undertaking a full and impartial investigation into the alleged leaking of security material with a view to the earliest possible comprehensive report to the chief constable.

Seamus Duffy

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the present state of investigation by the police and the independent Police Complaints Commission into the circumstances in which Seamus Duffy was killed by a police plastic baton round in Belfast on 9 August.

Mr. Cope: The police investigation into the circumstances surrounding the death of Seamus Duffy is being actively pursued and has reached an advanced stage. The investigation is being closely monitored by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland. Once the investigation has been completed the investigating officer's final report will go to the Commission which will then issue a statement to the chief constable on the conduct of the investigation. The papers will then be passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions. Until such time as the DPP has issued directions on the case, or any proceedings have terminated, it would not be appropriate to give details of the investigations.

Prisons

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give (a) the optimum operational capacity of each prison in Northern Ireland and (b) the actual numbers of prisoners currently housed in each prison in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: The optimum operational capacity of each prison in Northern Ireland together with the actual numbers of prisoners currently housed is:

Population as at 08.30 hours 3 November 1989

Accommodation	Number
Her Majesty's prison Belfast
[1]433	533
Her Majesty's prison Maghaberry
[1]486	[2]297
Her Majesty's prison Magilligan
[1]300	266
Her Majesty's prison Maze
[1]750	517

[1] Single cell accommodation.

[2] Including 23 female prisoners.

These figures include prisoners on home leave and in outside hospitals.

In addition, the young offenders centre, Hydebank, has single cell accommodation for 300 and has a current population of 158.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total prison population in Northern Ireland in each of the years since 1980.

Mr. Cope: The average prison population in each of the years since 1980 was:

	Numbers
[1]1980	2,489
[1]1981	2,521
[1]1982	2,481
[1]1983	2,453
[1]1984	2,248
[1]1985	2,943
[2]1986-87	1,907
[2]1987-88	1,947
[2]1988-89	1,860

[1] Calendar year.

[2] Financial year.

NATIONAL FINANCE

IMF/World Bank (Meetings)

63. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's action in response to the outcome of the recent annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 19 October to my hon. Friend, the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) at column 202. The United Kingdom will play its full part in furthering these policies.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the gross domestic product per head for (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) the United Kingdom for the most recent 10 years;

(2) if he will list the main components of the gross domestic product per head which result in the total for Wales being lower than the total for England and the United Kingdom for the most recent 10 years.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 2 November 1989]: For the latest estimates of gross domestic product (GDP) per head, I refer the hon. Member to "Economic Trends" No. 421, November 1988, page 90. An industrial analysis of GDP is given on page 93 of the same article which gives detailed figures for the latest four years; a copy of which is available in the Library. A copy of the information requested on the main components of the gross domestic product for the 10 most recent years has been placed in the Library.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of parents paying tax on the provision or subsidy of child care facilities by employers and the amount of tax collected in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 2 November 1989]: I regret that information on which to base reliable estimates of the number of parents paying tax on this benefit in kind and the amount of tax collected is not available.

Families with Children

Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families with children fall below the tax threshold.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 2 November 1989]: In 1989-90, it is estimated that some 1·6 million families with children have taxable incomes below the income tax threshold. The estimate is based on a projection of the 1986 family expenditure survey and is therefore provisional.

Tax and Insurance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give up to date figures on income tax and national insurance averages on the same basis as in his reply to the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) of 10 January, Official Report, columns 633-56, including data for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 2 November 1989]: Figures for 1978-79 to 1988-89 were earlier placed in the Library of the House on 13 April 1989. Revised estimates for 1988-89 and estimates for 1989-90 are set out in the tables.

Notes to Tables:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the tax units receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances. Earners, including working wives, are assumed to pay Class 1 NI contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for NI contributions are financial year averages.

2. The two earner married couple is assumed to have combined earnings equal to the various multiples of average earnings. In calculating disposable income it is assumed that these earnings are split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.

3. For the married couple with two children, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax.

4. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These were £256.30 per week in 1988-89, and estimated to be £275.50 per week in 1989-90 using the Government Actuary Department's assumption of 7½ per cent. growth over 1988-89 as published in the GAD annual report in December 1988.

5. 1989-90 figures are converted into 1988-89 prices by assuming that the RPI is 6 per cent. higher in 1989-90 than the previous financial year. This is consistent with the forecasts published in the 1989-90 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

EEC (Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the net contribution to the EEC in 1989.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 31 October 1989]: The Government's latest published estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community budget in 1989 is £1,966 million. A new estimate of the United Kingdom's net payments to European Community institutions for the financial year 1989-90 will be published in the Autumn Statement.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Charities

49. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sum is currently given per capita in donations to overseas aid charities; and what was the equivalent sum in donations in 1979.

Mrs. Chalker: There is no Government record of the public's donations to voluntary agencies for work overseas. However, each major agency publishes an annual report and accounts. It is clear that voluntary giving for overseas aid agencies has increased substantially since 1979.

Ethiopia

50. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what way Her Majesty's Government are helping to reduce the consequences of famine in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: Substantial amounts of food aid are likely to be needed but a fuller picture will emerge when United Nations crop assessment data become available shortly. Meanwhile, I announced in August 5,000 tonnes of wheatflour and I have recently approved a further 5,000 tonnes. We are, of course, working closely with other aid donors on emergency help.

61. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to help alleviate famine in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: As I have said in reply to the question from my hon. Friend, the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope), the situation is not yet fully clear, but it is likely that substantial amounts of food aid will be needed to prevent the recurrence of famine in northern Ethiopia over the coming year. I announced in August the allocation of 5,000 tonnes of wheatflour to Ethiopia and I have recently approved the allocation of a further 5,000 tonnes. We shall continue to monitor the situation very closely and to liaise with other aid donors.

South Africa

51. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what safeguards exist to monitor the allocation of overseas Government funding to organisations in South Africa and to South African organisations not currently located within South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Staff of our Embassy in Pretoria and of the British Council make frequent visits to the organisations to which we provide aid and the projects we help finance. Officials from my Department visit South Africa regularly to oversee our aid programme and to ensure that it is being well spent. We do not finance any South African organisations outside South Africa.

Namibia

52. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid he proposes to make available to Namibia on attainment of independence.

Mrs. Chalker: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister stated in the House on 26 October, we are willing to provide financial assistance to independent Namibia. But it will not be possible to make specific plans until we have had discussions with the elected Government on their own priorities and policies.

Wildlife Conservation (Africa)

53. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in what ways Britain is helping to conserve wildlife in Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain has long been helping African Governments with their wildlife conservation efforts, and we are always ready to consider new requests for help. I have placed a list of recent and continuing activities in the Library of the House.

Northern Somalia

54. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of United Kingdom aid to Somalia particularly in terms of alleviating the poverty and suffering of people in northern Somalia; whether his policy has been reviewed in the light of renewed internal conflicts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The security situation in northern Somalia since the beginning of the civil conflict there has prevented an effective relief effort being mounted, although we remain ready to support the operations of the international relief agencies and British voluntary organisations when these become possible. Concern about human rights abuses led us to suspend an offer of new capital aid to Somalia in October last year and following the deterioration of conditions since mid-July, we concluded that it was necessary to reduce our existing technical co-operation programme.

Brundtland Commission Report

55. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the Brundtland Commission report on environment and development issues.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government's commitment to sustainable development is set out in the United Kingdom response of July 1988 to the Brundtland report and in a progress report, "Sustaining our Common Future", produced recently by the Department of the Environment. Copies of both documents are in the Library. Among the things they show is how, through the aid programme, we are working to promote sustainable economic and social progress and alleviate poverty in developing countries.

India

56. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the United Kingdom is giving to support primary education in India.

Mrs. Chalker: A grant of just over £31 million was approved earlier this year for a primary education project in the state of Andhra Pradesh. It provides for the design and construction of some 1,100 teachers centres and 4,000 classrooms mostly in remote rural areas throughout the state. It will also cover the training of teachers and teacher educators, teaching materials and research and evaluation activities designed to measure and improve the effectiveness of training and child-centred learning techniques.

Overseas Aid Programme

57. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of world economic conditions, he will review the priorities in the United Kingdom overseas aid programme.

Mrs. Chalker: Priorities in the United Kingdom overseas aid programme are kept under constant review, as indicated in the Government's observations on the 1987 FAC report on bilateral aid, Cm. 225.

Amazonian Rain Forest

58. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific developments have now resulted from the visit by the right hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) to the Amazonian rain forest.

Mrs. Chalker: In August and September British experts visited Brazil and identified a number of well-defined possibilities for collaborative projects. One of these, a joint five year project by Brazilian scientific institutions and the Institute of Hydrology to improve our knowledge of the critical effect of rainforests on climate, has been worked out in detail and has been put forward to the Brazilian authorities for agreement. If it is acceptable, I hope work will start by January, 1990.

In addition, Dr. Synnott of the Oxford Forestry Institute will visit Brazil again later this month to try to finalise the details of certain projects in sustainable forestry management and the genetic resources of forests so that work on these can also start early next year.

Overseas Aid

59. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many former colonies are currently in receipt of overseas aid from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: There are 59 former British dependent territories currently in receipt of British aid.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of gross domestic product is currently spent on overseas aid.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage proportion of gross domestic product is currently spent on overseas aid.

Mrs. Chalker: United Kingdom aid as a proportion of gross national product stood at 0·32 per cent. in 1988—14 per cent. up on the figure for 1987.

Aid (Debt)

60. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what weight he gives to a country's level of indebtedness when making decisions about the level of aid allocated to them.

Mrs. Chalker: Our criteria for allocating bilateral aid are set out in the Government's observation on the 1987 FAC report on bilateral aid, Cm. 225. Indebtedness by itself is not a reason for providing aid. In the context of support for economic policy reform the level of debt servicing obligations a country has to meet, after any debt rescheduling or relief, is one of the factors taken into account on deciding on the level of bilateral aid provision.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 403, he will estimate when the research would be complete in order to assess the impact of AIDS on developing countries.

Mrs. Chalker: We are supporting research on the demographic and economic impact of AIDS in developing countries. We expect this work to be completed in October 1990.

Developing Countries

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development report on strengthening environmental co-operation with developing countries, published in the current year.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes. A copy has been placed in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Guildford Four

38. Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General what discussions he has had with the Director of Public Prosecutions regarding the granting of immunity from prosecution to those giving evidence in the judicial inquiry on the convictions of the Guildford Four.

The Attorney-General: There is a distinction between a full immunity from prosecution, which might be given to a particular witness, and an assurance to that witness that any evidence he might give would not be used against him in criminal proceedings. I have discussed these matters in general terms with the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Civil Legal Aid

39. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what percentage of adults are now estimated to be eligible for civil legal aid; and what was the comparative figure in 1979.

The Attorney-General: Eligibility for legal aid is determined by a great number of factors. Among them is the fact that a large proportion of civil legal aid is for matrimonial proceedings where it is not easy to estimate who might be eligible as proceedings only arise where there has been a breakdown of an existing household. Officials have been considering how it might be possible to make more reliable estimates of current eligibility for civil legal aid. Their work is not yet complete.

Relator Proceedings

40. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has received any representations about his criteria for deciding on the granting of relator proceedings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Representations have been made in the context of recent proceedings brought against Barratt Manchester Ltd. and Bolton metropolitan borough council. The solicitor to the two relators concerned has confirmed that one of them is an undischarged bankrupt. Despite his making the usual inquiries, this was not known to him or the Attorney-General at the time consent was granted. The relator concerned has now withdrawn from the action.

Judicial Review

41. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Attorney-General if he will review the rule that application for judicial review must normally be made within three months from the decision complained of; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government have no plans to review the three month period within which applications for leave to apply for judicial review must normally be made. The present rules both encourage promptness and allow exceptions to be made where necessary.

Legal Profession

42. Mr. Favell: To ask the Attorney-General if he has had any recent representations from the judiciary on the green papers on the legal profession; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor received a number of representations from the judiciary on the Green Papers on the legal profession during the consultation period, but none since the White Paper was published on 19 July.

Justices of the Peace

43. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General how many justices of the peace are currently in post; how many of these are from ethnic minorities; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The total number of active justices of the peace in England and Wales at 1 January 1989 was 28,211. Records are not kept of the racial origins of magistrates but surveys in 1987 indicated that 528 were members of an ethnic minority.

Since then an informal count has revealed that the number of appointments of justices from the ethnic minority has exceeded their proportion in the population age groups from which appointments are normally made. Subject to the personal suitability of candidates, it is desirable that each bench should broadly reflect the local community. Where this is not currently the case, advisory committees seek to redress the balance.

City Fraud

44. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Attorney-General what recent meetings he has had with the Director of Public Prosecutions regarding serious City fraud; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Matters of serious City fraud are largely the responsibility of the serious fraud office. I have met the director and deputy director of the serious fraud office on a number of occasions in the past month to discuss matters of departmental interest.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Attorney-General what information his Department and the Lord Chancellor's Department have on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

The Attorney-General: Between 1 January 1989 and 30 September 1989, 67 per cent. of letters from hon. Members to the Lord Chancellor's Department were answered within 28 days of receipt. Information for earlier periods is not available.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 31 October 1989 at col. 133 to his earlier question concerning my own Department.

Ministers (Prosecution)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if his fiat has been refused in any cases where citizens have attempted to bring a private prosecution against a Government Minister for alleged serious offences; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his power of consent has been used at any time to refuse the prosecution of Government Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: My consent to the institution of criminal proceedings is required only when the statute creating an offence so stipulates. I have not refused any request from a prosecuting authority or any other source for such consent.

House of Fraser

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General if the serious fraud squad was able to secure in Egypt the papers it sought in connection with its inquiries into the House of Fraser report; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Egyptian authorities have recently informed the Crown prosecution service that their inquiries are continuing into the matters in respect of which assistance was sought.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General if the serious fraud squad has yet completed its inquiries into the issues raised by the House of Fraser reports; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The inquiries have necessarily been protracted on account of the nature of the matters under investigation and the need for a substantial proportion of the relevant evidence to be gathered from overseas. I am satisfied that these inquiries, with which I personally keep in touch, are being conducted with all proper expedition. I hope that a decision about this case will be taken shortly.

WALES

Far East (Visit)

14. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his visit to the Far East.

Mr. Peter Walker: In Korea I had talks with 19 top companies and in Japan with 27. As a result I expect a good number of positive decisions to invest in Wales to be made over the next 12 months.

Overseas Investment

15. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of overseas investment in Wales for the period 1979-88.

Mr. Peter Walker: The available figures show that, between 1979 and 1988 inclusive, 360 individual inward investment projects have been secured in Wales, promising over 43,000 jobs. 1988 was a record year in which Wales secured 22 per cent. of the new jobs associated with inward investment to the United Kingdom. The associated capital investment for that year was over £1 billion.

Elderly Patients

16. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to provide the area health authorities with additional resources to enable them to improve hospital facilities for the long stay elderly.

Mr. Grist: Funding of long-stay hospital facilities for the elderly is a matter for district health authorities, using their discretionary resources. In 1989-90 total resources available to district health authorities, the bulk of which will be available for their discretionary use, will amount to over £961 million—an increase of £72 million over 1988-89.

NHS Reform

17. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that no doctor in Wales will be unable to prescribe for his or her patients the medication or drugs most appropriate to their condition if the Government's plans for the Health Service are implemented in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government's White Paper proposals relating to general practitioners' prescribing will not in any way prevent people getting the medicines they need. Our policy is to implement these proposals in Wales.

Regional Development Fund

18. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total value of grants which Wales has received from the European regional development fund in the past 10 years.

Mr. Peter Walker: European regional development fund commitments to Wales since 1979 have amounted to £460 million.

CBI

19. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of Wales Confederation of British Industry; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I last met members of CBI Wales on 12 June during a seminar to consider information technology and the single European market (1992).

National Curriculum (Teachers)

20. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that there will be sufficient teachers qualified in all the necessary subjects to teach the national curriculum in its further stages from September 1990.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The requirements of the national curriculum are being taken fully into account in setting the intakes to initial teacher training, in revising the criteria for initial teacher training courses and in planning the LEA in-service training grant scheme and education support grants.

Puppy Farming

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many planning appeals he has dealt with relating to puppy farming in Wales in the last 12 months.

Mr. Grist: None.

Welsh Language Board

22. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of the work of the Welsh Language Board.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language Board has made encouraging progress in its first year of operation. It has issued voluntary guidelines governing the use of Welsh in both the public and private sectors. It has been instrumental in finding practical solutions to problems encountered by Welsh speakers. I am now discussing with the board next steps in relation to its strategy for the future.

Labour Statistics

23. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in the Principality, at the latest available date, by employers who had no place of business in the Principality 10 years earlier.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information is not available in the form requested. However, on the basis of VAT returns, the stock of businesses in Wales rose by some 11,300 between 1979 and 1988. In addition, the Department's regional data system indicates that manufacturing units employing 10 or more and which have opened since 1979 currently provide 44,500 jobs.

25. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 14 September 1989 the numbers of unemployment claimants in the Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 4,893, 14,970 and 90,594 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made. Unemployment in the hon. Gentleman's constituency was 87 per cent. higher when the Government was re-elected in June 1987 than it is today.

Departmental Anniversary

24. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to mark the 25th anniversary of the setting up of his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: The 25th Anniversary of the establishment of the Welsh Office falls on 1 April 1990. I intend to mark the anniversary in an appropriate manner and will announce my plans in due course.

National Museum

26. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to meet the president and director of the National Museum of Wales to discuss the museum's strategy plan and future funding.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend meets the president and director of the National Museum of Wales to discuss matters of mutual interest as occasion demands. Decisions on the need for a meeting to discuss the museum's next strategy plan will be taken when it is received early next year.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the change in the number of people visiting the National museum in Cardiff since the introduction of entrance charges.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the totals of visitors to the National museum of Wales, Cathays Park, since admission charges were introduced and for the previous comparable period.

Mr. Peter Walker: Recorded visitor numbers were:

December 1988-September 1989 (inclusive) 62,583
December 1987-September 1988 (inclusive) 329,949

The National museum issued a statement on 24 October explaining the reason for these differentials. Comparisons are difficult because in the earlier period both the Chinese Dinosaurs exhibition and the Gerald of Wales exhibition were taking place. Subsequently major building works at the museum have prevented the staging of major exhibitions. During the current financial year the attendance at Cathays park is 3,000 below budget—a shortfall of 8 per cent. Conversely the number of visitors attending the Welsh folk museum is 39,000 above budget —an increase of 20 per cent. The museum believes that these differences were accounted for by the exceptional summer weather and that its experience is in line with other indoor and outdoor attractions in Wales. The museum holds the view that with the reopening of the east wing in March 1990, refurbishment of the major temporary exhibition gallery which is now complete and the sound financial position, the museum could attract major temporary exhibitions which in turn would substantially improve visitor numbers.

Nature Conservancy Council

27. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the implications for Welsh conservation of the proposed merger of the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The proposed new arrangements will mean clearer lines of responsibility and facilitate the development of conservation policies fully sensitive to the needs of Wales.

Welsh Water

28. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of Welsh Water plc; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am in regular contact with the chairman and discuss with him a wide range of issues related to the business of Welsh Water.

29. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek to stop Welsh Water from proceeding with a long sewage outfall from Swansea where this conflicts with any European Community directive.

Mr. Grist: The design and construction of a long sea outfall at Swansea bay is a matter for Dwr Cymru Cyfyngedig. The company will, no doubt, have full regard to all existing statutory requirements in the preparation of its detailed proposals.

Hospital Waiting Lists

30. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the waiting lists and the numbers of patients treated for 1979 and for the latest available corresponding period for (a) in-patients, (b) out-patients and (c) day patients.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is as follows:

	1978-79	1988-89
Patients treated:
In-patient cases	345,305	456,378
New out-patients	425,927	524,113
Day cases	26,456	84,758
	31 March 1979	31 March 1989
Waiting lists:
In-patients	39,527	41,964
Out-patients	57,832	90,745
Day cases	3,397	6,914

Fishguard Harbour

31. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the development of Fishguard harbour, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for Sealink, the port's operators.

Ministerial Visit

32. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his latest visit to mid-Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: My most recent visit was to Builth Wells on 17 October, when I addressed the 1989 Welsh agricultural outlook conference.

Egg Industry

33. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the present state of the egg industry in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The egg laying flock in Wales is relatively small. The market for eggs is very buoyant and prices are stable.

Heartbeat Wales

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the level and sources of funding of the campaign Heartbeat Wales in each year since 1985.

Mr. Grist: Central contributions to Heartbeat Wales, the Welsh heart programme, were identifiable in the programme's first two years of operation, are shown as follows:

	1985-86 £	1986-87 £
Health Education Council	365,000	350,000
Welsh Office	130,000	215,000

From 1 April 1987 responsibility for Heartbeat Wales was assumed by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales, a Welsh Office-funded special health authority, which receives an unhypothecated allocation for its range of activities and expenditure. Funding for the authority in 1987-88 was £1·218 million; and £1·838 million in 1988-89; the allocation for 1989-90 is £2·057 million. In addition to central contributions, Heartbeat Wales has attracted income from sponsorship and other sources.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department holds information on the date of letters, the date they are received in the Department and the date a reply issues for all correspondence from hon. Members since 1984. This enables aggregate information to be produced on the length of time taken to respond to Members' letters.

Electricity Privatisation

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the likely effects on employment in the Welsh coal industry of the privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: This will depend on a number of factors which cannot now be predicted. Among them will be the terms eventually agreed between British Coal, National Power and PowerGen on the future of coal supplies and the competitiveness of mines in Wales.

Channel Tunnel

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the negotiations currently under way between his office and British Rail concerning the nature of the rail links between south Wales and the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Officials took part in British Rail's consultations on the plan of services they are required to present to the Government by the end of this year under S40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987. That report is now awaited.

East Glamorgan General Hospital

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the progress achieved to date in bringing to fruition the planned replacement hospital for the existing East Glamorgan general hospital;

(2) where the planned replacement hospital for East Glamorgan general hospital will be sited.

Mr. Grist: Though a number of planning approval and funding issues remain to be resolved we understand that Mid Glamorgan health authority continues to focus its management effort on securing an area of land at Ynys-y-Plwm for the proposed new district general hospital covering Taff-Ely and Rhondda.

Sewage Disposal

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, when he next meets the Welsh regional chairman of the National Rivers Authority, he will request him to address as a priority, stopping the Welsh water authority from depositing raw sewage from its treatment plants into the rivers, estuaries and bays of Wales.

Mr. Ian Grist: All of Dwr Cymru's sewage treatment plants have consents. It is for the National Rivers Authority to determine what to do if the consents are breached.

The NRA has already been asked to set in hand an urgent review of the way in which discharge consents are set and the way in which compliance with these consents is assessed.

Ynysplwm (Investment)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to encourage inward industrial investment located at the Ynysplwm site at Clantrisant, Mid Glamorgan.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am determined to continue to encourage inward investment into Wales and to this end I am actively involved in promoting all areas of the Principality. The Welsh Development Agency is responsible for identifying and promoting individual sites for inward investment and I am advised that it believes that there may be some land available at Ynysplwm which is suitable for one or more such projects.

Schools (Local Management)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the criteria which will be taken into account in the needs-related component of the formula funding under local management of schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Each LEA was required to devise its own formula having regard to local needs and circumstances and after consultation with its schools. The formula must be based on an assessment of school's objective needs and conform to the requirements of the Education Reform Act and the guidance in circular 36/88. The central determinant of a school's needs should be the number of pupils weighted for age differences.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the implications of local management of schools in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Local management will enable governors and headteachers of all county and voluntary secondary schools, and of larger primary schools, to target funds on their own educational needs and priorities by giving them control over their running costs. It will make schools more responsive to the clients—parents, the local community, and employers—by relating the funding that schools receive mainly to the numbers of pupils. Local management gives the local education authority the lead function in deciding the basis for allocating funds to schools and in supporting them in the efficient and effective provision of education.

The Department is currently considering the LEAs' schemes for the local management of schools.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment his Department has made of the implications of local management of schools on (a) administrative costs at school levels, (b) responsibilities and workloads of head teachers and (c) information technology requirements at school level.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Over time the administrative costs associated with the introduction of local management of schools should be offset by the more effective use of resources. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Science, has asked the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions to advise on the implications of local management for the workload of headteachers when reporting to him on school teachers' pay and conditions for 1990-91.

Up to £1 million has been made available to LEAs in Wales in 1989-90 for the introduction of local management. Of this £500,000 has been earmarked for the introduction of management information systems into schools.

NHS Reform

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the Member for Alyn and Deeside of 30 October, when he expects to be in a position to make a statement on staffing requirements under the proposals of the White Paper, "Working for Patients".

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Monday 30 October at col. 34. The manpower implications of the proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients" are being considered as part of the ongoing manpower planning and management process within the NHS in Wales alongside a number of other initiatives. A number of these initiatives naturally interrelate and to some degree overlap for example, it is likely that the White Paper proposals will require a further strengthening of the personnel, finance and information technology functions within the NHS in Wales, in addition to the work that is already being undertaken in these areas as part of the continuing development of the management of the service.

Similarly, the proposals contained in a review of the Combined Training Institute at Cardiff and in an option appraisal of nurse education arrangements in Wales as part of the wider task of implementing Project 2000 are being considered alongside the outcome of the manpower resource planning exercise. The proposals contained in the White Paper overlay such initiatives to some extent and will be taken into account in that context. The annual manpower resource planning exercise will enable the NHS in Wales to take stock of the manpower requirements over the next decade.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his plans for a scheme of transitional relief to help community chargepayers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: In July I announced that the average community charge in Wales for 1990-91 would be £175, provided that Welsh local authorities budgeted in line with my plans. This will benefit all Welsh community chargepayers. In addition to this a three-year scheme of community charge transitional relief is to be introduced which will provide further assistance to personal chargepayers in Wales. The cost of the scheme will be £17·5 million in 1990-91.

I am placing in the Library copies of a paper setting out my proposals, which have been the subject of consultation with the Welsh local authority associations. The scheme gives protection to those facing significant increases over their 1989-90 domestic rates bills. It will provide broadly the same protection as that provided by a district safety net but without the need for contributions from chargepayers.

The scheme I am announcing today will mean that in 1990-91 personal chargepayers in communities where domestic ratable values are low will face an increase of no more than £25 per year—less than 50p a week—over the average 1989-90 domestic rates bill for each adult in their community area, provided that local authorities spend in line with my plans. Residents of many communities and some inner city communities will be protected from large increases as we introduce the new system.

In bringing forward these proposals, I must emphasise the important responsibility which now falls upon Welsh local authorities in their budget-making for 1990-91. The announcement I have made must not be taken by authorities as a signal to increase spending; rather, I look to Welsh local authorities to ensure, in setting their budgets for 1990-91, that the full benefits of these new arrangements flow through to chargepayers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales at what level he proposes to set the total of revenue support grant, the national non-domestic rate multiplier and the distributable amount of national non-domestic rate for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I announced on 20 July that I proposed to set the total of aggregate external finance (the level of central Government support for local authority revenue spending) at £1,733 million, an increase of 8·6 per cent. over the comparable level for 1989-90. This support comprises three component elements: revenue support grant, the national non-domestic rates distributable amount, and relevant specific grants.

I now estimate that the amount of business rates to be distributed in 1990-91 (the distributable amount) will be £454 million. This is the amount (adjusted to allow for certain technical factors) which I expect charging authorities to receive in respect of rates paid by private businesses, nationalised industries, and local authorities themselves, together with a contribution in respect of Crown property. This amount includes an element from the business sector which is broadly the same in real terms as the equivalent amount for 1989-90. In arriving at the distributable amount I have estimated that the national non-domestic rating multiplier for 1990-91 will be 38p; but this figure will be provisional until I have final information about the effects of the revaluation and other relevant factors.

I estimate that relevant specific grants towards local authority revenue expenditure will total £154·2 million. Further details will be available at the time of the Autumn Statement.

I propose that the total of revenue support grant should be £1,124·8 million. I am today consulting Welsh local authorities and their associations on this amount.

I will also shortly be notifying the associations of my proposals for the distribution and population reports, together with exemplifications of the likely effect of my proposals on individual authorities. These will be based on provisional population figures from community charge registers. The Welsh local authority associations share the view that it would not be helpful to publish exemplifications at this stage.

HEALTH

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will implement a scheme of compensation over and above the £10 million granted in November 1987, for haemophilia HIV positive people who have contracted the virus from infected imported blood products during National Health Service treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The £10 million that the Government provided to set up the Macfarlane Trust was an ex-gratia payment and not compensation. I understand that the trust funds are not yet fully committed, but, as we made clear when the £10 million grant was announced, we shall not be closed to any representations about further funding which may be made at a later date.

Some haemophiliacs who are HIV positive are now pursuing compensation through the courts and I am advised that this matter is now sub judice.

Wheelchairs (Children)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the demand for, and availability of, electronic and hi-tech wheelchairs for disabled children.

Mr. Freeman: The Disablement Services Authority is the special health authority responsible for the provision of artificial limbs and wheelchairs. My hon. Friend should address his question to the DSA.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will create a specific section dealing with the problem of child abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is a policy section specifically concerned with the problem of child abuse within the Department of Health. The section draws on professional advice from within and outside the Department, and, through the interdepartmental group on child abuse, works with other Government Departments to provide a co-ordinated approach to child protection.

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate a research project to discover how many clinics there are currently which have been set up to help child abusers overcome their problem.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department is aware of a number of clinics and other facilities and projects working with child abusers in a variety of settings. A definitive count of such clinics is not available, since some offer a specialist service while others help child abusers as part of a wider programme.

Health Authority Boundaries

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations are taking place on health authority boundary changes in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Consultation is taking place on the proposed transfer of north east Westminster from Bloomsbury health authority (North East Thames regional health authority) to Parkside health authority (North West Thames regional health authority). A consultation document has been issued, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

A further consultation exercise will take place later this year on a proposal by North East Thames regional health authority to merge the remaining part of Bloomsbury health authority with Islington health authority (also in North East Thames).

Erythropoietin

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the Minister of State's reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 23 October about the prescribing of erythropoietin for patients with kidney failure, if he has now assessed the information received from health authorities about the likely need for the drug and its expenditure implications; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have nothing to add to the reply that my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) gave to the right hon. Member and my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 23 October at columns 316-17.

Medical Education and Research

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in view of the proposed Health Service arrangements, if he will establish a mechanism for evaluating the impact of the changes in medical education and research.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As was made clear in the White Paper "Working for Patients", the Government are firmly committed to maintaining the quality of medical education and research and we recognise the complexity and special needs of these areas.

The steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education, the standing committee on postgraduate medical education, and the Chief Medical Officer's expert advisory group are considering the impact that the proposed changes may have on medical education.

Beverley Lewis

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement about the Beverley Lewis case;

(2) whether he has any plans to review the Mental Health Act in the light of the Beverley Lewis case.

Mr. Freeman: The death of Beverley Lewis is a very tragic case. We have asked for reports on it from the health and social services authorities concerned. These reports and the inquest findings will be examined very carefully to see what needs to be done to close any gaps in legislation or in guidance to the authorities.

Mr. Jeremy Harrison (Correspondence)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter from Mr. Jeremy Harrison, a chiropodist of 433 Aigburth road, Liverpool 17.

Mr Freeman: I met Mr. Harrison in the presence of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 25 September 1989 to discuss a number of issues concerning the practice of chiropody by state-registered and non-state-registered practitioners. The issues are very complex and I will be giving a considered reply to the questions raised by Mr. Harrison at this meeting as soon as possible.

Blood Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are the anticipated levels of supply of factor VIII from the blood products laboratory, Elstree, over the last 12 months in monthly figures;

(2) what are the anticipated levels of supply of plasma to the blood products laboratory in Elstree over the next 12 months' in monthly figures;

(3) what were the quantities of plasma held in stockpile at the blood products laboratory, Elstree, over the last 12 months, in monthly figures;

(4) what were the quantities of plasma received at the blood products laboratory, Elstree, over the last 12 months, in monthly figures.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the tables.

North West RHA

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account is taken of inflation in the financial allocations to the North West regional health authority in connection with the reimbursement of costs for caring for the former residents of large mental institutions; and what allowance was made to that authority for the years 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: In general, allocations to regional health authorities do not make separate provision for individual clinical services or client groups. It is for authorities to determine how the resources available to them should be spent in line with national policy guidelines and their assessment of local needs and priorities.

Listeriosis

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give details of any information he has received about outbreaks of listeriosis in Mexico, Canada and California;

(2) if he will give the numbers of reported cases of listeriosis for each year since 1978;

(3) when he first became aware of any research programmes into listeriosis carried out in the United States of America, Austria and West Germany;

(4) when he first received the World Health Organisation report entitled "Foodborne Listeriosis" ;

(5) whether he has received advice from bodies representing informed medical opinion as to whether the public should be made aware of the risks of listeriosis.

Mr. Freeman: The number of reported cases of listeriosis for each year since 1978 is as follows:

	Number
1978	[1]87
1979	[1]70
1980	[1]75
1981	[1]86
1982	[1]77

1985	149
1986	137
1987	259
1988	291
1989[2]	231

[1] These figures cannot be compared with later figures which reflect a change in reporting systems.

[2] Figures are from January to September only and are provisional.

Information on listeriosis in California and Canada is available in evidence given to the Social Services Committee in its examination of food poisoning, listeria and listeriosis earlier this year. Of particular interest was the following table. Mexican-style soft cheese was implicated in the Los Angeles (California) outbreak in 1985. The Department has no information on any outbreak of listeriosis in Mexico.

The report of the WHO informal working group on foodborne listeriosis was published in May 1988.

The government have been working with all interests, including the medical profession, since the end of 1987 to assess and decide how best to deal with potential hazards from listeria monocytogenes as evidence of cases of listeriosis linked to food emerged in Europe. The Government have kept in close touch with relevant research worldwide.

Mentally Ill patients

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the experiment in release of long-stay mentally ill patients known as the "Daily Living Programme".

Mr. Freeman: The pattern of care and treatment used in the daily living programme has been used very successfully for some years both in parts of the United States of America and in Australia.

The present research programme is to assess the value of this pattern of care in an urban environment in England. The daily living programme is designed to give people with early and acute mental illness the treatment that they need without unnecessary use of in-patient care. The patients in the daily living programme can be admitted or readmitted to hospital whenever it is considered necessary by their clinical team and preliminary results show that over 80 per cent. of patients in the programme have been admitted to hospital during their time on the programme. Patients in the programme can stay in hospital for as long as is judged necessary. The daily living programme is not concerned with the rehabilitation of long-stay patients. The programme is a research project, which has been partly funded by the Department of Health for three years until September 1990. A full evaluation is due at the end of 1990.

Health Authorities (Internal Markets)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities that are to be tested in the development of internal markets; what services are to be tested; and when he hopes to report on the results of the scheme.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All health authorities are engaged upon development work to get ready for the first contracts for health services. Subject to the passage of the necessary legislation these should be operative from April 1991. We are however funding certain authorities whose development work is more advanced. The purpose of this funding is to enable them both to progress faster and to document their experience for the benefit of those authorities who are at a less advanced stage.

The projects are for:

(a) the development of contracts for services between three DHAs and hospitals within their own boundaries, hospitals in other districts and with the private sector. The DHAs are Cambridge, Peterborough and Huntingdon. The project will produce regular reports of its work, the next being due in March 1990.

(b) the development of management contracts between four DHAs and hospitals they directly manage. The DHAs are West Norfolk and Wisbech, West Suffolk, East Suffolk, and Great Yarmouth and Waveney. The project will produce regular reports of its work, the next being due in March 1990.

(c) The development of service contracts between authorities in respect of flows of patients across district boundaries. The project involves all DHAs within the South Western region. The project will produce regular reports, the next being due early in 1990.

The Department is in addition funding some other projects concerned with related aspects of the "Working for Patients" proposals.

Mental Health Act Commission

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has yet received the option appraisal on the future location of the Mental Health Act Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. We welcome the commission's decision to centralise its administration and, in the light of the information contained in the commission's report of its review, and in the option appraisal, have decided that the office should be located in Nottingham.

Hyperactivity

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is being undertaken into allergies leading to hyperactivity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The Medical Research Council, which receives a grant-in-aid from this Department, is the main agency through which the Government support medical research. The council is not currently supporting research into allergies leading to hyperactivity, though it is supporting other work on hyperactivity. The council is always willing to consider soundly-based proposals for new research programmes in competition with other proposals.

Cytomegalovirus

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department funds into the foetal disease cytomegalovirus.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from this Department, is the main agency through which the Government support medical research. I understand that the council is supporting the following projects concerning cytomegalovirus:

Dr. J. D. Oram, Molecular Genetic Laboratory, Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton.
Project Title:
Expression of a human cytomegalovirus glycoprotein genes in cultures of escherichia coli.

Dr. G. H. Farrar, Molecular Genetics Laboratory, Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton.
Project Title:
Isolation and characterisation of human cylomegalovirus glycoproteins.

Professor C. A. Mims, Department of Microbiology, United Medical School Guy's and St. Thomas's London.
Project Title:
Studies of the interaction of murine cytomegalovirus with the immune system.

Dr. P. D. Griffiths, Department of Microbiology, Royal Free Hospital School of Medicine, London.
Project Title:
Studies on the protein composition of cytomegalovirus found in the body fluids.

Professor Catherine Peckham, Department of Paediatric Epidemiology, Institute of Child Health, London.
Project Title:
Long-term follow-up of children with congenital cytomegalovirus infection.

Dr. Minson, Department of Pathology, University of Cambridge.
Project Title:
The indentification and characterisation of the glycoproteins in human cytomegalovirus.

Dr. V. C. Emery, Department of Virology, Royal Free Hospital School of Medicine, London.
Project Title:
Quantification of cytomegalovirus in clinical samples.

Additionally, research on cytomegalovirus may be being pursued by university departments and medical schools with support from UFC block grants and by health authorities; but information on this is not collected centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mobility Allowance

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the total cost to the Exchequer of extending mobility allowance at (a) current levels of payment and (b) proposed updated levels of payment to people aged over 75 years of age.

Mr. Scott: Mobility allowance must be claimed before age 66 and in respect of disability arising before age 65. Section 8 of the Social Security Act 1989 has already provided for existing recipients of the allowance who reach age 75 to continue to receive it to age 80. The annual cost of this will rise to £8 million in 1991-92. The cost of complete abolition of all age limits would be nearly £1·5 billion a year at current rates and nearly £1·6 billion at the proposed new rates.

Unemployed Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) in what circumstances an unemployed person in receipt of income support who has their benefit suspended for two weeks for not actually seeking work will (a) continue to receive uninterrupted income support and eligibility for passported benefits such as housing benefit, less the 40 per cent. deduction to their personal allowance and (b) have to claim individually for a hardship payment; and if he will make a statement;

(2) under what circumstances an unemployed person in receipt only of unemployment benefit who has that benefit suspended for two weeks for not actively seeking work would (a) automatically be paid income support, less the 40 per cent. personal allowance deduction and (b) have to make a separate hardship claim for income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Normally payment of benefit will be suspended when a question arises about whether an unemployed claimant has been actively seeking employment. However, there can still be entitlement to income support at a reduced rate (and eligibility for passported benefits including housing benefit) if the adjudication officer decides that the claimant (or member of his/her family) would suffer hardship if benefit was not paid.

The adjudication officer should consider the question of hardship automatically for those already in receipt of income support. Where it is decided that benefit should continue the local office will do its best to ensure payments remain uninterrupted.

Those in receipt only of unemployment benefit when the actively seeking employment question arises need to make a separate claim before the adjudication officer can consider whether a payment of income support can be made.

Allowances

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the information in his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) about child and family allowances of 7 June, Official Report, columns 563-66, expressed in April prices to include the years 1989-90.

Family Credit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families were or are (a) entitled to and (b) receiving family credit in 1988 and 1989; and what is his estimate of the number of families who will be entitled to it in 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In 1988 the number of families eligible for family credit was about 500,000 amongst employees: information covering the self-employed is not available. Estimates of the eligible population in 1989 and 1990 cannot be made until information from the family expenditure surveys for those years becomes available.

During 1988 the average number of families receiving family credit was 277,000, of which 253,000 were employee cases. The latest information for 1989 is for July when the total family credit caseload was over 320,000.

Correspondence

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the replies given to the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham in his letter dated 28 September.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is set out as follows:

Question: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures giving the disposable incomes, after taking into account means-tested benefits of single wage married couples with two children under five years and mortgages of (a) £20,000, (b) £30,000, (c) £40,000 and (d) £50,000 firstly when out of work and receiving Income Support and secondly when in work earning £100, £150, £200, £250 and £300 a week.

The information requested is set out in the table below:

Total net income of a married couple with two children (aged 3 and 4) who are purchasing their home in April 1989

Capital outstanding on mortgage £	Total net income: Unemployed and claiming Income Support In receipt of Income Support for less than 16 weeks £	 In receipt of Income Support for over 16 weeks £
20,000	115·57	135·47
30,000	125·52	155·48
40,000	138·79	181·91
50,000	152·06	208·45

Notes:

1. Total net income on income support comprises social security benefits plus help with housing costs, plus regular benefits in kind. This includes mortgage interest based on a gross interest rate of 13·8 per cent.
2. Assumes average local authority rates appropriate to family size.

Total net income: in work

Gross earnings	£ per week
100	128·38
150	137·07
200	167·53
250	200·53
300	233·53

Note: Total net income is defined as take-home pay plus social security benefits.

Question: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, how many and what percentage of families with children have mortgages distinguishing between working and out of work families and between those who earn: (a) under £150 per week, (b) £150-200, (c) £200-300 and (d) over £300.

The information requested is set out in the table below:

Number and percentage of families with children who have mortgages 1986

Gross weekly earned income	Working families with mortgages 000's	Percentage of all such working families	Weekly mortgage interest £
Under £150	450	46	22·90
£150-£200	580	62	21·70
£200-300	1,400	79	26·10
Over £300	1,420	88	40·70

Gross weekly earned income	Working families with mortgages 000's	Percentage of all such working families	Weekly mortgage interest £
Total	3,850	73	30·50

	Unemployed families 000's	Percentage of all unemployed families	Weekly mortgage interest £
Total	80	19	21·30

Source: 1986 Family Expenditure Survey.

Notes:

1. A "working family" is defined as one where at least one of the two parents is in full-time employment or self-employment (working 24 or more hours each week for employees in employment and 30 hours or more for the self-employed). "Unemployed" couples with children are defined by the supplementary benefit status of the head of the family.

2. For working families, gross weekly earned income excluded income from state benefits.

Community Charge

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will republish and complete his reply to the question dated 24 July, from the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham, showing the effect of the community charge on the numbers of (a) families and (b) persons dependent on means-tested benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The community charge transitional household relief scheme for England announced by my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, West (Mr. Hunt) on 11 October will have a considerable impact on the numbers of people who will get community charge benefit. Detailed work on these estimates has not yet been completed. I will write to my right hon. Friend after the Government's public expenditure plans for 1990-91 have been made public. In broad terms between a quarter and a third of those liable to pay the full community charge will be entitled to community charge benefit.

Income Support

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of working families with children and a mortgage, whose net incomes after income tax, national insurance contribution, mortgage and local authority rates were within (a) 80 per cent. and (b) 70-79 per cent. of their income support entitlements.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that in 1989-90 approximately 10,000 working heads of families with children and mortgages had net incomes within 80 per cent. of their potential out-of-work net incomes. A further 20,000 had net incomes between 70 and 79 per cent. of their out-of-work net incomes. (Net in-work income is defined as gross wages less appropriate tax and national insurance deductions and housing costs. Full take-up of in-work benefits is assumed where appropriate.)

Income Levels

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to reply to the question from the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham dated 24 June, showing the number of working families and out-of-work families with children at specified income levels.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I will reply as soon as possible.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report details of those sections of his Department which have been relocated in the last five years, indicating the sites to which they have been moved; whether consideration is being given to future relocation of London-based sections of his Department to sites outside London; and whether the central borders of Scotland has been identified as a suitable area for any future moves.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Full details of all moves of sections of the Department over the last five years are not available but they include the following where sizeable numbers of staff are involved:

1985—Legal Aid work transferred to Preston

1987—Retirement pension work transferred to Newcastle upon Tyne

1987—Agency benefit work transferred to Newcastle upon Tyne

1987—Departmental records work transferred to Nelson, Lancashire

1988—Development work on the computerisation of social security benefits transferred to Lytham St. Annes.

My right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State announced on 16 January 1989 that 1,060 jobs in total would be relocated from London to Glasgow, Wigan and Belfast. This relocation is under way and should be completed during the summer of 1991. The sites for relocation have been chosen in line with the Government policy on relocation announced by my right hon. Friend the former Paymaster General in March 1988 taking into account labour markets, value for money and increases in efficiency.

Under this policy my right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State also announced on 23 June 1988 that he was considering a report on the possibility of moving some of the Department's HQ work away from London. We hope to make an announcement about this shortly.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on how the independent living fund is helping disabled people in Suffolk and Norfolk; how many people are benefiting; in what ways; and how much is being paid to them.

Mr. Scott: The independent living fund enables severely disabled people to live independently in the community by providing regular financial help towards the cost of personal care and domestic support. The fund can also make one-off payments for specific items of equipment if this would reduce care costs. To date, the fund has helped more than 2,000 people, with weekly payments ranging from less than £5 to more than £400. I regret that separate information is not available for Suffolk and Norfolk.

Income Support

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of income support is allocated for poll tax payments in (a) Bristol, (b) south-west region and (c) nationally.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Income support levels were adjusted on a national basis in April this year to include help towards the average contribution to the community charge that recipients would be expected to pay. The amounts included were £1·15 a week for single people aged 18-24, £1·30 a week for single people aged 25 or over and £2·30 a week for couples. These amounts now form part of the overall benefit levels which will be up-rated from April next year.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many pensioner couples have a total income currently of less than £80 a week;

(2) how many single pensioners have a total income currently of less than £60 a week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available information refers to 1986. At that time, 1989 gross incomes of £60 and £80 would have been the equivalent of £51·35 and £68·47 respectively. In 1986, 25 per cent. of single pensioners had gross incomes below £51·35 and 3 per cent. of pensioner couples had gross incomes below £68·47.

Severe Hardship

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the criteria he uses for assessing (a) severe hardship when considering applications for entitlement to benefit from 16 and 17-year-olds and (b) whether individuals in these age groups are genuinely estranged from their parents.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Secretary of State has the power to direct that, where unavoidable severe hardship would result if benefit were to be withheld, a young person will be entitled to income support even though that young person would ordinarily not be so entitled. Such decisions are made by officials authorised to act on his behalf. Each case is considered on its individual merits and in the light of its particular circumstances. There can therefore be no fixed criteria. Examples of factors which may be considered include: the young person's health and vulnerability, including the threat of homelessness; the availability of any income or savings; the prospects of a speedy entry into YTS; the availability of casual work; whether the person has any friends or relatives who can offer him or her accommodation or other assistance; and the financial commitments of the person and the prospect of postponing any payments.

A young person who is estranged from his or her parents, and who has of necessity to live away from home because of that estrangement, may be entitled to income suport during the child benefit extension period. Decisions in such cases are made by adjudication officers. Guidance to adjudication officers is given by the chief adjudication officer in the adjudication officers guide, a copy of which is in the Library.

Contracted-out Rebates

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest estimates of the probable rates of contracted-out rebate for each quinquennium from now until the year 2018.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 30 October 1989]: The Government Actuary estimates that, on the same assumptions as those set out in his report "Review of certain contracting out terms" (Cm. 110), in particular assuming that the weightings by age and sex remain the same, the contracted out contribution reduction in successive five year periods would be as follows:

	Per cent.
1993-98	4·8
1998-2003	4·3
2003-08	3·9
2008-13	3·6
2013-18	3·5
2018 onwards	3·4

These figures assume that the 0·4 per cent. additional margin which has been included in the rebate of 5·8 per cent for 1988-93 will not be added in later periods. The gradually reducing level of the rebate reflects the declining proportion of those contracted-out who will be accruing guaranteed minimum pensions at an accelerated rate.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

CAP (Fraud)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the extent of fraud in the common agricultural policy and its monetary value.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to estimate the extent of fraud in the common agricultural policy since, by definition, undetected fraud cannot be measured. In 1988, 482 cases of irregularity (the definition of which goes wider than fraud) were reported by member states with a value of 121 mecu (£82 million). These cases represent about 0.4 per cent. of CAP expenditure in that year.

Green Pound

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to seek a further green pound devaluation.

Mr. Curry: It is customary to take decisions on the level of green rates at the time of the annual price fixing.

Conservation

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Ministry gives to farmers about conserving the countryside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service offers advice to farmers on the conservation and enhancement of the natural beauty and amenity of the countryside. This covers such topics as the retention and maintenance of hedgerows, trees, areas of scrub, ditches and other wildlife habitats as well as, where possible, the creation of new ones.

Bovine Somatotropin

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the use of bovine somatotropin to boost milk production; and if he has any plans to amend the Medicines Act 1968 so as to provide for greater control over the use of such substances.

Mr. Maclean: The Scrutiny Committee has recommended that a European Commission proposal to ban the use of BST until the end of 1990 should be debated, and arrangements are in hand. Meanwhile the scientific assessment of BST continues with the assistance of data generated in authorised field trials here and in other countries. The Medicines Act already provides strict safeguard controls by requiring that such substances must be licensed and that they must first be demonstrated to be both safe and effective in use. I have no plans to amend the Act.

Labelling

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the introduction of nutritional labelling.

Mr. Maclean: We are taking an active part in negotiation of the European Commission's nutrition labelling proposals and hope that a common position will be reached soon. The proposals are similar to the Ministry's nutrition labelling guidelines and provide for a voluntary system of nutrition labelling with a mandatory format so that consumers can compare products more easily. Nutrition labelling would be compulsory only when a nutrition claim was made. There is provision for a three-year lead-in period to allow labels to be changed and, given the close resemblance of the guidelines to the Commission proposals, I hope that manufacturers and retailers will be encouraged to provide as much nutrition information as possible within their resources according to the guidelines until Community legislation is in place.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the debate on nutritional labelling in Standing Committee on 1 November 1989.

Friends of the Earth

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of Friends of the Earth; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: I met officials of the Friends of the Earth on 31 October. We had a broad-ranging and constructive discussion covering many areas of mutual interest.

Fish Diseases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there has been any change in the incidence of diseases in cod and other fish caught in British coastal waters in the past year.

Mr. Curry: The evidence is that there has been no change in the incidence of disease in cod or other fish caught in British coastal waters in the past year. Disease is a natural phenomenon in fish as in all animals and can vary seasonally.

Papain

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will describe the effects of the tenderiser papain on the organs of a living animal.

Mr. Maclean: Research carried out by the Ministry has established that the tenderiser has no effect on the living animal. In the event of a delay between treatment and slaughter the enzyme is excreted harmlessly.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what evidence he has on the presence of residues of the tenderiser papain in partly cooked/rare meat;

(2) what information he has on the presence of residues of the tenderiser papain in butchers' meat.

Mr. Maclean: To be effective, papain must be present in the meat during cooking. It is introduced at levels of less than five parts per million. Cooking activates and then destroys the enzyme. It is a natural vegetable protein approved as safe for use in food by the United Kingdom's expert advisory committees.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the purposes for which set-aside land will be employed by British farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Under the terms of the scheme, participants may use land for permanent or rotational fallow, for woodland, or for a range of non-agricultural uses. The most popular option is permanent fallow, which has attracted about 80 per cent. of uptake.

Eggs

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many prosecutions have been initiated as a result of the discovery by his Department of free-range eggs which have not been packed in a packing station being sold from shops.;

(2) how many staff are employed by his Department in ensuring that free-range eggs are not sold in shops unless they have been through a packing station;

(3) what is the best estimate of the total number of shops in the United Kingdom currently selling free-range eggs which have not been packed in a packing station;

(4) what was the total cost to public funds of the visit made by Mr. Sweetman, of the regional egg marketing inspectorate, at Leeds, to the Good Life shop, Wooler, on 1 November, in connection with the sale of free-range eggs; and what was the amount of time spent by the officer concerned (a) in travelling for the purpose of the visit and (b) at the premises;

(5) whether he has any plans to publicise to consumers and to retailers the regulations restricting the sale of free-range eggs from shops which have not been packed in a packing station.

Mr. Curry: EC regulations require that all hens' eggs sold by retail (other than eggs sold by the producer directly to the final consumer on the producer's own premises, by door-to-door deliveries or in a local public market) are graded and packed by authorised packing centres. This applies to free range eggs as well as to those produced in other systems.

Enforcement of the regulations at retail level is a matter for local authorities and not my Department, and I have no estimate of the number of shops which currently breach the regulations. When requested, my egg marketing inspectorate gives assistance to the local authorities but it is not possible to identify what proportion of this assistance is devoted to the enforcement of the rules specific to free range eggs. The visit in question was made during the course of routine visits in Northumberland in the period 1-2 November by the regional egg marketing inspector.

The present rules concerning the sale of free range eggs came into operation on 16 July 1985 and were publicised (with other changes to the regulations) in a trade press notice of 17 July 1985 (a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House). This was reinforced by a further press notice on 27 August 1987 (a copy of this is also in the Library). My Department has taken pains to explain these rules to all who enquire about them or whose businesses include the marketing of eggs. We shall continue to offer such advice as necessary.

BSE

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what international co-operation in research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy is currently being undertaken by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 2 November 1989]: An international collaborative project to determine the transmissibility of bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) to mink is currently being planned with colleagues in the USA.

International co-operation in research into BSE has been and will continue to be discussed in various international fora, including the EEC and the Organisation Internationale des Epizooties. In addition, a round table on BSE, attended by US and European delegates, was held in the United States of America in June 1989. From these discussions further collaborative research studies may be instituted.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has commissioned on set-aside in Scotland; and what plans he has to review existing provisions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him today.

Hill Livestock Scheme

Mr. David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to representations from the Scottish NFU regarding the MacSharry proposals for the HLCA system.

Mr. Rifkind: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 18 October at col. 129-30.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment Review Interviews

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, when an unemployed claimant is at a review interview and an employment service counsellor expresses doubt about whether they are available for or actively seeking work and completes a UB672, the claimant is entitled to ask for and receive a copy of the UB672; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: A copy of the UB672 would not normally be issued to the claimant as the form is an internal document used by the employment service to refer cases of doubt to the independent adjudication authorities.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the enterprise allowance scheme to ensure that adequate security of income is provided for potential entrepreneurs with family responsibilities who are dependent on social security.

Mr. Eggar: The enterprise allowance scheme is not a benefit. It is intended to supplement business income during the early months of trading while the business is being established. The allowance is higher than previous benefit for 70 per cent. of entrants. Recipients with family responsibilities may also qualify for in-work benefits such as family credits depending on their circumstances.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will estimate the number of employed and self-employed people in the northern region for each year since 1983.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is as follows:

Employees in Employment and Self Employed for Northern Region

(June each year) (Thousands)

	Employees in Employment	Self employed
1983	1,057	91
1984	1,059	92
1985	1,057	104
1986	1,061	105
1987	1,068	108
1988	1,094	113
1989	1,088	117

(Unadjusted for seasonal variations)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many registered unemployed persons there were in Liverpool on the latest available date; and how many registered job vacancies there were in Liverpool on that date.

Mr. Nicholls: The following information is available from the Library. In September 1989, there were 66,636 unemployed claimants in Liverpool travel-to-work area. In the closest aggregation of jobcentres there were 3,469 unfilled vacancies. Research shows that nationally only about a third of vacancies in the economy are notified to jobcentres.

Child Care

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to provide child care facilities for part-time workers.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Government welcome measures taken by employers to help employees, including part-time employees, combine work and family responsibilities such as the provision of creche facilities, flexible working hours and family leave. However the Government consider that it is for employers and employees to decide which arrangements best suit their individual needs and resources.

Child Care Provision

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures his Department is taking to encourage workplace creches and other child care provision to enable mothers to return to work; and what representations he has had on this subject.

Mr. Nicholls: I am continuing to take every opportunity to encourage employers to help employees combine work and family responsibilities.

The Government welcome measures taken by employers including assistance with child care, flexible working hours, more part-time work and at higher occupational levels, and family leave. However, we believe that it is for employers and employees to decide which arrangements for combining work and family responsibilities best suit their individual needs and resources.

The Government are also taking steps to encourage the growth of childcare provision to assist working parents through the ministerial group on women's issues of which I am a member. The group recently announced progress on its five point plan designed to pave the way for the provision of child care to suit family needs. Within the last two years I and colleagues in the Employment Department have answered 12 questions in this House on this subject, received 29 letters from hon. Members and 34 from members of the public.

I have discussed the question of child care with my Advisory Committee on Women's Employment. This committee includes the chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission, my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), the hon. Member for Barking, (Ms. Richardson), representatives of the CBI, TUC and the Women's National Commission. I have also had discussions with the National Council for One Parent Families, the Working Mothers Association, and Pre-School Playgroups Association, Gingerbread and the National Childminding Association.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report details of those sections of his Department which have been relocated in the last five years, indicating the sites to which they have been moved; whether consideration is being given to future relocation of London-based sections of his Department to sites outside London; and whether the central borders of Scotland has been identified as a suitable area for any future moves.

Mr. Eggar: On 2 August 1989, I announced that 1,100 jobs from my Department's headquarters will be moved to Runcorn and Sheffield over the next two to three years. This represents another major dispersal of head office jobs in the employment department group to the north; and will mean that since 1979 over 5,000 administrative head office jobs have been relocated in the north. Previous major dispersals have been to Runcorn, to Sheffield, where the Manpower Services Commission was based and Bootle where parts of the Health and Safety Executive are now based.

When considering possible regional locations I looked at a range of factors and sites and concluded that, for operational and logistical reasons, jobs should be moved only to those locations where my Department has existing headquarters establishments.

When this stage of relocation is complete more that four out of five of my Department's administrative head office jobs will be located outside London. I am persuaded that there is unlikely to be scope for any further relocation.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the additional responsibilities given to the Health and Safety Executive since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 laid upon the Health and Safety Commission and Executive responsibility for virtually all aspects of industrial health and safety, and most aspects of the protection of the public from work activity. Within this overall competence, the Commission or Executive have acquired the following new responsibilities since 1979:

(i) carriage by road, classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous substances;
(ii) notification of new substances before they are placed on the market and of existing substances;
(iii) action under the European directive on the control of industrial major accident hazards, including new responsibility for protection of the environment from hazardous installations;
(iv) mains gas safety;
(v) asbestos licensing;
(vi) the enforcement of part 3 of the Food and Environment Protection Act and its related Control of Pesticides regulations;
(vii) responsibility under the Control of Pesticides Regulations for the registration and assessment of non-agricultural pesticides.
(viii) new and expanded nuclear safety work including preparations for licensing UKAEA sites and responsibilities from April 1990 in connection with nuclear safety research.

In addition new or substantially expanded work has been acquired in connection with the control of dangerous substances in harbour areas, radiation and noise and the health and safety implications of the development and use of new technology including programmable electronics and biotechnology. There has also been a significant growth of EC activity and directives in areas affecting safety and health, and a significant growth in public and international interest in relevant environmental and major hazards issues.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of Health and Safety Executive staff in each year since 1975.

Mr. Nicholls: The total number of permanent staff employed by the Health and Safety Executive in each year since 1975 is as follows:

	Number
1 August
1975	2,937
1 April
1976	3,282·5
1977	3,917
1978	4,104·5

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of (a) factory inspectors and (b) agricultural inspectors who left the Health and Safety Executive in each year since 1975.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the numbers of factory and agricultural inspectors who left HSE since July 1979 is as follows. Information is not available before 1976 and for 1976 to June 1979 could be obtained only at dispropoprtionate cost.

	Factor inspectors	Agricultural inspectors
[1] 1979-80	27	7
1980-81	32	8
1981-82	53	9
1982-83	22	7
1983-84	26	5
1984-85	28	8
1985-86	30	7
1986-87	35	7
1987-88	45	5
1988-89	38	5

[1] Figures cover July 1979 to March 1980 only.

The figures include inspectors who resigned, transferred to other Civil Service posts or retired.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the level of funding to the Health and Safety Executive in each year since 1975, expressed at 1975 price-levels.

Mr. Nicholls: The level of gross financial provision to the Health and Safety Commission and Executive for each year since 1975, expressed at the 1974-75 price level, is as follows:

	£ 000s
1974-75	13,320
1975-76	22,701
1976-77	26,802
1977-78	28,203
1978-79	27,555
1979-80	27,796
1980-81	31,275
1981-82	31,257
1982-83	30,224
1983-84	31,339
1984-85	30,566
1985-86	30,521
1986-87	29,831
1987-88	30,395
1988-89	30,092

For consistency, the figures have been adjusted to remove funds provided during 1981-82 to 1984-85 for HSE's dispersal to Bootle; and to remove provision in earlier years for the industrial air pollution inspectorate which transferred to the Department of Environment in 1987.

Agricultural Inspectors

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number and location of agricultural inspectors covering the east of Scotland area in each year since 1975.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on agricultural inspectors' location, corresponding to the Scotland east area, is available only from 1 April 1985 and is as follows:

Number of agricultural inspectors in:

	Edinburgh	Aberdeen	Inverness	Dundee[1]	Total
1 April
1985	5	2	2	1	10
1986	6	3	2	1	12

[1] Agricultural inspectors joined HSE from MAFF from March 1976 with the field force being in place in March 1977.

Notes:
1. Figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.
2. Totals for Great Britain include inspectors in the inspectorate's and in HSE's headquarters engaged on line management work or contributing to international and national policy or standards work.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number and location of factory inspectors concerning the east of Scotland area in each year since 1975.

Mr. Nicholls: The earliest date for which figures are available for factory inspectors in HSE's Scotland east area is 1 November 1976. Details of inspectors' location within the area before 1985 are not available. The available information is as follows:

Totals for Great Britain include inspectors in the inspectorate and in HSE's headquarters engaged on line management work or contributing to international and national policy or technical standards.

Workplace Accidents

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were (a) the total number of accidents, (b) the total number of fatal accidents, and (c) the total number of major accidents reported at workplaces in (i) Scotland and (ii) the United Kingdom in each year since 1975.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information for injuries reported to Her Majesty's factory and agricultural inspectorates and to the local authorities in Scotland and Great Britain as a whole is given in the tables. Figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Figures for the periods 1975-80, 1981-85 and 1986 onwards are not comparable owing to changes in reporting arrangements.

[1] Injuries notified under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1980 (NADOR) for 1981 to 1985, and the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR) for later years. Data for the years 1975-1980 are based on reports made under various legislation.

[2] Includes fatal injuries to members of the public arising from work activity in respect to those fatal injuries reported to local authorities 1981-1985.

[3] The category of major injury was first introduced by NADOR. The definition of a major injury was widened by RIDDOR.

[4] For 1975-80 injuries notified directly to HSE under various health and safety at work legislation. For 1981-82, injuries resulting in claims for industrial injury benefit. From 1983-85 figures are not available as industrial injury benefit ceased in 1983. From April 1986 injuries reported by employers under RIDDOR.

[5] For Scotland, injuries in 1975-80 are those reported to factory inspectorate only.

[6] Year from 1 April 1986 when RIDDOR came into force.

[7] For Great Britain, injuries reported in 1975-80 are those to factory and agricultural inspectorates only.

Workplace Inspections

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the total numbers of workplace inspections conducted by the factory inspectorate in (a) east of Scotland area, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom in each year since 1975.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested for the years 1975 to 1984. The following table shows the number of preventive inspection visits carried out by the factory inspectorate in the east of Scotland area, Scotland and Great Britain since 1 April 1985:

Date	East of Scotland	Scotland	Great Britain
(1 April—31 March)
1985-86	5,375	9,209	90,081
1986-87	5,142	8,778	94,308
1987-88	5,750	10,409	100,815
1988-89	5,169	8,935	101,141

Figures for Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Adult Earnings

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many adults in full-time employment in the west midlands currently earn less than £120 per week.

Mr. Nicholls: It is estimated from the new earnings survey that about 13 per cent. of adults in full-time employment in the west midlands, whose earnings were not affected by absence, earned less than £120 in April 1989.

Staff Shortages

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what instructions have been given to reduce the length of new claims interviews in unemployment benefit offices as a result of staff shortages.

Mr. Eggar: An average time of 40 minutes is allowed for each new claim interview. No national guidance has been issued advising that the interview length be shortened.

During the summer period some offices experienced peaks in the number of claims made and had to resort to a shorter interview followed up at a later date by a second interview.

Bridging Allowance

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds in (i) Scotland and (ii) the United Kingdom are in receipt of a bridging allowance; and what proportion of those who had exhausted their entitlement to a bridging allowance still had not secured a training place under the youth training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: On the 12 October, the latest date for which figures are available, 1,385 young people were in receipt of YTS bridging allowance in Scotland and 8,096 in Great Britain. Separate arrangements apply in Northern Ireland.

The guarantee to young people under 18 who are not in full time employment or education of a suitable YTS place continues to be met nationwide. At the end of September 110,821 YTS places were unfilled out of the 500,000 YTS places in contract.

Disabled People (Quotas)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many firms in (a) manufacturing industry, (b) the service sector and (c) the construction industry are adhering to the quota system in the employment of disabled people; and what percentage of the firms in each of these groups they represent.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to make changes in the quota system as it affects the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: The quota scheme is amongst the matters being considered in the internal review of services to people with disabilities which my Department has been undertaking, the results of which will be made known as soon as possible.

Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what information he has on the level of employer investment in training employees, net of salaries;

(2) what information he has on the level of employer spending on training of employees, net of salaries, in each of the European member states.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 2 November 1989]: It is estimated that employers in Great Britain spent £2·8 billion on non-labour costs on training in 1986-87. This figure is based on a survey of employers' training activities carried out in 1987. The survey included agricultural firms with less than 10 employees and the armed services. The estimated expenditure for all employers, including staff costs, was £18 billion. Figures are not available on this basis for other member states.

The EC labour costs survey shows expenditure on training by employers in the production and construction industries in member states as a percentage of labour costs. The figures are shown in the table and exclude salaries except for apprentice wages.

Training Schemes (Safety)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that all people on training schemes are (a) covered by health and safety legislation relevant to their industry, (b) fully insured and (c) provided with safety clothing and footwear.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 3 November 1989]: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 17 October 1989 at columns 57-58.

DEFENCE

Vietnamese Refugees

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are taken by the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force to detect and intercept vessels carrying intended immigrants from Vietnam to Hong Kong.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Responsibility for the detection and interception of Vietnamese boat people attempting to enter Hong Kong rests with the Royal Hong Kong marine police. Royal Navy patrol craft occasionally assist in the detection task as part of their general patrol duties in Kong Kong waters. Vietnamese boat people vessels detected by the Royal Navy are immediately notified to the Hong Kong civil authorities for them to take further action.

Service Women (Job Opportunities)

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the steps being taken to increase job opportunities for women in the Army, Navy and the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Army plans to increase job opportunities for women in line with the recommendations of the report on the study into the long term role and employment of women in the Army, which identified 6,000 additional posts in the Regular Army and 4,000 posts in the Territorial Army that could be opened to women. The RAF is increasing the number of women in ground trades from 5,000 to 7,000, some 10 per cent. of the total ground trades trained strength, over the next five years and has begun recruiting women as pilots and navigators for non-combat roles. The Royal Navy is currently reviewing the possible future employment of the Women's Royal Naval Service and we expect to make an announcement around the end of the year.

AWACS Verification

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the policy and development implications of the renewed open skies verification regime for the sale and use of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation airborne warning and control system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A great deal of work remains to be done on the open skies initiative and it is too early to draw any conclusions on how it might be put into effect.

Ethnic Recruitment

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date he received the report on the study into ethnic minority recruitment in the armed services and on what date he will make a statement about it.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The report on the study into ethnic minority recruitment to the armed services was received on 11 July 1989. The report is under consideration within the Ministry of Defence and an announcement will be made shortly.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has of racial discrimination in the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no evidence to substantiate claims of racial discrimination in the armed forces. The armed forces are subject to the Race Relations Act 1976 and no form of racial discrimination is tolerated. Complaints of racial discrimination brought by members of the armed forces are fully investigated under the redress of grievance procedures of the service disciplinary Acts.

UDR Offences

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details for each of the years from 1980 to 30 September 1989 of (a) full-time members and (b) part-time members of the Ulster Defence Regiment serving in Northern Ireland who have (i) voluntarily resigned having been involved in an offence, (ii) been discharged having been convicted of an offence and (iii) had their engagements terminated following the commission of an offence, but before trial; and what was the nature of the offence in each case.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am afraid that information dealing with the period prior to 1985 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The following information covers both the permanent cadre and the part-time element of the UDR:

(i) voluntary resignations having been involved in an offence 16

(ii) discharges having been convicted and awarded custodial sentences, including suspended sentences 54

(iii) it is not our policy to terminate an individual's engagement before he has been tried and convicted of an offence, although there were three cases where the individuals did not apply to re-engage when their current engagements terminated while they were under investigation or on remand.

Information on the nature of each offence is not readily available.

Regular Army Offences

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details for each of the years from 1980 to 30 September 1989 of members of the Regular Army serving in Northern Ireland, who have (a) voluntarily resigned having been involved in an offence (b) been discharged having been convicted of an offence and (c) had their engagements terminated following the commission of an offence, but before trial; and what was the nature of the offence in each case.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Members of the Regular Army serving in Northern Ireland apart from the UDR are not allowed to resign voluntarily after having been involved in an offence. On the second part of the hon. Member's question, separate records are not kept for discharges of soldiers convicted of offences committed in Northern Ireland. It is not our policy to discharge soldiers who are accused of committing offences before they have been tried and convicted.

UDR Re-vetting

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the circumstances in which current and future members of the Ulster Defence Regiment will be re-vetted in light of paragraph 5 of the joint statement issued following the meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 18 October.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is a range of circumstances in which it would be appropriate to carry out screening reviews. However, it would not be appropriate to give details and I therefore have nothing to add to my answer of 19 October to the hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) at column 256.

Lance Missile

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) by how much the operational life of the Lance missile could be extended by a programme of refurbishment;

(2) when the Lance missile will come to the end of its effective operational life.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is general practice to keep the performance of all weapon systems under review. On current estimates it is believed that the Lance missile will be unsustainable beyond the mid 1990s.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by how much the recent refurbishment of the rocket motors to the Lance missile has extended its effective operational life.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The recent refurbishment was designed to maintain operational effectiveness throughout the missile's planned operational life; it was not intended to extend the operational life.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989", vol. 1, p. 51, fig. 12, how many Lance missiles are deployed to accompany the 88 Lance launchers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of Lance missiles deployed in Europe is classified information.

Tornado Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Tornado GR1s and (b) Tornado F3s are currently deployed in frontline service; how many are in reserve; and how many are in storage.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Nine squadrons of Tornado GR1 and four squadrons of Tornado F3 are currently in operational front line service. The precise numbers of the operational aircraft and reserves are classified. Eight early production Tornado F3s are in storage at RAF St. Athan awaiting modifications. No Tornado GF1s are in storage.

Royal Navy Ships

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy destroyers and frigates are currently permanently available to fulfil NATO roles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All Royal Navy destroyers and frigates are declared to NATO, although at varying levels of readiness and availability. Precise details are classified.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many, and what type of, Royal Navy ships are regularly committed to patrolling the Gulf and Indian ocean area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 18 July 1989 at column 79. We have no commitment to patrolling in the Indian ocean.

Combat Aircraft

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989", volume 1, p. 47, how many of the combat aircraft on each side are (a) air defence fighters, (b) reconnaissance aircraft and (c) electronic warfare aircraft;

(2) pursuant to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989", volume 1, p. 46, how many of the combat aircraft on each side are (a) air defence fighters, (b) reconnaissance aircraft and (c) electronic warfare aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Many modern combat aircraft are designed to be capable of performing several different roles. For this reason, it would be misleading to break down the figures as requested.

BAOR

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made as to the likely effects on the British Army of the Rhine of the use of nuclear artillery shells by United Kingdom forces against WTO forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on operational matters of this kind.

Merchant Ships

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made as to the minimum number and capacity of the United Kingdom's merchant ships needed to meet the wartime requirements of the United Kingdom's armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The defence requirement for merchant shipping in crisis and war is very carefully assessed and regularly reviewed. The details of this particular requirement are classified.

Conventional Forces

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what figures his Department has provided to the conventional forces in Europe negotiations regarding the numbers and types of the United Kingdom's armed forces; and whether he will make these available to Parliament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The most recent figures for United Kingdom equipment holdings are contained in the NATO publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", dated November 1988, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. NATO has proposed a formal exchange of data as part of a CFE treaty, but no such exchange has yet taken place.

SS21

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the accuracy, circular error probability, of the Soviet SS21.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to give this type of information, although the SS21 is considerably more accurate than the FROG missile which it is replacing.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest assessment of the number of Soviet SS21 launchers deployed in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1981, well over 200 Soviet SS21 launchers have been deployed in Europe west of the Urals.

Trident

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the financial savings that would accrue from a cancellation of the fourth Trident submarine in 1991.

Mr. Neubert: The position remains as set out by MOD officials in evidence to the Select Committee on Defence in response to a question raised by the Clerk to the Committee on 11 May 1989, and published in its report, "The Progress of the Trident Programme" (Defence Committee Fifth Report HC 374, 21 June 1989).

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the yearly running costs of maintaining (a) a three-boat Trident force and (b) a four-boat Trident force.

Mr. Neubert: It is too early to state with any precision the likely running costs of the Trident force, other than to say they are not anticipated to be significantly different from those for Polaris.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of warheads that each Trident D5 missile is assumed to carry according to the counting rules adopted in the START negotiations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In their joint summit statement of December 1987, the United States and Soviet Governments confirmed their assumption that the Trident II missile would be deployed with eight warheads. The United Kingdom Government, which is not, of course, a party to the START negotiations, has already stated that the United Kingdom deploys a maximum of 128 warheads per submarine.

Soviet Short-Range Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the number of Soviet short-range nuclear missiles that accompany the 1,450 short-range nuclear launchers deployed by the Warsaw pact in Europe, west of the Urals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to give this type of information.

START Negotiations

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the percentage reduction in the total number of strategic nuclear weapons that would occur as a result of the successful outcome of the current START negotiations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not possible to forecast the precise percentage reductions in the number of United States and Soviet strategic offensive weapons systems which may result from a START agreement.

Population Decline

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the impact upon the armed forces of the decline in the number of 16 to 19-year-old males in the United Kingdom between 1989 and 1993; and how great his Department assesses that decline to be.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The greatest impact of the decline in the number of 16 to 19-year-old males will be in the recruiting field. The services expect a drop of 10·8 per cent. in the number of potential male other rank recruits and a drop of 5·7 per cent. in the number of potential male officer recruits between 1989 and 1993. Consequently, competition for suitably qualified young men will increase. The services will continue to make every effort to recruit the numbers they require.

Trained Service Personnel

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest assessment of the short-fall in the number of trained service personnel in each of the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Shortfalls in service manpower are measured by comparing adult trained strengths against trained manpower requirements. As at 30 June 1989, shortfalls were:

Royal Navy 786, Royal Marines 10, Army 4,113, Royal Air Force 3,566.

In order to encourage greater efficiency in the use of manpower, policy decisions have been taken to aim manpower plans at levels a little below the full requirement. Not all of these shortfalls are, therefore, unplanned.

Free-fall Bombs

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a programme of refurbishment would enable the United Kingdom's WE177 free-fall bombs to be kept in serviceable operation beyond the 1990's.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The existing United Kingdom free-fall nuclear bomb is subject to regular inspection, maintenance and refurbishment, and will remain in service only if it continues to meet the requirements for safety and serviceability.

British Registered Cars

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions there are in British registered cars entering the sovereign base area from (a) north Cyprus, and (b) from the south; what are the reasons for the differences in such restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As long as British-registered vehicles are legally imported to the island of Cyprus, and properly insured in accordance with local legislation, they may freely enter the sovereign base areas.

Loan Service Personnel

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what definition his Department uses of the term loan service personnel;

(2) whether military personnel are seconded to assist in the training of foreign armies or armed units other than as loan service personnel;

(3) whether special forces may be used as loan service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Service personnel may be loaned from the United Kingdom Armed Forces for service with a Commonwealth or foreign country on either loan service or secondment terms. The principal difference is that loan service personnel are administered and paid by the United Kingdom authorities in the normal way while seconded personnel are wholly administered and receive their pay and allowances directly from the host nation. Individuals selected for loan service or secondment may be drawn from all parts of the Armed Forces.

Boscombe Down

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about corrosive liquid alleged to have fallen from aircraft at the aircraft and armament experimental establishment at Boscombe down; and if he will compensate those whose property has been damaged.

Mr. Neubert: We have received a few reports of car paintwork damaged by droplets of a fluid which may have been discharged from an aircraft operating from the aircraft and armaments experimental establishment at Boscombe down on the afternoon of 25 October. The MOD accepts that it is probable that this damage was caused by the discharge of the fluid, which was a variant of antifreeze. MOD will consider claims for compensation from those whose property has been damaged.

SCOTLAND

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region those Forestry Commission woodlands disposed of during each of the last three years, stating for each disposal the hectarage involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 3 February 1989 at column 415 to a question from him on the same subject. A list of sales of Forestry Commission woodlands between 22 October 1984 and 21 December 1988 was placed in the Library of the House at that time. A re-ordering of that list into separate years could only be carried out at disproportionate cost.

The woodlands sold by the commission between 22 December 1988 and 31 March 1989 are as follows:

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will allow fibre-producing or other animals to be added to existing set-aside scheme provision in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. While Community rules allow member states to permit land fallowed under the set-aside scheme to be used for extensive grazing of agricultural animals, the Government have decided not to take up this option. In arriving at this decision we recognised that the grazing of set-aside land could create unfair competition for existing livestock producers, and particularly for those hill and upland farmers who have few, if any, alternatives to livestock rearing. Community rules do not allow member states to restrict the grazing option to certain types of animals—whether used for fibre, milk or meat—even in cases where these would pose fewer competition problems.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures showing the set-aside take-up in each EEC country.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest comparative information available to us is set out in the table as follows:

Member State	Number of applications (1988-89)	Area to be set aside (hectares)	Proportion of set-aside area as percentage of		Average set-aside per applicant (hectares)

The scheme was not applied in Denmark or Luxembourg in the 1988-89 agricultural season; and Portugal is exempt.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies he has commissioned on set-aside and what plans he has to review existing provisions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The North of Scotland College of Agriculture has been commissioned to carry out a study to evaluate the uptake and economic impact of the set-aside scheme, as part of a United Kingdom-wide study. This will involve on-farm interviews of a sample of participating farmers. Consideration is currently being given to the need for any further research into the agronomic and environmental impact of the scheme, over and above projects already being undertaken by the Scottish agricultural college.

The provisions of the scheme are already under close review, in the light of experience gained during the first year of its operation. My right hon. and learned Friend will in due course consider, with the other agriculture Ministers, whether any changes in the scheme rules are warranted.

Organic Farming

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department is taking to promote research projects on organic farming, and what funding has been allocated to these projects.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My Department is currently funding a number of research and development projects by the Scottish agricultural colleges which are both directly and indirectly relevant to organic farming. The cost of this work in 1989-90 is about £200,000. The Edinburgh university centre for human ecology and the Edinburgh school of agriculture are undertaking a joint pilot project over two years to demonstrate the viability of organic farming. The Scottish Development Agency is contributing £175,000 to this project which is also supported by the European Community and Safeway plc.

Farmers (Surpluses)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to make assistance available to help farmers in Scotland convert from surplus to non-surplus crops and livestock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Council regulation (EEC) No. 1094/88 requires all member states to introduce aid schemes to encourage the conversion of production towards non-surplus products. A proposal by the EC Commission for a Council regulation listing eligible products and setting out the main conditions for payment of aid is currently before the Agriculture Council. Once a Council regulation is adopted, and the necessary detailed implementing regulation has been made by the EC Commission, the agriculture departments will consider the content of a conversion scheme for the United Kingdom.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state what measures he intends to take to protect poll tax payers from increases of more than £3 per week, over previous domestic rates payments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has announced that a scheme of transitional relief will operate in Scotland. Details of the scheme are at present the subject of discussions with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. The scheme will be targeted at households comprising former ratepayers, pensioners and the disabled.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a table showing the total provision of sheltered housing by dwellings and by bedspaces, and of amenity housing by dwelling by public agencies on 31 March or the latest available date; and if he will provide a breakdown of that provision by local authority, Scottish Homes, new towns and housing associations.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested, at 31 March 1989, is set out in the following table. Scottish Homes did not begin operation until 1 April 1989 so the figures given relate to the Scottish Special Housing Association.

Provision of special needs housing at 31 March 1989[1]

Public Sector Landlords

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide information showing the total number of applications made to him by public sector landlords under section 69 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 and previously under section 3 of the Tenants' Rights, Etc. (Scotland) Act 1980 and section 1 of the Tenants' Rights, Etc. (Scotland) Amendment Act 1980; if he will give his information for each of the years to date since 1980; and if he will further give the total number of cases where he has authorised a landlord to serve a notice of refusal for each of the years to date since 1980.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Year	[1] Number	[2] Number
1980	3	—
1981	8	1
1982	—	—
1983	4	2

Laboratory and Radiodiagnostic Services

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions his Department has had with the Scottish Council of the British Medical Association about the proposed competitive tendering for laboratory and radiodiagnostic services within Greater Glasgow health board, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Officials of the Scottish Home and Health Department met representatives of the Scottish Council of the British Medical Association and of the Scottish Joint Consultants Committee on Friday 6 October to discuss a number of matters of mutual concern including competitive tendering in clinically related services.

Lithotriptor Centres

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, when he expects the pilot scheme of new invoicing between the Scottish lithotriptor and customer boards to end.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The pilot scheme was introduced for the financial year 1989-90. No decision has yet been made about arrangements for the next financial year.

Substandard Housing

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of houses that are (a) below the tolerable standard, (b) require comprehensive modernisation, (c) require major repairs and (d) are affected by dampness, in the public and private sectors, respectively, in each district and islands area; and if he will estimate the cost of carrying out the necessary repairs and improvements.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Returns from local authorities show that the number of houses in Scotland which are below the tolerable standard as at 31 March 1988, in the public and private sectors, is as set out in table 1. Details of local authority stock with dampness and condensation dampness as at 31 March 1988 are set out in Table 2. Comparable information on dampness for other than local authority houses is not held centrally.

The Government have neither information on the number of houses requiring comprehensive modernisation or major repairs, nor information which would allow an estimate to be made of the cost of any necessary works.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show the number of (a) pensioners, (b) families with children and (c) other households living in housing which is below the tolerable standard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Bed and Breakfast Accommodation (Costs)

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the most recent statistics for people in bed and breakfast accommodation in Scotland, paid for out of public funds.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no overall figures for the number of persons in bed and breakfast accommodation paid for out of public funds. It is estimated that the number of households placed in such accommodation by local authorities under the provisions of the homeless persons legislation in Scotland at 30 June 1989 was 270.

Gaelic Broadcasting

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has now reached on Comunn Na Gaidhlig's proposal for a Gaelic broadcasting council.

Mr. Lang: No decision has yet been taken on proposals for the establishment of a Gaelic broadcasting council. The Government are currently giving very careful consideration to the future of Gaelic broadcasting and an announcement of their conclusion will be made shortly.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of Comunn Na Gaidhlig to discuss Gaelic television.

Mr. Lang: The Secretary of State met representatives of Comunn Na Gaidhlig on 17 April 1989 to hear their views on the future of Gaelic broadcasting.

Nuclear Waste (Dounreay)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in the geological investigations at Dounreay for a deep repository for low and intermediate level radioactive wastes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Investigations have not yet commenced. An application by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on behalf of Nirex for planning permission to conduct test boring was refused by the planning authority, Highland regional council, on 12 July. An appeal was lodged by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on 24 August and is at present under consideration by my right hon. and learned Friend.

Whitson-Fairhurst Houses

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number and location of Whitson-Fairhurst houses in Scotland; and what funds his Department has allocated to alleviate the problems inherent in this type of construction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on Whitson-Fairhurst houses built for the private sector in Scotland is not held centrally. The number and location of such dwellings originally built for the public sector, including houses subsequently sold under right to buy, are shown in the following table.

Aggregate capital allocations are made to local authorities to enable broad programmes of work to proceed; funds are not allocated specifically for work on any one type of house. It is for individual local authorities to determine their own policies and priorities for investment in their own housing stock and for assistance to the private sector; and to programme capital expenditure accordingly within the resources made available. If councils identify a particular need for resources to cope with the inherent structural problems found in Whitson-Fairhurst houses then they should in the first instance include proposals for alleviating these problems in their housing capital programmes.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has undertaken into methods of repairing or reinstating Whitson-Fairhurst houses; and what advice his Department gives to local authorities regarding approved methods of dealing with this type of house.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department has no programme of research into methods of reinstating Whitson-Fairhurst houses. The work which must be done to rectify the inherent defect in such houses is well known. The Scottish Development Department does not directly advise local authorities of approved methods of repairing such houses: authorities are aware that such advice is available from PRC Homes Ltd.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations has he received with regard to railway links in Scotland and those between Scotland and the Channel tunnel.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has received a number of representations from individuals, Members of Parliament and organisations on rail links within Scotland and between Scotland and the Channel tunnel. The provision of such links is however a matter for British Rail and the terms of the representations have been made known to BR through contact at either ministerial or official level.

Lowland Airports Policy

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has received from businesses in Scotland concerning Scottish lowland airports policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State is presently receiving, from businesses in Scotland, copies of their responses to the Secretary of State for Transport's consultative document on Scottish lowland airports policy. The consultation exercise ends on 29 November and any submissions received will be taken fully into account in the review now in progress.

YTS

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds there are in Scotland; and how many in each of those age groups have secured a training placement under the youth training scheme.

Mr. Lang: The projected Scottish populations of 16 and 17-year-olds in 1989 are:

	Numbers
(a) 16-year-olds	71,378
(b) 17-year-olds	76,716
Total	148,094

At September 1989 there were 50,708 YTS trainees in Scotland. This figure is made up primarily of 16 and 17-year-olds but will include some 18-year-olds. The training agency no longer collects data on numbers of YTS trainees by age.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many YTS places have been contracted with managing agents in Scotland; and if he will list them by regional council area.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of YTS places contracted with managing agents in Scotland in total and by regional council area are set out in the table:

Regional Council area	Number of YTS places contracted
Strathclyde	29,101
Dumfries and Galloway	1,705
Grampian	4,757
Tayside	4,280
Lothian	6,719
Borders	864
Central	4,164
Fife	5,133
Orkney	244
Shetland	204
Western Isles	290
Highland	2,565
Total	60,026

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is considering realising the assets of the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Lang: At the request of my right hon. and learned Friend the agency has submitted proposals for the disposal of parts of its property and investment portfolios. Discussions on these proposals are progressing satisfactorily with the aim of ensuring that any disposals are carried out in an effective manner consistent with Government policy. The agency has disposed of properties and investments on an individual basis for a number of years.

Schools (Spending)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the capital spend on (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools within the local authority education system in Scotland in each year since 1978 to 1989 up to and including 1988-89; and give these figures both at outturn prices and expressed at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Lang: The information available is given in the following table, which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. Expenditure on primary and secondary schools is not separately identified in these returns. The reduction in expenditure in real terms during the period reflects a substantial and progressive decline in pupil numbers.

Capital expenditure by local authorities on primary and secondary schools

Year	At outturn prices	£ million At 1988-89 prices
1978-79	49·503	108·608
1979-80	44·958	84·563
1980-81	49·637	78·752
1981-82	55·165	79·749
1982-83	49·728	67·135
1983-84	43·359	55·945
1984-85	43·431	53·399
1985-86	48·368	56·371
1986-87	43·011	48·570
1987-88	44·340	47·576
[1]1988-89	57·157	57·157

[1] provisional

Note: The outturn figures have been converted to 1988-89 prices using the GDP deflator.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the policy considerations on which he based his recent decisions to amend provisions relating to the poll tax; and what consideration he gave to alternative amendments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Experience of the operation of the community charge in Scotland has enabled us to identify improvements which will result in chargepayers being treated more equitably. We are therefore making a number of changes to the legislation. These include changes to the standard community charge arrangements, widening of the exemption for people who are severely mentally impaired and the introduction of a transitional relief scheme to assist people who have faced a significant increase in expenditure as a result of replacing domestic rates with the community charge.

Pentland Firth (Crossing)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Orkney Islands council regarding the construction of infrastructure for the proposed short sea crossing of the Pentland firth between Burwick and Gills bay.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Orkney Islands council has applied to the Secretary of State for a harbour empowerment order to operate as a harbour authority at Gills bay. They already hold such powers at Burwick. The council has also inquired about the availability of ERDF funds for the terminals and has been told that no such funds are available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department has received any request for support for the proposed short sea crossing of the Pentland firth between Burwick and Gills bay, and the associated infrastructure developments.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No request has been received for central Government grant towards the Burwick and Gills bay terminals. In January 1989 Orkney Ferries plc requested to be considered for a tariff subsidy similar to that paid to P & O Ferries by my Department. I said at that time that I would want to see the ferry service in operation before considering such a request.

Prisons

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give (a) the optimum operational capacity of each prison in Scotland and (b) the actual numbers of prisoners currently housed in each prison in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

	Design capacity	Prisoners[1]
HMP Aberdeen	139	132
HMP Barlinnie	979	812
HMYOI Castle Huntly	144	110

HMP Shotts	528	459

[1] Housed as at 27 October 1989.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total prison population in Scotland, in each of the years since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average daily prison population in 1988 is provisionally estimated as 5,229. For earlier years, corresponding figures are given in appendix 2 of the annual report "Prisons in Scotland Report for 1987" (Cm 551) copies of which are available in the Library.

Schoolchildren (Clothes)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a list of expenditure by local education authorities in Scotland on clothes for schoolchildren.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 3 November 1989]: The latest available figures from local authorities are in respect of financial year 1987-88 and are as follows:

Education Authority	Expenditure (£'000)
Borders	53
Central	367
Dumfies and Galloway	2
Fife	390
Grampian	78

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will study the system of voluntary removal of a suspected child abuser from the home before trial, as in the United States of America.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We need to consider the issues which are raised by voluntary removal in relation to the Law Commission's recently issued consultative document "Domestic Violence and Occupation of the Family Home", including the American experience.

Crime (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek a report from the chief constable of South Yorkshire on what proportion of crimes in South Yorkshire are screened out after the initial investigation; on what basis this occurs; and by which police division.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of South Yorkshire who has recently carried out a survey throughout the force, that after the initial investigation has been completed about 20 per cent. of all recorded crimes are "screened out". Certain types of crime, including all serious crimes, are exempt from the screening process. Of the remainder, crimes are only screened out if there is insufficient information on which further investigation could usefully be conducted. Information about the proportion of crimes screened out in each division is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Football Grounds (Deaths)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many deaths have taken place at Football Association grounds during each of the past 10 years, and as to how many of these deaths were caused by (a) physical problems, including fires, overcrowding, etc., (b) natural causes and (c) criminal acts.

Mr. John Patten: The information known to the Home Office about fatalities at Football Association grounds relates primarily to incidents at English Football League grounds. Details of the known incidents at such grounds over the last 10 years leading to fatalities among the general public are as follows:

Date	Location	Number of Fatalities
12 January 1980	Middlesbrough	2
11 May 1985	Bradford	56
11 May 1985	Birmingham	1
15 April 1989	Sheffield	95
TOTAL		154

Immigration

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if citizens of Pakistan are now regarded as Commonwealth citizens for the purposes of the immigration rules.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate to supply the detail requested.

Naturalisation

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average it is taking to process applications for British naturalisation; and when he would expect an application lodged in March 1988 to be resolved.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The average time taken to complete applications for naturalisation during September 1989 was 24 months. It is not possible to give a reliable estimate of the average time likely to be taken to complete applications received at any particular date.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how observations from interested persons or organisations should be submitted for consideration by Lord Colville in his next annual report on the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism Act in 1989.

Mr. David Waddington: Observations, at this stage in writing, may be sent direct to Lord Colville or received on his behalf by the Home Office (Room 647) not later than 20 December 1989.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to extend the provisions of the Official Secrets Act to the Channel Isles, the Isle of Man and the Falkland Islands.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 3 November 1989]: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary have no plans to do so. A person who commits an indictable offence under the Official Secrets Acts 1911 to 1989 in the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man or the Falkland Islands may however be tried for the offence in the United Kingdom.

TRANSPORT

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department plays its part in testing those provisions in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the details requested.

Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) children and (b) adults have been killed or injured in road accidents since the new licensing laws were introduced and for the previous comparable period.

Mr. Atkins: The requested information is given in the following table. Results for 1989 are provisional. The change in the licensing laws took place on 22 August 1988, so that results for the third quarter of 1988 include approximately equal periods under the old and new regulations.

For the three quarters following the change in licensing laws, the number of children killed was 11 per cent. lower than in the previous comparable period, the number seriously injured about the same, but overall casualties rose by 3 per cent.

For adults the corresponding changes are a 3 per cent. rise in fatalities, a 5 per cent. fall in serious injuries and a 2 per cent. rise in all casualties.

Quarterly results for road casualties are often erratic. There is nothing in the results to suggest that the change in licensing laws has had any marked effect on road accidents.

Roads (Sussex)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will be in a position to announce possible routes for the previously announced plans to dual the A27 between Lewes and Polegate; if he anticipates a major alteration to the existing road at any point; if he intends to proceed with the roundabout at the junction of the A26 Newhaven road; what measures he is considering in relation to the level crossing at Beddingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It is too soon to be able to give detailed information about the timing and nature of the proposals for the improvement of the A27 between Lewes and Polegate. Consultants will be appointed shortly to undertake preliminary studies and to identify possible solutions on which to consult the public, possibly in 1991-92. Their brief will be to consider all feasible alternatives, including a combination of on-line and off-line options, and to address the problems of the Beddingham level crossing.

It is our intention to proceed in advance with the provision of a roundabout at the A26 junction. It is programmed for construction next year.

Motorway and Trunk Road Schemes

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the major motorway and trunk road schemes which his Department has (a) let since the start of the current financial year and (b) plans to let during the rest of the financial year.

Mr. Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 3 November at column 343.

Cycle Lanes (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the road mileage in each of the London boroughs that provide cycle lanes.

Mr. Atkins: Such information as is readily available about specific facilities for cyclists is given in DTP transport statistics report "Road Lengths in Great Britain in 1987-88", a copy of which is in the Library.

Plutonium

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what proportion of accidents he anticipates a plutonium air transport cask, tested to the criteria recommended by the International Atomic Energy, Agency's standing advisory group on the safe transport of radioactive materials, would retain its integrity.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is the subject of an ongoing study for further consideration at an IAEA advisory group meeting in 1990.

Radioactive Material

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the basis for the recommendations of the standing advisory group on the safe transport of radioactive material of the International Atomic Energy Agency that transport regulations be amended to require testing such a flask at an impact speed of 85 m per second.

Mr. McLoughlin: Two papers were presented at the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) technical committee meeting in December 1988. This subject will be further considered at an IAEA advisory group meeting in 1990.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what technical progress has been made in the field of probability and consequence calculations for possible plutonium air transport cask accidents since the publication of the ACTRAM report.

Mr. McLoughlin: Studies are continuing but in this complicated field I do not expect to be able to report progress in the relatively short term.

High Speed Freight

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Government have any plans to provide for the operation of high speed rail freight services from the northern regions by-passing London into mainland Europe.

Mr. Portillo: This is a matter for British Rail, which will shortly be setting out its proposals in the plan that it is publishing in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987.

London Assessment Studies

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport further to his reply to the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) on 23 October at column 373, whether all London hon. Members will be given copies of all the four schemes; whether community groups concerned with the proposals will be sent all four copies of the schemes at no cost to themselves; and what will be the cost of the full report of each scheme.

Mr. Atkins: Hon. Members will receive copies of the consultants' reports which are relevant to their constituencies. Copies will also be provided for display in public libraries.

Community groups will be able to purchase copies of the reports. The cost is yet to be decided. Free summaries will be available from the consultants on demand.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his reply to the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) on 23 October at column 373, how long the consultation period for the London assessment studies will be, once the consultants' schemes have been published; in what form he intends to lay his proposals before Parliament; who will be responsible for the consultation; which groups he will consult; and if he will give details of the consultative process.

Mr. Atkins: There will be an opportunity for anyone wishing to comment on the way forward to do so by late February 1990. Full details of the arrangements for making comments to the Department will be given when the consultants' reports are published in December.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his reply to the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) on 23 October at column 373, what has been the cost to date of the consultants; and on what basis the consultants will be retained after the publication of the results.

Mr. Atkins: The total cost of the four London assessment studies to date has been £8½ million.

It is too early to say if and on what basis the consultants will be retained following publication of their final reports.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that no schemes based on London assessment studies will go ahead until a full public inquiry has been held in each area that is encompassed by the schemes.

Mr. Atkins: Any scheme, whether involving roads or public transport, which emerges as a result of decisions on the London assessment studies will be subject to the appropriate procedures.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to give a similar guarantee to the Lea valley and the other green areas involved in London assessment studies to that which he gave in respect of Parkland walk.

Mr. Atkins: Each case must be considered on its merits in the light of the consultants' assessment of their options.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe) on 23 October at column 373, how the environmental implications of the schemes have been assessed and costed; what are the costs; what formula has been used to assess the environmental implications of the schemes; and whether he has taken any account of the recommendations of the Pearce report in assessing the value of green and open spaces.

Mr. Atkins: The study consultants are completing a full environmental assessment of all their options. The results of that work will appear in their reports.

Mutfordlock Crossing

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the absence of objections at the public inquiry into the Suffolk county council scheme to build a new crossing at Mutfordlock, Oulton Broad, Lowestoft, he will make it his policy to reach a decision on the scheme before announcing the next round of transport supplementary grants.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The decision to confirm orders submitted by the Suffolk county council was issued on 31 October.

Roads (East Anglia)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a further announcement on implementation of those proposals in the White Paper "Roads to Prosperity," which apply to roads in Suffolk and Norfolk.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 November 1989]: My right hon. Friend expects to publish a roads report later this year, setting out in a little more detail the schemes in the expanded road programme.

He has announced his decision that the A11 Thetford bypass in Norfolk, currently under construction, is to be built now entirely to dual carriageway standard. This is the first of many major improvements that will come out of the expanded road programme.

We are pressing ahead with the appointment of design agents for our new schemes and studies. We recently announced details of the appointments made so far of consultants and agent authorities to prepare 53 new road schemes and seven new studies. Further announcements on the remaining schemes will be made over the next few months.

Speed Retarders

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the effect on accident levels on roads where speed retarders, such as sleeping policemen, have been introduced.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The urban safety projects conducted jointly by the Department and local authorities indicate that low-cost "traffic calming" measures including road humps can reduce casualties by 10 to 15 per cent. in residential areas. Earlier trials road humps at selected sites (TRRL Digest LR878) achieved 50 per cent. casualty reductions. The new regulations we are making shortly will aid their use.

A1

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints have been received about traffic delays on the A1; and if he will travel to the north of England by that road to assess the validity of such complaints.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 November 1989]: I am familiar with the problems motorists encounter on the A1. We have no record of the overall number of complaints made about delays. Those received are usually as a result of necessary roadworks to maintain and improve this very busy trunk road.

The expanded trunk road programme announced earlier this year contains a number of schemes to improve the A1 from London to the Scottish border. It includes proposals to bring additional sections up to motorway standard.

I have visited the A1 within the last two weeks.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current debt of the Severn bridge.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The provisional accounts show a debt to the Consolidated Fund of £113·4 million at 31 March 1989.

ENVIRONMENT

Rents

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of household income he treats as an affordable rent.

Mr. Chope: We expect landlords providing rented housing with the help of public subsidy to charge rents within the reach of those in low paid employment. It is for the landlords to decide the actual rents to be charged.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on how his new proposals for the poll tax safety net will affect Birmingham.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment published provisional exemplifications on 6 November which show community charge payers in Birmingham contributing £60 to the safety net in 1990-91. The safety net will be abolished in later years and they will make no contribution after 1990-91.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the numbers of adult residents of (a) each London borough and (b) each district council likely to be entitled to the maximum rebate during the first year of operation of the community charge in England and Wales; and if he will express these figures as a proportion of the estimated population of each local authority liable to community charge.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply. The information requested is not available.

Empty Council Houses

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were empty but available for letting in the northern region in April.

Mr. Chope: Information for April 1989 was reported by local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1).

The number of empty local authority dwellings available for letting at this date in the northern region (excluding Cumbria) was 2,814.

Sellafield

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many test boreholes British Nuclear Fuels plc will investigate to prove the suitability and acceptability of the geology at Sellafield for a deep repository for low and intermediate level radioactive wastes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The numer of test boreholes that will have to be drilled, either to prove the suitability of the geology at Sellafield for a deep radioactive waste repository or to reject the site as unacceptable, depends on the results of the current investigations. The full extent of the drilling that will be required will only become clear as the programme of work proceeds.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to why British Nuclear Fuels plc is applying for planning permission to sink a second test borehole at the Sellafield site; what results were obtained from the first test borehole; what was the cost of the investigations surrounding the first test borehole; to whose budget this cost will be charged; what is expected to be the cost of the second test borehole; and if any further test boreholes are envisaged.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: British Nuclear Fuels plc has applied for planning permission to drill a second test borehole at their Sellafield site as part of a programme of work it is undertaking on behalf of UK Nirex Ltd., which is the organisation responsible for developing a deep repository in the United Kingdom for radioactive waste. The boreholes are required to confirm the geological suitability of the site. Although the first borehole is still incomplete, the results so far confirm the geological prognosis. The cost of drilling the boreholes is a matter for UK Nirex Ltd. The cost of all site investigations will be borne by the company. If the outcome of the first phase of investigations is favourable, further test boreholes would need to be drilled as part of the next phase of geological investigations.

Homelessness

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's estimate of the number of homeless people under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Chope: The numbers of people under the age of 18 years among the households accepted as homeless are not reported by local authorities and my Department has no estimates.

Water Main (South London)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the fourth collapse of the 30 in water main running through Battersea and Wandsworth and the steps being taken to prevent recurrence.

Mr. Moynihan: This is a matter for Thames Water, but I understand that it is doing all that it can to minimise such incidents; the most important measure to minimise the risk of failure of this pipeline will be the completion of the relevant section of the London ring main, expected to be in 1992.

Earthquakes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by location and date the number of earthquakes that have been recorded in England and Wales during the last 10 years; what damage was recorded; and on what seismographic scale.

Mr. Moynihan: The seismic monitoring network which is operated by the British Geological Survey records several hundred earthquakes each year in Britain and offshore. However, only those above a magnitude of 2·5 on the Richter scale—about a dozen a year—are generally felt. Those recorded in the last decade in England and Wales are listed in the following table.

In general, even where moderate shaking was felt, little or no damage was caused—though about a dozen events in the last decade have caused minor damage such as cracks to plaster and two events (at Longtown in Cumbria on Boxing Day 1979 and on the Lleyn peninsula, in north Wales in July 1984) caused damage to chimneys and roof tiles.

The national monitoring network is currently being extended to improve its geographical coverage, e.g. in south-east England and Northern Ireland. This results from an initiative by my Department, together with the British Geological Survey, to bring together those in Government and industry with interests in seismic matters. My Department is also funding an 18-month research project, which started in September this year, to provide a preliminary assessment of seismic hazards and risk in the United Kingdom.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 Nirex reserve sites for the disposal of radioactive waste.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not received a list of the reserve sites identified by Nirex.

Water Privatisation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total gain per year to each of the water plcs as a result of writing off all their debt to the Exchequer;

(2) what is the loss to the Exchequer as a result of the non-payment of interest on loans to the water authorities which have been written off.

Mr. Howard: The write-off of debt owed to the Exchequer by the 10 water plcs is just one element of the capital restructuring of the industry, which is designed to enable the companies to carry out their functions within the new regulatory framework set up by the Water Act. The write-off will result in a corresponding reduction in the assets of the national loans fund, but the Government will have new assets mostly in the form of shares in the holding companies, proceeds from the sale of which will be paid to the Exchequer to the benefit of taxpayers. The size of these proceeds will depend on market conditions at the time of the sale of shares. It is not possible to make meaningful comparisons with what would have occurred had the previous capital structures and regulatory framework remained in place.

Mortgage Defaulters

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households defaulted on mortgage repayments in the latest available month; and if he will give the figures for the same period in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The available information about mortgage arrears relates only to mortgages advanced by building societies and local authorities. The Building Societies Association records numbers of arrears relating to building society mortgages on a half-yearly basis. The latest information is for June 1989 and is compared with the figures for earlier years in the following table.

Building society mortgage arrears: United Kingdom

	Loans over 6 months in arrears
June	Number	Per cent.
1986	66,980	0·97
1987	63,150	0·88
1988	57,880	0·79
1989	54,360	0·71

My Department collects annual information on arrears in respect of mortgages made by local authorities. The information for recent years is shown in the following table.

1986	15,840	3·1

ENERGY

North Sea Oil

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the total production of North sea oil since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department's most recent published figures show that the cumulative production of oil, condensate and natural gas liquids between the end of 1979 and August of this year stood at 1,069·2 million tonnes—this includes a provisional figure for the month of August.

Pressurised Water Reactors

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies he has undertaken into the financial viability of the pressurised water reactor programme announced by his predecessor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The financial viability of new power station projects is a matter for the body concerned. The CEGB presented evidence to the Hinkley C inquiry on the comparison between the costs of a PWR and fossil-fuelled generation.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals to speed up the flue gas desulphurisation programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The flue gas desulphurisation programme is an operational matter for the industry.

Electricity Privatisation

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will amend the Electricity Act so as to retain the discretion of the Secretary of State to award second-tier direct-contract electricity supply licences after privatisation to premises with a load under 1 MW.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The Electricity Act provides for the Secretary of State to exercise such discretion within his general duties under the Act.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements he proposes for selling to the privatised British distribution companies electricity generated by French nuclear power stations and imported via the cross channel connectors; what companies he proposes to establish for this purpose; whether he has appointed any chairman-designate to such companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Public electricity suppliers, or any other suppliers, will be free to enter into commercial arrangements with Electricite de France for the purchase of electricity. We have no intention of establishing a company to import electricity from France.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of price per KW of the nuclear levy through which the area electricity boards will recoup the cost of meeting their non-fossil-fuel obligation after privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The fossil fuel levy will depend on the prices charged for nuclear and fossil-fuelled electricity. Contract negotiations are currently taking place. I cannot anticipate their outcome.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy with whom he proposes that the obligations to supply electricity will rest after privatisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Obligations to supply electricity will rest with those authorised to supply by licence or exemption under sections 5 and 6 of the Electricity Act 1989.

Internationally Traded Energy

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the change in internationally traded heavy fuel oil prices over the month to 25 September; and what was the fluctuation in internationally traded coal prices over the same period.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The change in the spot price of heavy fuel oil at Rotterdam over the month to September 25, 1989 and the fluctuation in internationally traded coal prices over the same period are as follows:

	Fuel Oil Rotterdam $/tonne	Steam Coal Amsterdam/ Rotterdam $/tonne
August 25	87·0	43·5
September 25	98·0	43·5
Percentage change	12·6	0·0

Note:
All prices are FOB spot prices for 1 per cent. Sulphur content.

Shell Ethylene Pipeline

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of Shell Chemicals United Kingdom Limited north western ethylene pipeline proposals.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Shell Chemicals UK Limited has submitted an application under the Pipelines Act 1962 for authorisation to construct a cross-country pipeline from Grangemouth to Stanlow for the conveyance of ethylene. It has been instructed to publish and serve the necessary notices under the Pipelines Act 1962, without prejudice to the right of the Secretary of State subsequently to refuse the application.

An environmental statement under the Electricity and Pipe-line Works (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1989, has been prepared by Shell.

Details of Shell's proposals and copies of the environmental statement are available for public inspection at the offices of planning authorities along the proposed pipeline route and at the offices of my Department.

CIVIL SERVICE

Executive Agencies

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list both those executive agencies for the Civil Service already set up with their start up dates and those announced as candidates with their target dates, together with the number of staff in each agency or prospective agency.

Mr. Luce: The current list of those Government activities already established as executive agencies under the Next Steps initiative, together with the number of staff employed and their start up dates is as follows:

Executive agency	Staff numbers	Start up date
Vehicle Inspectorate	1,550	1 August 1988
Companies House	1,150	3 October 1988
HMSO	3,200	14 December 1988
National Weight and Measures Laboratory	50	18 April 1989
Warren Spring Laboratory	300	20 April 1989
Resettlement Agency	550	24 May 1989
Civil Service College	200	6 June 1989
Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre	50	6 July 1989
Historic Royal Palaces	350	1 October 1989
Laboratory of the Government Chemist	300	30 October 1989

For the current list of candidates for executive agency status announced by Departments, together with the numbers of staff employed, I refer the hon. Member to the appendix to the Government reply to the Fifth Report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee (CM841, published on 30 October). Target dates for individual launches are primarily a matter for the Ministers responsible.

Promotions

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will provide an estimate of the administrative cost per promotee in Civil Service promotions from executive officer to higher executive officer.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parliamentary Questions

Mr Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the subjects on which he is not prepared to answer parliamentary questions.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 3 November 1989]: It is not possible to provide a definitive and exhaustive list of subjects within my responsibilities on which I might exceptionally decline to answer questions on grounds other than cost and commercial confidence. Each question tabled to me will continue to be considered on its merits.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to put the security arrangements for the Ulster museum out to competitive tender.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The Department of Education is presently considering the results of a market testing exercise conducted by the Ulster museum into the possibility of putting a number of its services, including security, out to competitive tender.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Northern Region

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list major inward investment in the Northern region since 1983, giving the cost of each project, the amount of Government grant and the number of jobs involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Major inward investment decisions announced for the Northern region since 1 January 1983 are as follows :

1. Major inward investment projects have been defined as those first time investments, or expansions of existing investment, by foreign owned companies which involve capital costs of over £5 million and/or the creation or safeguarding of 100 or more jobs.

2. Figures supplied for government grant are for offers of Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) accepted by foreign-owned companies since 1 January 1983. Comparable information on other forms of assistance is not readily available. (Not all inward investments receive RSA).

3. In accordance with usual practice the inclusion of individual cases has been restricted to those already announced or published. Details of nine further inward investment projects involving capital spend of £170·4 million and jobs of 3,132 have yet to be published.

4. The Northern Region is the North East Region plus Cumbria.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of suspected insider dealing were referred by the Stock Exchange to his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: Insider dealing did not become a criminal offence until 23 June 1980. Since then the number of cases of suspected insider dealing referred to the Department of Trade and Industry by the Stock Exchange each year is as follows:

	Number
1980[1]	7
1981	18
1982	23
1983	17
1984	12
1985	6
1986	14
1987	30
1988	25
1989[2]	26

[1] From 23 June 1980.

[2] To date.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many preliminary reports on suspected cases on insider dealing were sent by the Stock Exchange insider dealing unit in each month in 1988.

Mr. Redwood: The number of reports on suspected cases of insider dealing sent by the Stock Exchange insider dealing group to the Department of Trade and Industry in each month in 1988 was as follows:

	Number
January	1
February	1
March	1
April	1
May	1
June	2
July	2
August	2
September	1
October	2
November	9
December	2

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of the European co-ordinating regulations on insider trading.

Mr. Redwood: The EC Council of Ministers unanimously agreed a common position on the draft directive on co-ordinating regulations on insider dealing on 18 July 1989. This common position has now been considered by the European Parliament and the directive is likely to be adopted by the Council of Ministers on 13 November. Member states will be required to implement it by 1 June 1992.

On 13 September the United Kingdom became the first country to sign the Council of Europe convention on insider trading. Like the directive, the convention provides for co-operation between states that have ratified it but differs from the directive in not setting minimum standards for national regulations.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in what circumstances he would now reopen cases referred to him by the Stock Exchange since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to possible insider dealing offences. Insider dealing did not become an offence until June 1980.

All cases are considered on their merits. If significant new evidence of a possible offence came to light my right hon. Friend would be prepared to reconsider a case where it had earlier been decided that no further action was appropriate.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the Government's policy towards granting the Stock Exchange powers of prosecution for cases of insider dealing.

Mr. Redwood: Clause 195 of the Companies Bill provides for the Secretary of State to consent to the bringing of prosecutions in respect of insider dealing offences by persons or bodies other than himself. It is intended to use this power to consent to such prosecutions by the International Stock Exchange in suitable cases.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the latest figure for the numbers employed in his Department to investigate cases of insider dealing.

Mr. Redwood: Most investigations into possible insider dealing offences are undertaken by inspectors appointed under section 177 of the Financial Services Act. There are currently 32 such inspectors, of whom one is an official of the Department. There is in my Department a unit of six staff, whose main task is to consider possible insider dealing cases for investigation by inspectors, to liaise with such inspectors and to follow up inspectors' reports. In addition, lawyers from solicitors branch give advice and conduct prosecutions as necessary. They are supported by professional investigation officers who are involved as needed.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of cases of suspected insider dealing where proceedings for prosecution were instituted by his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: Insider dealing did not become a criminal offence until 23 June 1980. Since then the number of cases of suspected insider dealing offences where proceedings for prosecutions were instituted by the Department of Trade and Industry in each year is as follows:

	Number
1980[1]	0
1981	1
1982	1
1983	1
1984	0
1985	0
1986	2
1987	3
1988	3
1989[2]	7

[1] From 23 June 1980.

[2] To date.

Prosecutions for insider dealing offences have also been instituted by other prosecuting authorities.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of insider dealing referred by the Stock Exchange to his Department have been reopened since the passage of the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Redwood: None.

Ferranti

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the Coopers Lybrand interim report on the current Ferranti situation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 2 November 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

No. This is a matter for the Ferranti board which commissioned the report.

THE ARTS

Libraries (Model Byelaws)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make it his policy that paragraph 4 of the model byelaws for library authorities issued by his Department will not be used as justification for excluding people with physical disabilities, mental handicaps or AIDS from entering and using libraries.

Mr. Luce: Model byelaw 4 was intended to give library authorities the power to exclude from public libraries persons who are offensively unclean or suffering from infectious or contagious diseases. Application of the byelaw is at the discretion of library officers and they, I believe, in exercising their power, act reasonably and with justification in the interests of all the users of the library.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from disability organisations regarding the model byelaws for library authorities issued by his office.

Mr. Luce: Within the last two years the only representation I have received has been from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation about the public libraries' discretion to admit powered wheelchairs and library users with infectious or contagious diseases.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he proposes to revise the model byelaws issued to library authorities.

Mr. Luce: I shall consider the need for a revision of the model byelaws after secondary legislation arising from the Local Government and Housing Bill 1989 is complete.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the model byelaws issued by his Department for use by library authorities permit libraries to refuse admission to disabled people using powered wheelchairs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Model byelaws allow local authorities, in framing their own byelaws, to regulate the use of their facilities and the conduct of persons in premises where these facilities are provided.

Model byelaw 5 specifies that the consent of a library officer is required before a wheeled vehicle, other than an invalid chair, can be brought into a library. The model byelaw allows library authorities to limit the exception to hand-propelled invalid chairs. I believe that, where library authorities have chosen to give the library officers the power to exclude powered wheelchairs, this is done reasonably and with due consideration to the circumstances that prevail in the library at that time.

Non-professional Arts

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much his Department currently spends in supporting the non-professional arts.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The Office of Arts and Libraries does not fund arts organisations directly: that is the responsibility of the Arts Council and the Regional Arts Associations. The council's policy is not to fund amateur activities which, by their nature, are largely self-supporting. It does provide professional support to some amateur activity, as well as funding festivals and other events which may include some amateur work, but it is not possible to cost this accurately.

EC Culture

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the competence of the European Community in cultural matters.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The Treaty of Rome makes no specific provision regarding culture as such, although there is a reference in article 36 to the protection of national treasures.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the cultural dimension of the policies of the European Community.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The meetings of the European Ministers responsible for cultural matters provide a useful opportunity to work together and exchange information on matters of mutual interest.

Arts Budget

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what evidence he has that national arts companies and organisations are budgeting for a deficit.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: My attention has been drawn to the difficulties that some arts organisations have encountered as a result of price movements and other developments. The Arts Council expects those organisations to take account of these factors in setting their budgets for the coming year.

Sale Room Prices

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what his Department estimates the rise in inflation of sale room prices for works of art over the past 10 years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: Based on information available for the period September 1979–July 1989 the rise in prices is as follows:

	Percentage increase
Old Master Paintings	266
19th Century European Paintings	254
Impressionist Paintings	974
Modern Paintings	880
Continental Ceramics	138
Chinese Ceramics	204
English Silver	188
Continental Silver	165
French and Continental Furniture	169
English Furniture	314
Aggregate	396

Tate in the North

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate of the cost of opening all floors of the Tate in the North, at Liverpool.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The development of the Tate gallery, Liverpool was planned in two phases. The second phase, which includes the conversion of a fourth floor, is estimated to cost £3 million at 1988 prices. The Tate gallery is raising these funds from the private sector.

School Visits

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate of the fall in visits by school parties to (a) theatres and (b) museums.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: I am currently monitoring the information available with the help of the Museums and Galleries Commission and the Arts Council.

Ministers of Culture

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the meetings of the European Ministers of Culture that (a) he and (b) his predecessor Ministers have attended to represent officially Her Majesty's Government since 1979.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]:

(a) I have attended the following meetings as Minister for the Arts:

EC Ministers of Culture Brussels	—20 December 1985
EC Ministers of Culture Amsterdam	—13 June 1986
EC Ministers of Culture Brussels	—12-14 November 1986
Council of Europe 5th Conference of European Culture Ministers, Sintra	—15-17 September 1987
EC Ministers of Culture Copenhagen	—10-11 December 1987
EC Ministers of Culture Brussels	—27 May 1988
EC Ministers of Culture Athens	—28-30 November 1988
EC Ministers of Culture Santiago de Compostela	—30-31 March 1989
EC Ministers of Culture Brussels	—17-18 May 1989
EC Ministers of Culture Blois	—2 November 1989

(b) I regret that full information concerning my predecessors' attendances at the meetings concerned is not readily available.

National Galleries and Museums (Correspondence)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will place in the Library a copy of the letter from the chairmen of national galleries and museums, which he received in July.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: I do not propose to do so.

Grants

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish a table showing the current level of grants by (a) the Arts Council and (b) the regional arts associations to enable client arts companies to pursue (i) social, (ii) educational and (iii) local activities.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: I am informed that it is not possible to give a precise breakdown on the basis of these categories.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish tables showing the level of purchase grants in (a) cash and (b) real terms for each national gallery and museum in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: Purchase grants for each of the national museums and galleries for which I am responsible have been as follows:

PSA Buildings

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts which national museums and galleries have not yet accepted responsibility for their buildings from the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: All of the national museums and galleries sponsored by my Department are now responsible for their building and maintenance programmes and received grant-in-aid for these purposes.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Employees

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that the agreement of trade unions is sought prior to any changes to remove employment rights from public sector employees as part of any future plans to privatise public sector jobs.

Mr. Lilley: The Government ensure that there is appropriate consultation with employees and their representatives about changes that affect them.

Northern Region

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many small businesses have been registered for value added tax in the Northern region for each year since 1983; and how many have been deregistered.

Mr. Ryder: Records are not maintained by size of business or in such a way that will enable figures for the Northern region to be identified with precision. However, the local VAT offices at Carlisle, Newcastle-Upon-Tyne, Washington and Middlesbrough cover an area bounded by Carlisle and Berwick in the north to Barrow and Scarborough in the south.

The numbers of VAT registrations and deregistrations processed by these offices in the years in question were:

Year	Registrations	Deregistrations
1983	6,679	5,595
1984	6,664	5,859
1985	7,456	7,521
1986	7,745	7,343
1987	7,926	6,648
1988	9,756	7,386
1989[1]	7,803	5,821

[1] to 30 September

Greater London (Legislation)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that prints of legislation relating to London and Greater London such as Greater London Council (General Powers) Acts are available to members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Greater London Council (General Powers) Acts and other local Acts relating to Greater London Council matters were published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, from which copies may still be obtained.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. Ryder: The Treasury plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the details requested.

Business Statistics Office (Newport)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff have been employed in the business statistics office in Newport in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lilley: The number of staff in post at the Business Statistics Office at 1 April of each of the last five years were:

	Number
1985	705·0
1986	706·5
1987	682·5
1988	660·5
1989	658·0

Imports

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage rate of growth of imports year by year from 1984 to 1989 of (a) capital goods and (b) consumer goods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The percentage growth in the volume of imports in each year from 1984 is as follows:

Overseas Trade Statistics basis

	Percentage change on previous year:
	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
(a) Capital goods	18	7·0	1·5	11·0	24	[1]21
(b) Consumer goods (including passenger motor cars)	3	2·5	9·0	8·5	16	[1]17

[1] 1989 figure is the first 9 months of 1989 over the same period in 1988.

Excluding the more erratic items—ships, North Sea installations and aircraft.

Official Report

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the price of the Official Report.

Mr. Ryder: Following a review by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, I have authorised increases of 65p in the prices of the daily part and Standing Committee debates and of £3 in the price of the weekly part. Subscription rates will be adjusted accordingly and the scale of charges for reprints of Members' speeches appearing in the Official Report will also be raised. These increases, coupled with careful control of production costs, are further steps towards eliminating the central subsidy required, a goal that has now been achieved with respect to the fortnightly index, bound volumes and the volume index where prices will remain unchanged. The rises will come into effect from the beginning of the new Session.

Small Business Tax Accounts

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Inland Revenue are taking to simplify tax accounts for small businesses.

Mr. Lilley: As from next April, detailed tax accounts will no longer be needed from many small businesses. Taxpayers will still need to keep accurate business records, but three line accounts will be accepted with tax returns. This relaxation could simplify dealing with tax for up to a million small businesses.

Civil Service Pay

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) by what percentage the pay of (a) grade 7 civil servants and (b) grade 5 civil servants would need to rise to equal the median pay levels of comparable private sector jobs;

(2) what was the outcome of the recent exercise on comparisons of senior Civil Service pay levels with the private sector.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 6 November 1989]: This year's pay negotiations for civil servants at grades 5 to 7 were informed by a survey of data on private sector pay levels and benefits for comparable jobs. The results of the survey are confidential to the parties and cannot therefore be released.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will raise the pay levels of civil servants to match those of comparable jobs in the private sector;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect on morale of the comparative levels of pay in the Civil Service and the private sector;

(3) when he next intends to undertake a comparison of private sector pay levels against Civil Service pay levels.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The longer term pay determination arrangements under the new flexible pay agreements, now covering nearly all civil servants, provide for surveys of private sector pay levels every four years. The appropriate data on pay for comparable jobs in the private sector are taken into account together with other factors, such as affordability, recruitment and retention patterns etc., in each of the negotiations about pay increases for civil servants. Morale can be influenced by many factors, one of which may be pay. As far as pay is concerned, all the recent settlements under the new flexible pay agreements have been overwhelmingly accepted by staff.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report details of those sections of his Department which have been relocated in the last five years, indicating the sites to which they have been moved; whether consideration is being given to future relocation of London-based sections of his Department to sites outside London; and whether the central Borders of Scotland has been identified as a suitable area for any future moves.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 6 November 1989]: No sections of the Treasury have been relocated in the last five years. A review of the location of its activities is taking place under the policy that my right hon. Friend the, then, Paymaster General announced on 31 March 1988 at columns 610-11. No decisions have yet been taken.

War Games

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if war games used by firms to instil aggressiveness are deductible against tax.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: Payments which are not of a capital nature are deductible for tax purposes in calculating trading profits if they are made wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the payer's trade.

Income

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the income per capita in each of the regions of England as a percentage of the United Kingdom level in 1979-80 and in each succeeding year up the latest available year.

(2) what was the income per capita in Northern Ireland as a percentage of the United Kingdom level in 1979-80 and in each succeeding year up to the latest available year.

(3) what was the income per capita in Scotland as a percentage of the United Kingdom level in 1979-80 and in each succeeding year up to the latest available year.

(4) what was the income per capita in Wales as a percentage of the United Kingdom level in 1979-80 and in each succeeding year up to the latest available year.

Mr. Major [holding answer 6 November 1989]: Figures for total personal sector income per capita are available for calendar rather than for fiscal years and these are as follows:

Total personal sector income per capita

(United Kingdom = 100)

The figures for the last four years were published in Economic Trends No. 421 November 1988, a copy of which is available in the Library. They are income estimates for the personal sector which in addition to households include private non-profitmaking bodies, unincorporated private businesses, private trusts and the funds of life assurance companies and pension schemes. The figures include income from employment, self-employment, rent (including imputed rent of owner-occupied dwellings), dividends plus net interest and social security benefits.

Figures for 1987 are provisional and a revised set including the year 1988 will be available in March-April 1990.

Figures for income per capita of the household sector (as opposed to the personal sector) have also been produced for 1984 and 1987 and these were published in Economic Trends No. 429 July 1989; a copy of which is available in the Library.

The per capita income is calculated by dividing total income by resident population, including children, in each region.

Trader Salesmen

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what resources he is making available to sanctioning the tax returns of self-employed trader salesmen in London.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 November 1989]: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the obligations and responsibilities required of by Her Majesty's Government in the event of the United Kingdom joining the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 31 October 1989]: These are contained in the resolution of the European Council of 5 December 1978 on the establishment of the European monetary system (EMS) and related matters.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fylingdales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held between the Soviet Union and the United States concerning the future of Fylingdales early warning station; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United States Administration keep us well briefed on those aspects of their talks with the Soviet Government which could affect our interests. It is not for us to divulge details.

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Marina Gorelik of Moscow.

(2) what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Isaak Aronovich Shifrin of Leningrad.

Mr. Maude: We have not previously raised these particular cases with the Soviet authorities but we will be happy to do so if the hon. Member will provide details.

Loan Service Personnel

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what amount of military aid he allocated in 1987-88 for the provision of loan service personnel to Belize;

(2) what amount of military aid he allocated in 1987-88 for the provision of loan service personnel to Thailand;

(3) what amount of military aid he allocated in 1987-88 for the provision of United Kingdom military training for Belize service personnel;

(4) what amount of military aid he allocated in 1987-88 for the provision of United Kingdom training for Thai service personnel.

Mr. Maude: It is not our practice to disclose the cost of assistance to individual countries.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Computer Centre (Livingston)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many firms submitted bids to run the Department's computer centre at Livingston.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: After considering the capabilities of a number of different firms, three companies were invited to tender for running the computer operations at ACC1 Livingston.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department or staff working within his Department, submitted a bid to retain in-house the contract for running the computer centre at Livingston.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: The option of running the area computer centre (ACC) in-house was considered on the basis of a full assessment by the line managers concerned of how the ACC would be run in-house under Civil Service management, in the same way as the Department's existing large computer centres. A bid was not made by the Department's staff. The ACC operations at Livingston constitute new work and the jobs of existing civil servants are not affected.

Computer Contracts

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has for putting out to tender other contracts running different aspects of the Department's computer work.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: It is the Government's policy to seek value for money by testing the market. Further computer work in the Department may be put out to tender. The decision to do so will be made on a case-by-case basis as the need arises.

Unemployed Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if when unemployed claimants take advantage of employment on trial and subsequently leave the job within the period in w[illegible]hey are allowed to without being held to be voluntarily unemployed transitional protection received during the previous claim will be reinstated in full if they are home owners who were receiving full help with their mortgage interest payments, will these be reinstated in full; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: Yes, providing the claimant satisfies the conditions for employment on trial for unemployment benefit purposes. We have also ensured that people who undertake employment for a trial period will continue to receive the higher earnings disregard, and similar concessions have been made available to people, such as lone parents, who are not required to be available for employment.

Homeless Families

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to restore the £6 housing benefit subsidy per week for each child aged under 11 years in a homeless family in bed-and-breakfast accommodation which resulted from recent changes in the benefit system.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: The arrangements for subsidising housing benefit paid to homeless families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, including those with children under the age of 11, enable local authorities to receive an equivalent level of support in 1989-90 to that provided to them through income support prior to 10 April 1989.

Pensioners

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the advertising undertaken to alert potential beneficiaries of their possible entitlement to the extra £5 pension this autumn with a view to ascertaining the extent to which pensioners were misled by those adverts, and to avoiding any such inadvertent confusion in future.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: I do not accept that the advertising was misleading. One of the major intentions of the publicity was to ensure that those in doubt made a claim.

Hostel Board and Lodging Charges

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how the Department will monitor the changes in the hostel board and lodging charges in respect of the cost of administration of the new arrangements to (a) the hostels and their management committees, (b) local authorities, and (c) Department of Social Security local offices.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: The Department will monitor carefully all aspects of the hostel changes, and will consider any points raised by hostels about administration costs. A grant of £0·5 million has been made available to local authorities to support their costs in taking on the payment of housing benefit to hostel dwellers.

Offices (Doncaster and Wath-on-Dearne)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by month and by social security office for the current year the number of short fixed-term temporary staff employed in Doncaster and Wath-on-Dearne social security offices, the reasons, and their qualifications.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: No fixed-term temporary staff have been employed at either Wath-on-Dearne or Doncaster (East) in the current year. The figures for Doncaster (West) are as follows:

	Number
1 January	3
1 February	7
1 March	7
1 April	7
1 May	4
1 June	4
1 July	3
1 August	3
1 September	2
1 October	9
1 November	12

The recruits were offered fixed-term contracts rather than permanent positions in view of the need to reduce staffing levels in 1990 when major computerisation is introduced. Temporary staff on fixed-term contracts are required to have similar qualifications to those employed on a permanent basis.

Civil Service Transfers

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, upon the creation of agencies providing his Department's operations, all existing Civil Service staff will be transferred to those agencies with at least existing salary scales, promotion prospects and conditions of service.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The staff of agencies will remain civil servants and members of the Department. We have not so far identified the need for any changes in conditions of service: if we do so, any such changes will be introduced only after the appropriate consultation with staff and their representatives.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish a response to the Occupational Pensions Board report on protecting pensions.

Mr. Newton: I am grateful to the Occupational Pensions Board for its report. As a result I will be bringing forward legislation at the earliest opportunity to strengthen the benefit security of members of occupational pension schemes and to provide for help for individuals in dealing with pension schemes. These measures reflect both the recommendations of the Occupational Pensions Board and the comments which have been made by right hon. and hon. Members, interested organisations and the public.

To improve benefit security, I propose four measures. First, we will strengthen the protection for early leavers from occupational pension schemes, which we introduced in 1985, by requiring schemes to revalue all future early leavers' preserved pension rights. Pension rights which go beyond the guaranteed minimum pension will have to be revalued in line with prices, up to a maximum of 5 per cent. a year. Secondly, where a pension scheme winds up, the same revaluation requirement will also apply to future pensions and to pensions in payment. Thirdly, again on wind up, any deficiency in a scheme's assets to meet scheme liabilities, including these new liabilities, will become a debt on the employer. Fourthly, we shall introduce a new ceiling on self-investment for pension schemes which will allow them to hold no more than 5 per cent. of their assets in the employer's business; schemes will of course be given time to meet this requirement.

I also intend to initiate a number of further steps to improve the range of help and advice available to individual pension scheme members. To provide an alternative to the High Court as a means of resolving scheme members' grievances, I propose that there shall be a pensions ombudsman. I propose, too, improved tracing services—based on a register of pension schemes—to help individuals discover which company is responsible for pension rights acquired in previous employment, and I wish to see the activities of the Occupational Pension Advisory Service extended and funded more securely. There will also be amendments to the disclosure regulations to improve information available to scheme members.

I shall be implementing other OPB recommendations which include better protection and increased choice for members involved in bulk transfers between pensions schemes.

I shall be seeking the co-operation of the industry in implementing these initiatives. Discussions with the relevant organisations will be set in hand immediately.

Family Benefits

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) mothers and (b) single-parent fathers are currently receiving child benefit; how many of each are receiving single-parent supplement; and what have been the comparable numbers in each of the past two years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 23 October 1989]: The information is not available in the exact form requested. The following is the estimated number of women and men receiving child benefit and one parent benefit for the latest three years:

	Child benefit		One parent benefit
December	Women	Men	Women	Men
1986	6,626,000	135,000	544,000	63,000
1987	6,578,000	134,000	615,000	66,000
1988	6,572,000	134,000	643,000	64,000

SCOTLAND

Health Service

92. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had in the past month concerning Government proposals for changes in the National Health Service relating, in particular, to the impact on the Health Service in Scotland.

93. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had in the past month concerning Government proposals for changes in the National Health Service relating, in particular, to the impact on the Health Service in Scotland.

94. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consultations he has had in the past month concerning Government proposals for changes in the National Health Service relating, in particular, to the impact on the Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During October, my right hon. and learned Friend and I continued consultations with a wide range of interested bodies and individuals. In particular, I met on 23 October the Scottish Committee on Hospital Medical Services. Further discussions have taken place at official level with those who have expressed an interest in the proposals for GP practice budgets and for self-governing trusts.

Laboratory and Radiodiagnostic Services

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many health boards are currently exploring the possibility of placing out laboratory and radiodiagnostic services to competitive tendering.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All health boards are examining the services which they provide to ensure that quality is maintained and value for money achieved.

Lithotriptor Centres

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will compile centrally statistics which show the use by National Health Service patients and private patients of the Scottish lithotriptor centres.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate to supply the detail requested.

Community Charge

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates his Department has for the costs of administration in implementing the community charge transitional payment scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has made it clear that local authorities will be reimbursed for the reasonable costs they incur in administering the new transitional relief scheme. The administration costs will clearly depend upon the nature of the scheme, and we are at present discussing that with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Monuments (Policy Review)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reply to the policy review on the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments—England, Wales and Scotland that was undertaken by Peat, Marwick, McClintock; and when he expects to act on the report's recommendations.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The consultants' review was commissioned as part of a policy review of the three Commissions undertaken jointly by the Department of the Environment, the Scottish Development Department, and CADW (Welsh Historic Monuments). We announced our decisions on the main points of principle raised in the Peat, Marwick, McLintock reports recommendations relating to the Scottish Commission on 22 February at columns 588-89. There remain further points of detail which affect all three Commissions. We aim to conclude this work by the end of the year.

Mortgage and Rent Arrears

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing levels of rent arrears in public sector housing in Scotland as a whole and in each district and island area on 30 September for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 31 October 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 26 January 1989 to the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) at columns 723-26. Updated information for 1988 is given in the table:

Council House Sales

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list details of sales of council housing to sitting tenants up to the latest convenient date, by district within regional sub-totals; and what is the percentage of the relevant stock that existed at 30 September 1979 which has been sold to date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is set out in the following table:

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to give himself power to call a public inquiry into the actions of a local authority where a public right of way has been altered, closed or changed in any way.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 November 1989]: There are sufficient powers, under current legislation, to allow for public inquiries where appropriate.

WALES

Health Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage of the gross domestic product per head for Wales spent on the National Health Service calculated on the Welsh gross domestic product.

Mr. Grist: In 1987–88 gross expenditure on the National Health Service in Wales was £1,136·5 million, which is equivalent to 8 per cent. of the provisional 1987 figure for Welsh GDP of £14,156 million.

Nursery Schools

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children are attending nursery schools in each Welsh county; and what proportion they are of the under-five child population.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information as at January 1989 is as follows:

	Number of pupils	Pupils as percentage of under-five population
Clwyd	326	1·3
Dyfed	207	1·0
Gwent	1,130	3·8
Gwynedd	—	—
Mid Glamorgan	1,228	3·3
Powys	—	—
South Glamorgan	803	2·8
West Glamorgan	227	1·0

This information relates solely to children in nursery schools. There is a total of 50,202 children under five in primary/nursery schools, of which 23,613 are in nursery classes, 69 per cent. and 32·5 per cent. respectively of the under-five population.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the numbers of children attending local authority nursery schools in Newport, Gwent; and what proportion they are of the under-five child population.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In January 1989, 415 children attended maintained nursery schools in Newport, Gwent representing 4·4 per cent. of the under-five population. Some under-fives also attend nursery classes in primary schools but no figures are available.

Cadw

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the total per head of the population of Wales that was spent by Cadw in each of the past three years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year	Total expenditure £'000	Estimated population[1] '000	Estimated expenditure per head of population £
1986-87	4,173	2,821	1·48
1987-88	5,806	2,836	2·05
1988-89	5,251	2,857	1·84

[1] The population figures are based on estimates calculated on the 30 June for each year.

Rescue Archaeology

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase the funds available for rescue archaeology in the wetlands of Gwent.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Funding for rescue archaeology is determined on an annual basis in consultation with the four archaeological trusts in Wales. The Department has specifically made available additional resources in respect of the recently discovered wetland site in Caldicot country park. To date our commitment to that particular site exceeds £40,000 and its future is the subject of discussions between the Department and the local authorities which own the site.

Schools (Local Management)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment his Department has made of the cost of implementation of local management of schools in Wales and its year-on-year cost after implementation.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have announced proposals for specific grant support for expenditure of over £6 million over the period 1989-90 to 1991-92 for the introduction of local management, the training of governors, and LEA inspection.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment his Department has made of the training required by (a) head teachers and (b) school governors for the implementation and running of local management of schools in Wales and the cost for each during implementation and year on year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Local education authorities have a duty to provide training for school governors and head teachers. We have made available £582,000 in 1989-90 for management training and appraisal for head teachers as a national priority under the LEA training grants scheme. In 1990-91 £470,000 will be available for management training alone. Expenditure of up to £400,000 is also available this year through education support grant for governor training and Government support will be at a comparable level in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

NHS Treatment Centres

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when, pursuant to his answer of 30 October to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside, he will be in a position to provide details on the operation of treatment centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The discussions between the Welsh Office and managers and clinicians in the NHS, to which I referred in my answer of 30 October, are at an advanced stage. Subject to their satisfactory conclusion my right hon. Friend would hope to write to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

Ancient Monuments Commission

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to reply to the policy review of the Royal Commission on ancient and historical monuments—England, Wales and Scotland undertaken by Peat, Marwick, McClintock; and when he expects to act on the report's recommendations.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The consultants' review was commissioned as part of a policy review of the three Royal Commissions undertaken jointly by the Department of the Environment, Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments, and the Scottish Development Department. Decisions relating to the Welsh Commission on the main points of principle raised in the KPMG report were announced on 20 February 1989. There remain further points of detail which affect all three commissions. These are under active consideration and are the subject of discussion with the commission in Wales. We aim to conclude this further work by the end of the year.

EMPLOYMENT

Part-time Workers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation which establishes a minimum wage for part-time employees.

Mr. Nicholls: No. A national minimum wage would raise employers' costs and destroy jobs.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation which guarantees equal opportunities for part-time workers in the areas of training and promotion.

Mr. Nicholls: No. These are matters which are best determined by employers and their employees taking into account local conditions and the needs of both the work force and the business. Government legislation on these issues is neither necessary nor appropriate.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation which guarantees equal rights for part-time workers, including pay, maternity leave, a sick pay scheme and a revised pension plan.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Pay and conditions are matters to be negotiated between employers and employees to suit their individual circumstances. The 1·4 million growth in part-time employment in Great Britain since 1983 shows its popularity with employers and employees alike.

Assaults on Staff

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many assaults on members of employment service staff were reported in (a) 1988 and (b) the first nine months of 1989.

Mr. Eggar: In 1988 the number of reported physical assaults on employment service staff was 65. There were also 212 reported incidents of threatening behaviour or verbal abuse. The figures for the first nine months of 1989 are 107 and 711 respectively. A direct comparison of the two periods is misleading since in September 1988 the reporting system was improved and the definition of an assault was broadened.

Staff Shortages

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployment benefit offices and jobcentres have been closed during normal opening hours because of staff shortages during the last 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service does not keep detailed records of short-term closures during normal opening hours by its 2,000 offices.

Employment service managers have the authority to vary opening arrangements in the event of serious staff absences. Typically these absences impact most heavily on small offices with managers responding by closing at lunch time or in the case of part-time offices reducing the number of days they are open.

Currently some 20 offices are closed or are providing much reduced services because of industrial action by some staff. I deplore the industrial action, but I am grateful for the efforts being made by other staff members to avoid hardship to unemployed people and to ensure that benefits are paid on time.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the present number of (a) men and (b) women who were unemployed in the Greater London area on 1 November.

Mr. Nicholls: The following information is available in the Library. On 14 September 1989, the latest available date, there were, seasonally adjusted, 149,000 male and 57,200 female unemployed claimants in the Greater London region.

Engineering (Training)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to be in a position to make a statement about future arrangements for training in the engineering industry.

Mr. Nicholls: Consultations with the engineering industry training board and organisations representing employers in the engineering industry have now been completed. My right hon. Friend hopes to be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in making arrangements for the future of training in engineering, he will ensure that existing provision by EITB for the training of women engineers, for adult training in modern technology skills and for the promotion in schools of engineering as a career, is safeguarded and will be continued by the successor body.

Mr. Nicholls: While the Government recognise the value of these EITB services, they believe that it is for industry to decide whether a voluntary successor body should continue to provide particular services currently run by the industrial training board.

Disabled People (Quotas)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many members of the staff of his Department are engaged on ensuring that the Disabled Persons Employment Act 1944 in respect of the quota system for disabled people is implemented.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 6 November 1989]: All jobcentre staff involved in filling vacancies have some responsibility to help to ensure that the quota system is implemented. The main responsibility falls on disablement resettlement officers and the disablement advisory service. During the quarter ending 7 July 1989 664 staff were engaged in these services specifically for people with disabilities.

Claimants

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have transferred from unemployment benefit to (a) sickness benefit, and (b) other benefits in each month since January 1987.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not collected in the form requested. An estimate of the number of spells of sickness and invalidity benefit which linked with a claim to unemployment benefit made in the previous eight weeks is shown in the table for each month from January 1987 to March 1988, the latest month for which statistics are available. Information is not available for other benefits.

DEFENCE

Fylingdales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications of the 1972 ABM treaty for the continued operation of Fylingdales early warning station.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom is not a party to the anti-ballistic missile treaty, and we therefore have no locus to interpret it. We are, however, satisfied that the modernisation programme for the Fylingdales ballistic missile early warning system fully conforms with the obligations of the United States under the treaty.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what installations the Soviet Union has which serve a similar purpose to the Fylingdales early warning station.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet Union completed the deployment in the mid-1970s of a system of ballistic missile early warning radars at six locations around the periphery of the USSR. A further network of more modern, and technically advanced, early warning radars are being deployed at eight locations around the periphery of the USSR. The Soviet Union has recently accepted that a ninth station, at Krasnoyarsk, represents a violation of the 1972 ABM treaty and has announced its decision to dismantle it.

Service Widows

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now bring the pensions of pre-1973 service widows into line with those paid to those widowed since 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Under the rules of the armed forces pension scheme the payment of pensions to the widows of servicemen depends upon the terms and conditions in force at the date on which their husbands completed their service, or died in service. The rules of the scheme were changed in 1973 and these changes applied only to personnel giving service on or after 31 March 1973. In accordance with normal principles and practice for occupational pension schemes, the revised rules did not apply retrospectively to include former members of the scheme, and there are no plans to do so now.

Loan Service Personnel

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many loan service personnel are currently deployed in Belize;

(2) how many loan service personnel are currently deployed in Thailand;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report the names of all the countries which have had access to training by members of Her Majesty's armed forces serving overseas on secondment or loan during each of the last four years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British service personnel served on loan or secondment in each year from 1986-89 in the following countries:

Australia
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Bermuda
Brunei
Dominica
Fiji
Gambia
Ghana
Hong Kong
Indonesia
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lesotho
Mauritius
New Zealand
Nigeria
Oman
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
United Arab Emirate
Zimbabwe[1]

In addition British service personnel served on loan or secondment in the following countries in the years shown:

	Year
Botswana	1988 and 1989
Chile	1986
Grenada	1989
Malaysia	1988 and 1989
Singapore	1988
Turks and Caicos	1988 and 1989
Uganda	1986 and 1987

There are currently 12 United Kingdom loan service personnel deployed in Belize, a reduction from the figure of 14 which was published in the Eighth Report of the House of Commons Defence Committee (HC 624, Session 1987-88).

There are no loan service personnel currently deployed in Thailand.

[1] Since January 1986 a wing of the British military advisory and training team has been specifically allocated to train Mozambican troops in Zimbabwe.

Specific details about personnel serving on loan or secondment are generally in confidence between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the country concerned.

Cambodian Troops

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether British troops have provided military training to the Khmer People's National Liberation Armed Forces or the National Sihanoukist Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to comment on allegations of this nature.

Frigates

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many frigates need to be ordered between now and 1994 in order to maintain an average annual ordering rate of 2·6 surface escorts per year.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 2 November 1989]: Thirteen would be needed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Ladies Toilets

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he intends to take to ensure an adequate supply of hand towels are available in all the ladies toilets in the House of Commons.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Authorities of the House make every effort to ensure that an adequate supply of hand towels is maintained in those lavatories set aside for the use of lady Members. Any difficulties over the adequacy of supplies should in the first instance be referred to the Serjeant at Arms.

Hon. Members (Medical Screening)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the annual payment to West Lambeth health authority by the House of Commons for medical screening for hon. Members; how many have used this facility; and what is the cost per patient.

Mr. Beith [holding answer 3 November 1989]: During the years 1986-88, 353 Members received medical screening at a total cost of £35,130·18 (an average of £99·52 per Member). In addition, a separate charge is levied for any set of X-rays provided as part of the screening process. During 1988, 17 such X-rays were suppled at a total cost of £510. The unit cost for this service has recently been increased to £40. Payment for the screening exercise is made direct to the united medical and dental school of Guy's and St. Thomas's hospitals and payment for X-rays to St. Thomas's hospital, which provides that service.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Poll Results

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received the results of the Horticultural Development Council poll and the poll of mushroom growers.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. The results of the polls are as follows:

HDC Poll

Response to question: are you in favour of retaining the HDC for a further five years?

	In favour	Against	Spoiled forms	Forms not returned	Total registered October 1989	Percentage of the voting who were in favour

Poll of mushroom growers

Response to question: are you in favour of joining the HDC?

	In favour	Against	Spoiled forms	Forms not returned	Total poll	Percentage of the voting who were in favour
Number of growers	88	22	—	253	363	80·0
Percentage	(24·2)	(6·1)	—	(69·7)	—	—

	In favour	Against	Spoiled forms	Forms not returned	Total poll	Percentage of the voting who were in favour

Percentage	(66·3)	(14·4)	—	(19·3)	—	—

Note—Poll figures rounded to 1 decimal point

The result of the poll is in favour of continuing the HDC, and all organisations representing producers and workers employed in the industry are also in favour. The Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I have therefore decided to confirm the decision originally announced on 10 July 1989 in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill). Arrangements will also be made to bring mushrooms within the scope of the operations of the council. This decision is subject to the approval of Parliament.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO Exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and Exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. Maclean: My Department plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the detail requested.

Mobile Bakeries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how his Department plans to make mobile bakeries available to local authorities after nuclear attack;

(2) what is the current annual cost of storage and maintenance for the stock of mobile bakeries held by his Department; and what are the expected changes to these costs following the current refurbishment programme;

(3) what is the estimated cost of replacing the mobile bakery units held by his Department;

(4) what the estimated total cost will be for refurbishing the mobile bakery units held by his Department for use in a time of crisis;

(5) when the refurbishment of the stock of mobile bakeries held by his Department will be complete;

(6) where the mobile bakeries held by his Department for use in time of crisis are stored.

Mr. Maclean: The refurbishment of mobile bakery units to ensure that they fully meet modern health and safety operational requirements is due to be completed early in 1990 at a total cost of £1,170,092. The current cost of replacing this equipment would be approximately £2·5 million.

The mobile bakeries are a part of the stockpile of food and emergency feeding equipment. Expenditure on these activities is set out in class IV vote 4 of the 1989-90 Supply Estimates. It is not possible to identify separately the costs specifically relating to the storage and maintenance in store of the bakery equipment but they are not expected to change significantly as a result of the refurbishment programme.

Bakery equipment is held in each home defence region and would be deployed to augment local emergency baking facilities as instructed by the regional government food and agriculture officer.

Horses and Ponies (Exports)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to maintain minimum values below which the export of horses and ponies is forbidden after 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The system of minimum values designed to prevent the export of horses for slaughter is a purely national arrangement. As part of the single market programme the Commission has made a proposal for a community regulation on the protection of animals during transport and as drafted this makes no provision for our controls on horse exports to continue. Whilst I can hold out no hope that other member states will be persuaded to apply the minimum value arrangements throughout the Community, our objective will be to ensure that there will be adequate welfare standards during all journeys and that these are implemented and enforced rigorously throughout the Community to protect horses and ponies.

Zoonoses Order 1989

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will revoke the Zoonoses order 1989 as it applies to poultry.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Catering Industry

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which sections of the catering industry are within his ministerial resonsibility.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is concerned with all aspects of the food chain of which the catering industry is an integral part.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his Department is doing to research the problem of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: The Department is currently funding an extensive programme of research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy, including studies into the epidemiology of the disease, transmission to offspring of affected animals and to other species, molecular biological and genetic aspects, clinico-pathology and embryo transfer. The cost of the programme this year is estimated to be over £2 million. There is also international collaboration and discussion with colleagues in the EC, the United States of America and with the Organisation Internationale des Epizooties.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if all animal parts susceptible to bovine spongiform encephalopathy are being banned from use in food production;

(2) if animal foodstuffs are thoroughly checked for bovine spongiform encephalopathy;

(3) what measures are being taken to diagnose bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle.

Mr. Maclean: All suspected cases of BSE are being slaughtered and destroyed so that they cannot enter the food chain. It is also the Government's intention, as an ultra-precautionary measure, to ban from human consumption certain bovine offals which might be capable of harbouring the BSE agent in case any animals with pre-clinical disease are still being slaughtered for human consumption. There is no test available for the presence of BSE in live animals or products derived from them.

Animal Foodstuffs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if animal foodstuffs are imported from countries where there are no restrictions on the use of diseased carcases in animal feed.

Mr. Maclean: Whether or not exporting countries place restrictions on the use of diseased carcases in animal feeding stuffs, our import conditions require, among other things, that animal-based proteins intended for use as animal feeding stuffs undergo pre-export heat treatment. This has to be confirmed by their veterinary authorities and provides the necessary safeguards against the introduction of animal diseases.

Plant Health Inspectors

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many plant health inspectors he has employed in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The number of plant health inspectors employed by my Department in each of the last 10 years was as follows:

	Number
1979	69
1980	70
1981	76
1982	85
1983	79
1984	85
1985	83
1986	83
1987	77

Water Authority Sewage

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the practice of farmers spreading sewage supplied by water authorities on their land; what regulating controls there are; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The use of sewage sludge in agriculture is controlled by the Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989 which were made, as respects England, by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and which are complemented by a code of practice. The regulations, which implement EC directive 86/278/EEC, specify the requirements to be observed before and after use including analysis of the sludge and soil. So far this year my Department has received six letters on this question, mostly concerning the need to minimise any public health risk.

Animal Products

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on the introduction of a fourth criterion in addition to those of quality, safety and efficacy with regard to animal products tested under the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Maclean: The purpose of the licensing under the Medicines Act is to protect public and animal health and I do not believe that socio-economic or other additional criteria contribute to this purpose.

PRIME MINISTER

South Africa

Q27. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has made to the state President of South Africa.

The Prime Minister: The Government have made representations to President de Klerk on a number of issues and is encouraged by President de Klerk's recent moves: the release of Mr. Sisulu and others is a major step in the right direction and we urge President de Klerk to continue on the path towards negotiations.

Unemployment

Q84. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on progress in reducing unemployment.

The Prime Minister: In September 1989 the number of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 1,695,000. Unemployment has been falling for 38 consecutive months. It is now at its lowest level for nearly nine years, and well below the European Community average.

Magistrates

Q90. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will transfer responsibility for the magistracy from the Home Office to the Lord Chancellor's Department; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The allocation of functions between Ministers and Departments is kept under regular review. There are currently no plans to transfer the Home Office's responsibilities for the magistrates courts to the Lord Chancellor's Department.

European Currency Exchanges

Q105. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the degree of progress made by member states in achieving freedom of currency exchanges; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The timetable for the removal of restrictions on movements of capital by member states is set down in a Council directive of 24 June 1988 and was endorsed by the European Council in Hanover in June 1988. Removal of these restrictions is essential to the completion of the single market and it is in the interests of all member states that the timetable is met.

Homelessness

Q111. Miss Hoey: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit the Bondway emergency night shelter in Vauxhall and participate in the nightly soup run for the homeless on the South Bank.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Mr. Charles Powell

Q20. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister for how long she now expects Mr. Charles Powell to remain as principal private secretary in her office.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Powell serves as my private secretary for foreign affairs and will serve in my office until it is time for him to leave.

Visits

Q22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister when she next plans to visit Wales.

Q31. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit by train.

Q119. Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit Lancaster.

Q122. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Towcester.

Q176. Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit Lancashire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Civil Service (Scotland)

Q121. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to ensure adherence by Scottish Office civil servants to the rules covering their communicating with political parties; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: All staff in the Scottish Office are aware that civil servants must be impartial as between political parties. Very recently, as part of a routine updating of standing instructions, staff in the Scottish Office have been reminded of the importance of maintaining the principle of impartiality.

Inner Cities

Q169. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on progress with the Government's inner cities strategy.

The Prime Minister: Excellent progress continues to be made in the regeneration of our inner cities under the Government's action for cities programme, spending on which is planned to increase from £3 billion in 1988-89 to about £3·5 billion this year. Unemployment in the 57 inner-city target areas has fallen by 23 per cent. over the past year.

Insider Trading

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what was the content of recent statements made by her press office in relation to Ministers and insider trading.

The Prime Minister: My press office made it clear that they had no knowledge of the story put out by The Scotsman and were therefore not in a position to comment.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 November.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 November.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 November.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today; then I shall depart for the United States of America to address the United Nations General Assembly.

Cambodia (SAS)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has given her authority for the deployment of members of the Special Air Services to train troops in Cambodia.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 November 1989]: It has been the practice of successive Governments never to discuss the activities of the special forces.

HEALTH

North-Western Regional Health Authority

7. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of funding to the North Western regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Funding for the North Western regional health authority for 1989-90 is £1,238,710,000. This is an all-time record, representing a real terms increase of 33 per cent. over 1978-79, compared with 30 per cent. for England as a whole. Revenue and capital allocations for 1990-91 will be notified to all regional health authorities after the Autumn Statement.

NHS Reorganisation (Liverpool)

15. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposed re-organisation of the National Health Service in Liverpool.

Mr. Freeman: If the hon. Member is referring to the review of how to improve the pattern of acute services in Liverpool, this was commissioned by the Mersey regional health authority. The region has asked districts to take the suggestions of the review into account in its own long term planning. Any major service change is, of course, subject to the normal consultative process.

NHS Reform

16. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many other groups of doctors, in addition to Sarum '89 he has met to discuss his proposals for reform of the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: My colleagues and I have had very many meetings with representative bodies of the medical profession, with other groups and with individual doctors.

35. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in association with the proposed Health Service reforms with regard to general practitioners' prescribing budgets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received 706 representations specifically referring to the proposals on prescribing budgets. In addition to this we have received 12,213 representations about the White Paper proposals in general, many of which have raised questions about, among other things, indicative prescribing budgets. Many of the letters expressed concern about the continued availability of medicines under the new system. We have been able to reassure correspondents that, as the representatives of the profession have now accepted, general practitioners will be able to continue to prescribe all those medicines which individual patients might need.

58. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to meet representatives of the British Medical Association to discuss changes in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The BMA and my Department have not yet fixed a date for my next meeting with representatives of the BMA. I have no doubt that we will continue to have constructive discussions on how best to implement the proposals in the White Paper "Working For Patients".

59. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to restate the overriding duty of a general practitioner to consider only the best interests of his or her patient when considering what drugs or medication to prescribe in forthcoming legislation affecting the National Health Service

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have always made it clear that their proposals for reforming the NHS would not in any way prevent people getting the medicines that they need. The representatives of the medical profession accepted on 28 September that the management arrangements proposed by the Government for indicative prescribing budgets would not infringe in any way the right of a general practitioner to prescribe all those medicines which individual patients might need.

63. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the proposals to allow district health authorities to purchase health care from hospitals will affect patient care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: These proposals will result in better standards of health care and more choice for patients. They will enable district health authorities to use their resources to obtain the best value for money in terms of high quality consumer-responsive services for their population. Districts will have a clear responsibility to ensure that a full range of health care services is available. They will specify the services required from each hospital or unit, whether or not it is under their direct managerial control. They will also specify the quality standards expected and ensure that these are met. Districts will be able to improve services as they will be financed on a basis which enables them to use any units which meets their requirements. They will use this freedom, in close consultation with local GPs, to obtain the most appropriate pattern of services for their population and to offer the maximum possible choice to patients.

27. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether general practitioners' ability to refer patients for treatment will be affected by the proposed reform of the National Health Service.

79. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the implications of the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" for general practitioners' freedom to refer patients for treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 23 October at column 318.

Self-governing Hospitals

17. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that patients are aware that the proposed self-governing hospitals will not be opting-out of the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have made it quite clear, in published documents on the NHS review proposals, and in statements to the House and in public, that NHS trusts will remain firmly within the NHS. We shall continue to take every opportunity to explain our proposals and to dispel any misconceptions.

The Chief Executive of the NHS Management Executive has recently announced (18 October) a new initiative to improve communications and stimulate a better understanding of the Government's proposals amongst NHS staff. This will help to ensure that the people who have direct contact with patients have the necessary information to explain the implications of the NHS review proposals to them.

62. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which services will have to be retained by National Health Service self-governing hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It will be for district health authorities to determine, in the light of local circumstances, what services are required to meet the health care needs of their resident popultion and to secure provision of those services through contracts. As part of this process, health authorities will identify those services which must be provided locally. Where a unit which applies for NHS trust status is the only sensible option for providing such services my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will approve arrangements for their continued provision on establishment of the NHS trust. Any later changes will be subject to my right hon. and learned Friend's further approval if they cannot be agreed locally.

67. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service hospitals have now indicated their interest in self-governance.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received 186 expressions of interest in NHS trust status. Some are for non-hospital facilities and others include more than one hospital.

73. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress towards establishing self-governing hospitals he expects to achieve by 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) on 3 November.

Apart from the units which are preparing applications for NHS trust status in 1991, others will prepare applications to become trusts later. I expect to receive applications in about 18 months time from hospitals and units wishing to become self-governing NHS trusts from April 1992.

75. Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken to develop the necessary commissioning expertise within district health authorities so that they will be in a position to purchase services from self-governing hospital trusts from April 1991; and whether his Department has any plans to revise this implementation date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 2 November, Duncan Nichol, the chief executive of the NHS management executive announced a major programme of work to support DHAs in adopting their new role. The project will draw on the results of local initiatives in 11 districts and ensure that the lessons learned are shared quickly across the service. We have no plans to change the timetable for implementing the White Paper reforms.

90. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many requests for information he has received from hospitals interested in acquiring self-governing status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 186 expressions of interest in acquiring NHS trust status have been received. Some of these are for non-hospital facilities and others include more than one hospital.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which managers of hospitals for mentally handicapped people have expressed an interest in opting out under the arrangements outlined in the Government White Paper.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Eleven units for mentally handicapped people have expressed interest in NHS trust status. A number of other expressions of interest in NHS trust status, for whole district services and for community services, also include units for mentally handicapped patients. There is, of course, no question of any hospital "opting-out" of the NHS.

Mr. Graham Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the result of the recent ballot of staff of Queen's medical centre on opting-out.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that a ballot relating to the expression of interest in NHS trust status from the University hospital in Nottingham was held at the request of Nottingham Trades Council, the results of which are a matter for the trades council. There is, of course, no question of any hospital "opting-out" of the NHS.

Cottage Hospitals

19. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on the promotion and support of cottage hospitals under the proposed new funding arrangements for the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Small hospitals can have a valuable role to play in providing a range of services if that is what is needed locally. Under our proposals district health authorities will have responsibiity for ensuring provision of a comprehensive range of services for their resident population. They will be able to take full account of services offered by cottage hospitals in deciding where to place contracts.

Practice Budgets

20. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received any expressions of interest from general practitioners' practices about operating their own practice budgets, as proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Although we have not yet asked GPs to indicate formally their interest in being directly funded as practice budget holders, the level of interest shown by eligible practices has been encouraging.

National Health Service Expenditure

21. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the gross domestic product was spent on the National Health Service in the most recent year for which figures are available, and what was the percentage in 1978.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1988, 5·2 per cent. of the United Kingdom's gross domestic product was spent on the National Health Service compared with 4·9 per cent. in 1978.

25. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department expects to spend on the National Health Service in 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: Planned expenditure for 1990-91 for the National Health Service in England currently stands at £22·1 billion. At this time of the year we are awaiting the Chancellor's Autumn Statement; I cannot, of course, anticipate its contents.

66. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total increase or decrease in real terms, taking inflation into account, in Health Service spending in England and Wales over the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: In the past 10 years, since 1979-80, gross expenditure on the National Health Service in England and Wales has increased by 38 per cent. in real terms. Over the period since 1978-79 real terms expenditure has increased by 40 per cent.

East Anglia Regional Health Authority

22. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of the East Anglia regional health authority, and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman on 20 September at one of the bi-monthly meetings with regional health authority chairmen. He discussed various matters of common interest.

44. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional funding he anticipates will come to the East Anglia regional health authority as a result of the new allocation formula announced in the White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Actual allocations for 1990-91 have yet to be decided and are dependent on the outcome of this year's public expenditure survey. Under the new formula, which will be more sensitive to population growth, East Anglia's share of the resources available nationally will increase and continue to increase as the region's share of population increases.

Pendle Community Hospital

23. Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the Pendle community hospital.

Mr. Freeman: The Pendle community hospital is a £6 million development in community hospital care which will open in September 1991. It will provide 24 beds which general practitioners can use for treating patients suffering from a range of medical conditions not requiring the full services available at the district general hospital. In addition to this, so that day cases will benefit from ready access to physiotherapy and occupational therapy, an acute outpatients department will have extensive clinical facilities in medical, surgical and paediatric services. There will also be 45 beds for the elderly who need medical treatment and rehabilitation care.

Community Care

24. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he plans to increase the participation of disabled people in the planning of their own community care services.

47. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about his plans for ensuring that disabled people are fully consulted when their community care needs are assessed.

48. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he plans to promote choice for the individual disabled person or carer in the new arrangements for community care services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Member to the statement which my right hon. and learned Friend made to the House on 12 July announcing our main proposals for the future organisation of community care. In that statement my right hon. and learned Friend outlined arrangements designed to widen choice to individuals in need of community care and provide more appropriate services closer to their wishes and needs. Our forthcoming White Paper will set out in detail how we intend to achieve these aims.

72. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase and encourage advocacy opportunities for disabled people with regard to community care provision.

85. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he plans to put support for the principle of advocacy into practice in future arrangements for community care services.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that the right hon. and hon. Members have in mind the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, which deal with the appointment and rights of authorised representatives of disabled persons in connection with local authority welfare services. We have already implemented six key sections of this Act, but we have always made it clear that further implementation would depend on the availability of the necessary resources. With section 1 there is the additional complication that implementation would require detailed procedures to be set out in regulations. We hope to begin consultations soon with the local authority associations about the costs of implementing these sections, together with section 3, and with those associations and other interested bodies about the appointment procedures which would be set out in regulations under section 1.

Post-abortion Syndrome

26. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the 1976 study of post-abortion syndrome, commissioned from the Royal College of General Practitioners, will be published.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a major United Kingdom study of the short and long-term sequelae of abortion. Since it began in 1976 papers have been published covering induced abortions and their early sequelae; the outcome of pregnancy following induced abortion; and the sequelae of induced abortion. I understand that completion of the analysis of the large amount of data collected by the researchers is taking much longer than expected. They hope to be in a position to produce a final report in the middle of next year.

Health Authority Chairmen

28. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department will draw up a code of conduct to ensure that the private business interests of chairmen of health authorities are kept clearly separate from their public responsibilities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The statutory position is already quite clear. Under regulation 14(1) of the National Health Service (Regional and District Health Authorities: Membership and Procedure) Regulations (SI 1983 No. 315) a chairman of a health authority is required to declare any pecuniary interest, direct or otherwise, in any contract or other matter which is the subject of consideration by the health authority. He may not then take part in any consideration or discussion of the contract (or matter) or vote on any question in respect of it.

Kidney Unit, Leicester

29. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make available additional resources to the Leicestershire health authority to enable it to fully open the kidney unit at the general hospital.

Mr. Freeman: I understand Trent regional health authority has agreed with Leicestershire health authority to open three new beds in the renal unit at Leicester general hospital at a cost of £90,000 per annum. The beds are available now and I understand the health authority plans to have the necessary staff in post by 20 November. The health authorities hope to open a further three beds next year, bringing the unit to its full complement a year earlier than originally planned.

NHS (Accountancy and Auditing)

30. Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the accountancy and auditing systems operating within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: The statutory auditors regularly review the effectiveness of the well-documented accountancy and audit arrangements in the NHS, and the annual report of the director of NHS audit sets out their findings. For 1987-88, the auditors found material errors leading to qualification of their certificate in respect of five health authorities of the 334 audited; the audits of the 1988-89 accounts have not yet all been finalised.

Dentists

31. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he anticipates there being any increase in demand for dentists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Dental health is steadily improving in this country and the nature of dental services is changing. Dental manpower reviews undertaken in 1983 and 1987 in conjunction with the profession recommended reductions in the overall undergraduate intake to United Kingdom dental schools in order to slow down the rate of increase in the numbers of dentists. The next review of dental manpower will take place next year and will report during 1991.

General Practitioner Contract

32. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further discussions he proposes with the British Medical Association before he implements the new general practitioner contract.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans for further discussions with the British Medical Association on the subject of the GPs' new contract before that contract is introduced. My officials are still consulting them on technical and drafting details of the new statement of fees and allowances.

50. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the allocation of travelling time for general practitioners in rural areas under the new contract obligation of 26 hours patient contact time.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is accepted that the 26-hour requirement in the revised terms of service for general practitioners includes travelling time when GPs make home visits. There is no specific element within the 26 hours which is allocated to travelling time because GPs in some rural areas will need more travelling time for home visits than those in urban areas.

82. Mr. Ian Bruce To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a progress report on the implementation of the general practitioners' new contract.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The NHS (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1989 were laid on 16 October and certain parts come into operation today. The revised statement of fees and allowances will be sent to all GPs later this month with a copy of their revised terms of service. FPCs will shortly receive a circular of guidance on the management of the GP's new contract. These arrangements will enable GPs and FPCs to make detailed plans for the full implementation of the new contract from 1 April next year.

"Working for Patients"

33. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has recently received concerning the effect on women of the proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a small number of representations. Our proposals will benefit women, as all patients, by bringing all parts of the NHS closer to the standards already achieved by the best.

38. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how patients will be affected by the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The point of all our proposals is to produce a better NHS providing the type and standard of service a patient has a right to expect throughout the country. Hospitals will have more freedom to manage their own affairs and so will be able to respond better and quicker to individual patients and their GPs. District health authorities for their part will in future be able to concentrate on identifying the health needs of the populations they serve and then making sure that they receive a comprehensive range of high quality services. They will be able to use contracts to specify the quality of services to be provided. Extra funding will go directly to hospitals which can best provide the services needed. This means that the hospitals to which most patients want to go will be funded accordingly.

Clinical audit will make sure that there is systematic quality control of treatments throughout the Health Service with, for the first time, all doctors looking critically at what they and their colleagues are doing so that they can improve their effectiveness and outcomes. Patients will have shorter waiting times and better appointment systems; 100 more consultants will be appointed in addition to the existing year-by-year growth in numbers. The new GP contract will result in improved services and some large GP practices will be able to seek to make more effective use of NHS funds for their patients.

The effect of all these, and the other proposals in the White Paper, will be to make the NHS more consumer conscious and better able to provide a high quality service.

42. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on his discussions with the British Medical Association regarding the White Paper "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I had a useful meeting with the British Medical Association on 18 October. We both took away ideas for further consideration. I am always ready to enter into constructive discussions with the BMA about how best to implement the proposals in the White Paper.

49. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to ensure that the proposals in the National Health Service White Paper will not mean that patients will be compelled to travel long distances for treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No patient will be made to travel long distances for treatment against their will. Surveys have shown that a majority of patients are willing to travel to get earlier or better treatment. When doctors refer patients to hospital they will take the circumstances and wishes of patients fully into account.

51. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will outline further improvements that patients can expect to result from the implementation of the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are a number of detailed proposals in the White Paper, "Working for Patients", which will lead to substantial improvement for patients when implemented. These include ensuring that patients are given reliable appointment times, better waiting and counselling facilities, much fuller information about the services available and about their own care and quicker notification of diagnostic test results. We are asking everyone working in the Health Service to recognise the importance of the individual patient. In future it will be easier to choose and, if necessary, change GP.

55. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he proposes to have with the British Medical Association, the Royal College of Nursing, the Confederation of Health Service Employees, the National Union of Public Employees and the National and Local Government Officers Association concerning the Government's White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My fellow Ministers and I have had several meetings with representatives of all the trade unions mentioned about how best to implement the reforms set out in the White Paper.

57. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress towards implementing the proposals in the National Health Service White Paper.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are making good progress in putting into action the changes outlined in the White Paper "Working for Patients". I am confident that the NHS will be ready to implement the basic elements of the new and better systems of matching growth and resources with expansion of patient services by April 1991 if Parliament approves the necessary legislation. We have made £82 million available to finance progress towards implementation this year.

We have issued detailed guidance on many subjects including the new contracting system for all district health authority hospitals and community units and on education and training for non-medical staff.

We have recently launched a project to support district health authorities in detailed work on developing the key role which DHA's will have under the new system of identifying and obtaining the best pattern of services which will most effectively meet all the health needs of the populations they serve.

We have received more than 180 expressions of interest from potential NHS hospital trusts; 79 of them are proceeding towards being in the first wave of applicants for self-governing status within the NHS in April 1991 and I expect many more to be ready for later waves of applicants in future years.

We are spending more than £1 million on the development of self-audit systems by the medical profession and a £4·5 million scheme has been launched to develop information technology skills. Demonstration projects, aimed at improving the quality of care and service to patients, have been announced for five out-patient departments. The principles of general management are being introduced into the family practitioner committee system.

Good progress is also being made in relation to medical education and research. As I explained in a speech on 10 July, since sent to all hospital doctors, I intend to take powers to ensure, for instance, the continuation of high standards of undergraduate, postgraduate and continuing medical education and research in all NHS hospitals. I will also ensure that postgraduate training posts are provided in NHS hospital trusts in accordance with the national objectives set out in "Achieving a Balance". Medical education and research will be further enhanced by the proposed increased in the service increment for teaching (SIFT) to meet 100 per cent. of the median excess costs of teaching hospitals. This will be distributed by regions in consultation with medical schools.

60. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the aims of the proposals affecting family practitioner committees in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposals in the White Paper which directly affect family practitioner committees are designed to equip each committee to take on the major tasks of implementing in 1990 new contracts of service for medical and dental practitioners; of helping to introduce the reforms proposed in the White Paper "Working for Patients" which affect family doctors; and generally to manage and develop effectively all the primary health care services for which they are responsible in the light of the Government's proposals in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health".

76. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implications for patient choice of the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

83. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how patients' choice will be affected by the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our proposals will help to ensure that patients are given reliable appointment times, better waiting and counselling facilities, much fuller information about the services available and about their own care and quicker notification of diagnostic test results. We are asking everyone working in the Health Service to recognise the importance of the individual patient.

Social Workers

34. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to deal with the national shortage of qualified social workers.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given by my hon. and learned Friend to him on 19 June at columns 37-8.

Hospital Building Schemes

36. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to encourage health authorities to take advantage of unconventional financing hospital building schemes as envisaged in paragraph 9:14 of "Working for Patients"; how many such schemes have been proposed to, and approved by, him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As stated in the White Paper "Working for Patients" the Government welcome any proposals which make imaginative use of the private sector's skills, including financing, which can result in the more cost-effective and quicker development of new and existing services. The key factor, however, is to ensure that best value for money is achieved through the use of such finance, and the Department has recently issued guidance to health authorities on the procedures to be followed where private sector finance is involved.

It is for health authorities to demonstrate the best value for money can be achieved through the use of private sector finance. To date I have received only one substantive case, for a district general hospital development at Bromley, in which use of private sector finance may be cost effective. Approval has therefore been given for the authority to proceed to the first stage of a competitive tendering exercise to establish the relative costs of this approach before final approval can be given.

Speech Therapy

37. Mr Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received representations about the level of speech therapy provision in the North-East London regional health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no such representations recently.

Student Nurses

39. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support he intends to make available for student nurses' living costs.

Mr. Freeman: Levels of student nurse salaries and bursaries were announced respectively by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 16 February at columns 302-3, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 16 June at column 556.

Community Nursing

40. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what future community nursing services have in light of plans for community services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Community nursing staff will have a crucial role to play in our proposed new arrangements for community care. Community nursing services will continue to be planned and provided by health authorites.

NHS Costs

41. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the average family of four now contributes on a weekly basis towards the cost of the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to provide the information as requested. The major part of NHS funding comes from the consolidated fund and it is not possible to distinguish between the proportion contributed by private taxpayers and taxation raised from other sources. However, NHS expenditure in 1989-90 per average family of four persons is estimated at £35 per week.

43. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the variations in cost of treatment between different health districts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health Service indicators published by the Department every year show a wide degree of variation in costs of treatment between different authorities. The indicators of treatment expenditure per consultant episode for 1987-88 published in July varied by a factor of three. There may be good reasons for variations and district and regional management will wish to examine them carefully to see whether there is any scope for improvements. The proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" will also help to reduce unjustifiable cost variations.

Indicative Drug Budgets

45. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how patient care will be affected by the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" for indicative drug budgets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that my hon. and learned Friend the then Minister for Health gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir Michael McNair-Wilson) on 23 May at column 479.

Wathwood Hospital, Rotherham

46. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will direct the Rotherham health authority to retain the Wathwood hospital and the present number of beds for the elderly infirm which are currently provided at this hospital.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The provision of local health services is a matter for the district health authority concerned, in this case Rotherham health authority.

Patients (Statistics)

52. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of National Health Service patients being treated each year; and what was the number treated in 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Cases treated, NHS hospitals, England, 1979 and 1987-88

	1979	1987-88	Change	Percentage change
In-patients	5,400,120	6,619,354	1,219,234	22·6
Day cases	592,061	880,852	288,791	48·8
New out-patients	7,713,465	8,529,759	816,294	10·6

Hearing Aid Service

53. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress officials in his Department have made in drawing up a programme of action to improve the hearing aid service.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson), on 27 July at columns 918-19. We have set up a working group consisting of officials from this Department and Mersey regional health authority, a consultant otolaryngologist, a community physician, an audiological scientists, an audiological technician, a representative of the private sector hearing aid industry and a representative of RNID, together with an observer from the Department of Trade and Industry, to work up a programme of action, including proposals for direct referral pilot schemes, some of which we expect to start early in the next financial year. The first meeting of the working group has been arranged for 20 November.

Opting Out

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the additional financial resources being made available to each regional health authority to assist the proposals for opting out;

(2) what additional resources have been made available to the Northern regional health authority to assist their proposals for hospitals and the Northumbria ambulance service to opt out.

Mr. Freeman: More than £82 million has been made available this year for the implementation of the White Paper. Of this, £32 million has been allocated to the regions to enable them to develop the finance and personnel functions, to strengthen the public health function and to prepare for the introduction of capital charges and medical audit. Northern region has been allocated £2·04 million. While no additional resources have been made available specifically for the preparation of NHS trusts, all authorities including those with units considering this option will benefit from the overall strengthening of key management functions.

Hospitals, Mersey Region

56. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about proposals for the future of National Health Service hospitals in the Mersey region; and what his response has been.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received various representations from hon. Members and members of the public. These have been considered in the light of local circumstances and answered accordingly.

Old Persons' Homes

61. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that normal National Health Service ancillary health care shall be available to residents in private old persons' homes without a charge being made.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for providing community health services, including services to people in private and voluntary residential care homes, rest with district health authorities. There is no power to charge for such services.

Authorities have to plan and provide their services within the resources available in accordance with guidance issued by the Secretary of State. Their performance is monitored through the annual accountability and review process.

Resources (South Bedfordshire)

64. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether discussions between the North-West Thames regional health authority and South Bedfordshire district health authority in the summer have resulted in an increase in the allocation of resources to south Bedfordshire.

Mr. Freeman: Allocations to district health authorities are the responsibility of the regional health authority. My hon. Friend may wish to direct his question to the chairman of the North West Thames regional health authority.

Waiting Lists

65. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of people on the waiting list for hospitals in the Bradford health authority; and if he will make statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There were 6,386 people on the in-patient waiting list for Bradford district health authority at 31 March 1989. Bradford is one of 22 districts with long waiting lists that was chosen this year for investigation by an independent management team. This has led to additional funding of £206,000 for 1,000 additional patients to be treated from the waiting list in the district.

69. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the figures for those on hospital waiting lists at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There were 704,700 people on in-patient waiting lists at 31 March 1989, the latest date for which figures are available centrally.

77. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional patients have been treated over the last 12 months for which figures are available as a result of the waiting list initiative.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1988-89 the £30 million waiting list fund enabled more than 117,000 additional in-patients and day cases and more than 93,000 additional out-patients to be treated from the waiting lists. This year health authorities are using £25 million from the £31 million fund to treat a further 100,000 in-patients and day cases and 90,000 out-patients; £6 million of the fund is being directed towards treating additional patients in those districts with the most serious waiting problems.

81. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his plans to reduce waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the three years to March 1990, the Government have made available a total of £86 million through the special waiting list fund to tackle particular waiting problems. This special funding has enabled over 200,000 extra in-patients and day cases to be treated from the waiting lists in the first two years, as well as more than 130,000 out-patients. This year health authorities are using the fund to treat an additional 100,000 in-patients/day cases and 90,000 out-patients. We intend to allocate further funds for tackling long waiting times in 1990-91, and I will be making a statement about this soon.

Earlier this year my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) sent a management team, led by John Yates of Inter Authority Comparisons and Consultancy, into the 22 districts with the longest waiting times in the country, to find out why the lists there are so long, and to suggest how they can be shortened. As a result of this work, backed up by money from the waiting list fund, the number of patients waiting over a year in the 43 specialties studied has already reduced by a quarter. I intend this valuable and effective work to continue next year.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list district health authorities in England in rank order of size of waiting list as at September 1989, stating also their position as at March 1989, September 1988, and March 1988, the size of waiting list at each date and the amount in total and per head of population expended under the waiting list initiative for 1988-89.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The information requested is given in the table and the ranking is based on waiting list data for 31 March 1989 which are the latest figures available centrally. The amount of waiting list money per head of population cannot be accurately calculated by district as projects funded can involve cross-boundary flow.

[1] Total less self deferred.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current waiting list for operations in (a) the west midlands and (b) the Walsall borough (i) in total and (ii) of those waiting for over 12 months; and if he will list the operations needing to be performed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: Waiting list information is available centrally only by the specialty of treatment and not by operation. The available information is given in the table:

Gross demand in-patient waiting list, surgical[1] acute specialties 31 March 1989

	Total	Number waiting 12 months or more
West Midlands RHA	73,003	19,753
Walsall DHA	2,577	412

[1] Including gynaecology.

Ear, Nose and Throat Services

68. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the present waiting lists for ear, nose and throat patients in Sheffield (a) to see an ear, nose and throat specialist and (b) for hearing aid appointments; and what plans there are to shorten the lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not collect information on out-patient waiting times centrally. On our plans to reduce waiting times generally I refer the hon. Member to my reply today to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell).

87. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any recommendations for the number of sessions for ear, nose and throat surgeons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number and type of sessions worked by any consultant, including ENT surgeons, is a matter for agreement between the consultant and his/her employing authority.

GPs

70. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about trends in the average general practitioner's list size since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Over the last 10 years the average list size of family doctors in England has continued to fall from 2,286 in 1979 to 1,999 in 1988, a decrease of more than 12 per cent.

Haemophiliacs (HIV)

71. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest number of haemophiliacs who have been infected with the AIDS virus following a National Health Service blood transfusion; and how many have died.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has readily available figures as to how many haemophiliacs have been diagnosed as HIV positive over any convenient period in the last five years; and if he will make a statement on policy towards help for such patients.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is shown in the tables. The Government provided £10 million to set up the Macfarlane trust to meet the special needs of people in the United Kingdom with haemophilia and HIV infection, and their dependants.

1. Numbers of haemophiliacs reported as HIV-antibody positive to the Communicable Diseases Surveillance Centre (Colindale) and the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit.

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	Cumulative Total
England, Wales and Northern Ireland	495	371	76	44	34	[1]1,020
Scotland[2]	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	76
United Kingdom Total						1,096

[1] The actual number of known HIV-1 infected haemophiliacs may be greater as some may have been included in the undetermined exposure category.

[2] Yearly figures not available centrally.

2. Cumulative number of haemophiliacs with AIDS known to have died in the United Kingdom by 30 September 1989

	Number
	102

Prescriptions

74. Mr. Andrew McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service prescriptions are being dispensed per year; and what was the figure for 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of prescriptions dispensed in England during 1988, the latest year for which information is available, was 371 million. In 1979, 321 million prescriptions were dispensed.

Poland (Medical Aid)

78. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had concerning the provisions of medical aid for Poland.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not received any representations on this subject but my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs received one inquiry about medical equipment in September this year. I visited Poland at the invitation of the Polish Minister of Health and Social Welfare in April this year for discussions and as a result we are now looking at various proposals for co-operation on medical training, health service reforms and a broadening of the scope of the United Kingdom-Poland health co-operation agreement.

BMA

80. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any statements from the British Medical Association recently; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 3 November at column 385.

Patients (York)

84. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patients were treated in the York health authority area in 1978 and 1988, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: During the financial year 1987-88, 34,062 in-patient cases were treated by York district health authority, an increase of 26·2 per cent. over the 1978 figure of 26,997.

Royal National Institute for the Deaf

86. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to meet the Royal National Institute for the Deaf to discuss current legislation.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled and I met representatives from the Royal National Institute for the Deaf on 24 October 1989 to discuss its proposals for improving hearing aid services in the light of my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on 27 July at columns 918-19.

General Practitioners

88. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has that patients are susceptible to changing their general practitioners according to the differing perceived levels of service available; and to what extent the patient is able to measure that perception.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is the Government's view, clearly set out in our White Paper "Promoting Better Health", that patients should have adequate information on which to base their choice of general practitioner. A number of measures are being implemented to achieve this objective, including, for those who choose to do so, a simplified procedure for changing doctor.

Ambulance Service

89. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will tabulate the percentage of the trained and qualified personnel of the London ambulance accident and emergency service who have resigned or taken early retirement during each of the years 1985 to 1988.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the South West Thames regional health authority, which manages the London ambulance service. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mrs. Julia Cumberlege.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that ambulancemen receive payment for the additional man hours involved in participating in riot and public disorder training; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: Special incident collaborative training, including public order aspects, has for some years been available to ambulance service staff. Attendance at the training attracts normal rates of pay.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the staff employed by the London ambulance service on accident and emergency work between 1 September and 31 October per 24-hour period (a) by day and (b) by night.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The information requested is available only in the format shown as follows:

Bassetlaw Hospital

91. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his visit to Bassetlaw hospital, Worksop, on 23 October.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I had a useful and enjoyable visit to Bassetlaw district general hospital during which I saw some of the facilities at the hospital, had meetings with the district chairman and her management team and with the community health council and gave interviews to the local media. I also attended an informal lunch at which I met a number of the hospital's consultants and other senior professional staff.

Nurses (Leicestershire Health Authority)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many Black and Asian nurses are employed by Leicestershire health authority; and how many of those are (a) state registered nurses and (b) state enrolled nurses;

(2) how many nurses are currently employed by Leicestershire health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 30 September 1988 there were 6,570 whole-time equivalent nursing and midwifery staff in post in Leicestershire district health authority. We do not hold centrally information on the numbers of black and Asian nurses. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Leicestershire health authority for this information.

Organ Transplants

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the anti rejection drug FK-506 is being used in clinical trials with organ transplant patients anywhere in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Before clinical trials can take place in the United Kingdom, a clinical trial certificate or exemption must be held. Details of applications under the Medicines Act 1968 are confidential to the licensing authority, and it is not the practice to say whether specific applications have been made.

Workplace Nurseries

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide an estimate of the number of workplace nursery places available in the United Kingdom by number and by percentage of potential population.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

FK 506

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consideration his Department has given to the question of against whom liability for use of the drug FK 506 will rest;

(2) what discussions have taken place with the Japanese Government about allowing a supply of the anti-rejection drug FK 506 to be used in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Officials asked the Japanese Ministry of Health and Welfare to facilitate transmission of FK 506 by Fujisawa Pharmaceuticals from Japan for Dr. Roger Williams of Kings College hospital, London to use in treating his patient Mrs. Aisling Barnett following a liver transplant. I am glad to have this opportunity to express my gratitude to the Japanese Ministry for their prompt and effective response, and to all the others concerned, notably the British Embassy in Tokyo, British Airways, and the Metropolitan police.

Responsibility for choice of medicinal product in patient care lies with the practitioner concerned. Where, as in this case, a product has not been granted a product licence under provisions of the Medicines Act 1968, the practitioner concerned may nevertheless choose to use the product for a particular named patient under the licensing exemptions provided in section 9 of the Act. Questions of liability arising from that choice are a matter for the practitioner subject to relevant legal provisions in respect of product liability etc.

Kidney Patients

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list region by region the number of kidney patients receiving haemodialysis or CAPD treatment and the numbers who have received transplants; and whether any regional health authorities impose age limits either for dialysis or for transplantation.

Mr. Freeman: According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the number of patients alive on different forms of therapy on 31 December 1988, by English region, was as follows:

Region	Hospital haemodialysis	Home haemodialysis	Intermittent peritoneal dialysis	Continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis	Functioning graft

[1] Complete data not available.

Patients are registered by the units treating them and are therefore recorded according to the health region in which the units are located, not according to the region in which patients live. Some patients cross regional boundaries to receive treatment, notably from South West Thames to South East Thames and from Wessex to South Western.

There are no age limits for treatment of end-stage renal failure. The treatment of an individual patient is a matter for the responsible consultant, whose decisions will take account of the patient's clinical condition.

Imported Medicines

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures for the annual consumption in the United Kingdom of parallel imported medicines for each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Suicide

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures he has for the number of officially recorded (a) suicides and (b) attempted suicides in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) Scotland for (1) all persons of 18 years and over, (2) all persons aged 45 to 65 years, (3) all persons of 18 years and over who were unemployed at the date of suicide or the attempt and (4) all persons aged 45 to 65 years who were unemployed at the date of suicide or the attempt, in each case showing men and women separately.

Mr. Freeman: The figures for suicides in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) Scotland for (1) all persons aged 18 years or over and (2) all persons aged 45 to 64 years are shown in the table. Information on the number of attempted suicides, and whether those people committing suicide were unemployed at time of death, is not available.

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to ban the sale of Skoal Bandits in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have proposed a total ban on the supply of all oral snuff products, including Skoal Bandits. On 7 August this proposal was notified to the European Commission and the GATT secretariat in accordance with our international obligations. EC member states have until 9 November to let us have any views on the proposal, but this deadline can be extended if there are objections or if the Commission wishes to bring forward its own proposals for the Community as a whole. The Government will reach a final decision on whether to proceed to a ban as quickly as possible once this procedure has been completed.

Immunisation and Screening

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his intention to support general practitioners' efforts to meet immunisation and screening targets by conducting a public information and education campaign.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The Department is preparing, with the Health Education Authority, an information and education campaign on immunisation. We hope that this will be launched in 1990 and will be aimed both at professionals and the public.

The improvements which we have asked health authorities to make to their cervical cancer screening programmes will lead to a more systematic approach to screening and increased coverage of the population. The routine invitations generated by the call and recall programme will inform women of the need for regular screening. In addition, the Health Education Authority has produced a leaflet, "The Cervical Smear Test: Why You Need It", which health authorities and family practitioner committees can enclose with invitation letters to women, and has issued guidelines on the points which should be covered in the invitation letter. We take every opportunity to encourage representatives of women's organisations to inform their members about the value of both the cervical and breast screening programmes.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers (Absenteeism)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the latest figures for absenteeism among teachers by local education authority and sector.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The employment and deployment of teachers is a matter for LEAs. This information is not collected by the Department.

Physical Education Curriculum Group

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will immediately reconvene the physical education curriculum group.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State announced in January 1989 that arrangements for considering the content of guidelines for physical education in the national curriculum would be set up by June 1990. I hope to be able to announce shortly the form these arrangements will take and the associated timetable.

School Playing Fields

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to rescind rule 909 and halt the sale of school playing fields.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The law places upon education authorities a duty to provide school playing fields in accordance with standards prescribed by the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981, Statutory Instrument No. 909. Local education authorities are free to dispose of any surplus if they wish, and this is not a matter in which my hon. Friend can intervene.

Earthquakes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what research is being carried out into earthquakes occurring in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list by location and date the number of earthquakes that have been recorded during the last 10 years; what damage was recorded; on what seismographic scale; and what research is being carried out by his Department into earthquakes.

Mr. Jackson: Research into earthquakes in the United Kingdom is carried out by the British Geological Survey, which is funded from the Department's grant to the Natural Environment Research Council. Specialist scientists, based at over 80 sites in the country, monitor current seismic activity. They also research historical records to identify the recurrence rate of the larger earthquakes.

The following list sets out the information requested for all earthquakes recorded in the United Kingdom over the last 10 years, having a magnitude of 2·5 or more on the Richter scale.

Qualified Teacher Status (Applications)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications for the award of qualified teacher status had been received by the Department of Education and Science under form P6 (5) at 30 September from European Community nationals; how many applications have been approved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: At 30 September, 88 applications for the award of qualified teacher status from European Community nationals had been received. All were approved.

Lecturers

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many lecturers in maintained further education are female hourly paid part-time employees.

Mr. Jackson: Information held centrally provides only the full-time equivalent of part-time further education lecturers (not their number), nor are there separate figures for men and women. However, the total full-time equivalents of hourly paid part-time lecturers employed by local education authorities in England in January 1989 was 20,243.

PCFC Budget

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the publicly funded PCFC recurrent budget for 1989-90 is allocated at institutional level to the gross salaries, subsidised housing and fringe benefits of the chief executives of each higher education corporation, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: As I told the hon. Member in reply to his question of 22 May at column 369, the Department collects information on the gross salaries of individual directors and principals of PCFC sector institutions for the purposes of the teachers' superannuation scheme, but the release of this information would be incompatible with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1984. Information on subsidised housing and other fringe benefits for the directors and principals is not collected centrally.

Principals (Salaries)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the gross salaries of the principals of each of the public sector higher education institutions to incorporation on 1 April.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 22 May 1989 at column 369.

Teachers

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications for the award of licensed teachers under form P6(1) had been received by the Department of Education and Science at 30 September; from whom the applications had been received; and how many have been granted.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Seven applications for licences had been received at 30 September. All were from Hertfordshire local education authority and all were granted.

Lower Attaining Pupils Programme

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account he has taken of Her Majesty's inspector's observations about the effective use of his Department's expenditure as recorded in paragraph 71 of Her Majesty's inspector's report "The Lower Attaining Pupils Programme 1982-88"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend welcomes Her Majesty's inspectorate's report on the lower attaining pupils programme (LAPP). He attaches great importance to the monitoring and evaluation of the programmes within his Department's remit, and has noted carefully the observations made by the inspectorate about the monitoring of the LAPP. The lessons learnt from that programme are reflected in the procedures for the monitoring and evaluation of his current specific grant programmes, education support grants and the LEA training grants scheme.

Book Provision

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding further education book provision; and if he will make a statement on provision for the next academic year.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is aware of representations made by the Publishers Association specifically about book provision in further education. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced proposals for the distribution of local authority total standard spending for 1990-91 on 6 November. The education share of that total allows for increased spending on books and equipment in further education relative to that assumed in the comparable total for 1989-90. The actual deployment of education funding is, however, for individual LEAs and colleges to determine. The introduction of local management of colleges under the Education Reform Act will give colleges greater discretion to deploy available resources in line with their own priorities, and so to increase spending on books where they judge that appropriate.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list in the Official Report tables showing (a) the total amount bid for schools' capital expenditure by local education authorities, (b) the total amount allocated by his Department, and (c) the percentage of (b) over (a), broken down by (i) county and voluntary controlled schools, (ii) voluntary aided schools and (iii) all maintained schools, for each financial year from 1974-75, and in constant and current prices, and showing the percentage of each year's allocation represented by (1) basic needs and (2) reorganisations;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report tables showing the capital allocation for each local education authority in England made by his Department for capital expenditure for (a) county and voluntary controlled schools, (b) voluntary aided schools and (c) all maintained schools, the amount of the bid in respect of each such allocation, and the percentage which each allocation bears to its respective bid, in current prices and in constant prices for each year from 1984-85 to 1989-90.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 30 October 1989]: Not all the information is available in the form requested. Each year my Department announces the level of allocations to LEAs for capital expenditure on schools and colleges. Allocations for county and voluntary controlled schools are unhypothecated which means that specific amounts for basic need or school reorganisations are not indicated. It is therefore for each LEA to decide how its allocation should be used and LEAs can also look to receipts and to other flexibility available under the capital control system when determining their level of expenditure on education. For the years before 1984-85 the Department does not hold separate figures in respect of allocations for schools, but only combined figures for schools and further and higher education. Table A therefore shows LEA plans for expenditure on schools and colleges, the allocations given and the percentage which each allocation bears to the respective plans for the years 1981-82 to 1989-90. Prior to 1981-82, local education authorities did not receive block allocations, but were notified annually in the context of a rolling programme, of a limit on the value of building starts in the following year. The Department provides grant-aid for capital projects undertaken by the governors of voluntary aided schools, and table B shows LEA plans for such expenditure and the allocation given. Since the allocations include sums for committed expenditure on projects from earlier years, in addition to projects which figure in LEAs' and governors' plans, a percentage comparison of the two is misleading.

Following are the tables:

Notes:

1. All figures are in £ thousands.
2. Cash plans were not requested in 1981-84.
3. The allocations made are in a few exceptional cases greater that the planned expenditure shown in the table. The information provided on plans was sometimes incomplete and adjustments were made to allocations.
4. Current prices = cash plans.
5. Constant prices are calculated at 1987-88 prices using the GDP deflator.
6. Allocations for 1989-90 exclude PCFC institutions.
7. The allocations shown are those announced before the start of the financial year in question and do not include subsequent revisions.

Notes:

1. All figures are in £ thousands.
2. Allocations for 1981-82 were made on a different basis from those for later years and have therefore been omitted.
3. The allocations made may be greater than the planned expenditure shown in the table. The information provided on plans was sometimes incomplete and compensatory adjustments were made to allocations.
4. Current prices—cash plans.
5. Constant prices are calculated at 1987-88 prices using the GDP deflator.
6. The planned expenditure relates to new work only, but the allocations included allowances for on-going projects.
7. The allocations shown are those announced before the start of the financial year in question and do not include subsequent revisions.
8. 1989-90 figures exclude Design List projects.
9. Figures are in 100 per cent. terms on which the Department pays grant at 85 per cent.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 8 November 1989

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Employees

Mr. Flynn To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to undertake a separate case study prior to any changes that would remove employment rights from public sector employees as part of any plan to privatise public sector jobs.

Mr. Lilley: No. In all privatisations the Government observe the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (TUPE), which provide that, where there is a transfer of an undertaking, all the employees' rights and liabilities must automatically be transferred to the new employer. Pension rights fall outside the scope of TUPE and are negotiated separately in each case.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the number of people investing in premium bonds since the change to a minimum investment of £100.

Mr. Ryder: In the three months since the change to a minimum purchase of £100 on 1 July, premium bond purchases have averaged 60,000 per month to a value of £23·7 million. In the three months prior to the change premium bond purchases averaged 175,000 per month to a value of £24 million.

Government Statistics

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out those Government statistics on which he now answers parliamentary questions, in the light of the changes in the arrangements of the Central Statistical Office.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: I am placing in the Library a copy of the paper prepared by the Central Statistical Office "Note for the Table Office of the House of Commons and for the House of Lords following the reorganisation of the responsibility for economic statistics: The establishment of the 'new' Central Statistical Office", which sets out the new arrangements.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will remove the provision of subsidy of child care facilities by employers from the list of items regarded for tax purposes as a benefit in kind; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 2 November 1989]: There is no list of items regarded for tax purposes as benefits in kind. Such benefits are generally liable to taxation. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no plans to exempt beneficiaries of subsidies for child care from taxation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the Legal Action Group's report on financial eligibility for legal aid.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 6 November 1989 at column 440.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Attorney-General what was the value of eligibility limits for legal aid in 1979; and what are, in real terms, the value of those limits today.

The Attorney-General: The eligibility limits for civil legal aid between April and November 1979 were £3,600 disposable income and £2,500 disposable capital. The retail prices index increased by 103·69 per cent. between 1979 and 1989. Increasing the 1979 civil legal aid limits by the same amount produces £7,332·85 disposable income and £5,092·25 disposable capital. However, the RPI includes increases in the cost of housing—which have been greater than the increase in prices generally—while housing costs are disregarded in assessing legal aid eligibility.

Regina v. Barnard

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Attorney-General if he will send for the papers in Regina v. Barnard heard at Oxford Crown court before His Honour Judge Leo Clark, Queen's counsel on 21 October to consider whether the sentence imposed is such that it is a suitable case to refer to the Court of Appeal for review.

The Attorney-General: Yes.

THE ARTS

Crown Immunity

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether any national galleries or museums are being prosecuted for responsibilities which were formerly covered by Crown immunity.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The science museum has been charged under the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 following an inspection of its water cooling plant.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has any plans to relocate his offices to the north-west of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have no such plans.

CIVIL SERVICE

HEO Direct Entry

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will provide an estimate of the administrative cost per successful candidate in the recent direct entry higher executive officer competition.

Mr. Luce: The information will not be available for some time. The Civil Service Commission began interviewing candidates for the scheme on 6 November 1989 and the entire exercise will not be completed until early next summer.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present amount of aid now being given to Sri Lanka; and if he will list each project on which aid is being spent.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1988-89 expenditure on Britain's bilateral aid programme to Sri Lanka totalled £19·8 million, though disbursements in the present financial year are expected to be lower. Britain also contributes to programmes administered by the European Community and other international aid organisations. Current bilateral aid projects are as follows:

Colombo Roads Rehabilitation
Power Distribution, Colombo
Supply of Agricultural Tractors to Trincomalee area
Supply of Miscellaneous Vehicles
Land Use and Conservation Project
Mahaweli Catchment Area Project
Sandskipper Project (Artisanal Fisheries)
Coconut processing
Wood burning stoves
Victoria Dam Maintenance
Supply of school furniture
Archaeological assistance in Cultural Triangle
Health and welfare projects (Anti-Malaria, Health Education, Cleft Lip and Palate)
Support for Non-Governmental Organisations (Oxfam, Save the Children Fund and Sarvoydaya)
English Language Training
University link projects
Heads of Mission Gift and Small Projects Schemes
Books Presentation Programme
Training awards in the United Kingdom
Commonwealth Scholars and Fellowship Plan
Joint Funding Schemes
Associate Professional Officers Scheme
Samanalawewa Hydroelectric Power Project
Bus bodies for Colombo
Water supply schemes in Southern Sri Lanka

Oxfam

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place between his Department and Oxfam with regard to the Government contributing towards some of the costs of Oxfam's aid programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My officials and I are in regular contact with Oxfam both about support under our joint funding scheme and about emergency relief measures. Indeed, I have recently decided to increase our grant to Oxfam under the joint funding scheme to £3·5 million next year. We will of course also consider sympathetically requests for assistance for disaster and emergency relief measures if the need arises.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons of public policy the immigration portfolio has been moved from Minister of State to a Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 6 November 1989 at column 417.

Wrongful Imprisonment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) by year, (b) amount paid and (c) cases, the number of occasions ex-gratia payments of compensation to persons wrongfully imprisoned have been made.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested, based on the date on which the final payment of compensation was made from 1980, is as follows:

Year	Number awarded compensation	Total amount paid (£)
1980	18	92,631
1981	13	88,805
1982	10	114,157
1983	6	45,853
1984	12	14,450
1985	17	216,163
1986	13	154,890
1987	14	153,806
1988	8	56,925

Computer Codes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government are taking to ensure that computer codes involved in the decision-making process involving public safety are (a) reliable and (b) open to scrutiny by (i) the public and (ii) the scientific community.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to a question from him by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 6 November 1989 at columns 401-2. The Home Office is one of the Departments represented on the interdepartmental working committee on software engineering.

Equal Opportunities (Insurance)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received a copy of "Unisex Pricing in Long Term Insurance" by the Equal Opportunities Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We received the report in July and are considering it in the context of the Equal Opportunities Commission's proposals for amending the Sex Discrimination Act 1975.

Traffic Offences

Mr. Tebbit: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there is any limit placed upon the maximum time after an alleged traffic offence in the Metropolitan police area after which no prosecution will be initiated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Proceedings for most road traffic offences are subject to the normal limitation that, for summary offences, the information must be laid within six months of the offence.

Arrests

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide figures on the number of arrests made in the Metropolitan police district under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 in the years 1987 and 1988.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 27 October 1989]: Information is not held centrally on the number of arrests made under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986. However in 1987 in the Metropolitan police district (including City of London) there were 2,600 prosecutions under section 5 of this Act of which 2,000 were found guilty. In 1988 the figures were 6,500 and 4,900 respectively.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nursery Teachers

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the number of nursery teachers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In recent years the allocations of intake numbers to initial teacher training courses for early years (3-8) have been increased and institutions have been encouraged to increase the provision made for early years training within their allocation for primary places. The numbers recruited to such courses have nearly doubled since 1986.

Publicity literature on teacher recruitment, including that aimed at mature entrants and re-entrants, has highlighted the opportunities for early-years specialists.

Under the LEA training grants scheme, in-service training in the teaching of children in primary classes who are younger than "rising five" is a national priority area.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State is chairing a committee of inquiry on the quality of educational provision for three and four-year-olds which will be taking into account the nature of training for teachers and other professional staff involved.

Student Loans

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received to date about student loans.

Mr. Jackson: Since the publication of the White Paper on top-up loans for students, we have received about 4,100 letters, including 49 petitions.

Pupils

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will provide guidance to local education authorities in relation to the provision they make for pupils with emotional and behavioural difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department is today issuing a circular that provides guidance about the nature of educational provision that LEAs should make to meet the special educational needs of pupils with emotional and behavioural difficulties in special schools. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Disabled Students

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many disabled students were included in his survey of students income and expenditure commissioned by his Department when drawing up proposals for the White Paper on top up loans for students.

Mr. Jackson: The surveys were designed to give a representative sample of the student population as a whole. We have no evidence that the proportion of disabled students included in the surveys was unrepresentative.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he has any plans to relocate the Privy Council offices to the north-west of England; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no such plans. The Privy Council Office accommodates the Leaders of both Houses, the departments of the Clerk of the Privy Council and of the Judicial Committee of the Council. It would be impossible for those concerned to discharge their responsibilities to the sovereign and to Parliament if the office were to be located outside central London.

Members' Salaries (Attachment)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council who is authorised to attach the parliamentary salary of right hon. or hon. Members who refuse to pay the community charge or so-called poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe [holding answer 30 October 1989]: Normally, the charging authority would serve an attachment of earnings order (AEO) on a debtor's employer, having first obtained a liability order from a magistrates' court. Since hon. Members do not have an employer, unless they authorise the attachment of their earnings, the charging authority would have to enforce recovery of the outstanding sum by other means.

TRANSPORT

Chemicals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve safety precautions for toxic and inflammable chemicals when being transported by road.

Mr. Atkins: The rules for safely transporting these goods are reviewed regularly.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (a) airports and (b) seaports that are used to transport (i) plutonium and (ii) other radioactive material to Europe and Japan.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are over half a million movements of radioactive material per annum. The Department does not collect information on a routine basis on the ports and airports used to export such material to Europe and Japan. In the particular case of plutoniums, I am advised that during the last year the only exports, in greater than gramme quantities, have been to Europe and have been made via Carlisle airport.

Worthing Bypass

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy that detailed design work will be prepared for both his Department's preferred route for the A27 in the Worthing area and a real bypass in advance of the public inquiry.

Mr. Atkins: In the special circumstances of the A27 Worthing-Lancing scheme, we have undertaken to carry out full traffic, economic and environmental assessments of the alternative "blue" bypass routes that have been put forward as well as of our preferred "green" route announced in July. This will ensure an adequate basis for all the issues to be thoroughly debated at a public inquiry.

We could not justify carrying out detailed design work on routes other than the one to be published in draft orders unless, following an inquiry, we were persuaded that such an alternative route should be adopted.

Railways

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Burnley, (Mr. Pike), Official Report, 30 October, column 84, he will indicate which railway issues were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I cannot add to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 30 October at column 84.

Drink Driving

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what success the Government have had in reducing the incidence of drinking and driving.

Mr. Atkins: I am pleased to report that statistics published today by the Home Office show a further reduction in the proportion of breath tests which are positive. Results published by the transport and road research laboratory of the blood alcohol levels of driver fatalities also show a similar downward trend. This demonstrates our continuing success in changing public attitudes towards drinking and driving. This could not have been achieved by the Government action alone. Much of the credit must go to the police and to the brewers, publicans, and soft drink producers for their support in promoting low-alcohol and alcohol-free drinks and in helping us to bring home to people the awful consequences of drinking and driving.

There is, however, still a long way to go and we must not let up. We shall be launching our Christmas campaign against drinking and driving early in December, with the continuing support of private industry.

Waterloo and City Line

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to improve services on the Waterloo and City line.

Mr. Portillo: Network SouthEast is well aware of the shortcomings of the Waterloo and City line. It plans a major overhaul of the line over the next few years and a programme of improvements is in hand. Resignalling should be completed by 1992. I am pleased to say that Network SouthEast has today announced that it is to order 20 new coaches to replace the existing fleet. These will be of the most modern design, similar to those on order by London Underground for the Central line. I welcome the British Railways Board's decision to approve this important piece of investment. I expect deliveries to begin in 1992.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Antarctic

82. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part his Department played at the recent Paris conference on the Antarctic.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 31 October, at column 143.

Cambodia

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the exclusion of Cambodia from international agencies and agreements, including the World Health Organisation's international telecommunications treaties, airline agreements and trade agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Cambodia's participation in international agencies and agreements is a matter for the agencies and authorities concerned. The Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea currently occupies Democratic Kampuchea's United Nations seat. We have not opposed acceptance of the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea, but have made clear our abhorrence of Pol Pot and his associates.

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement about the Government's policy towards Cambodia.

Mr. Hurd: The British Government's objective is a sovereign and independent Cambodia whose people are free to decide their own future. We do not have diplomatic relations with the unelected regime put into power by the Vietnamese. We have consistently made plain our repugnance for the Khmer Rouge. We have never given, and will never give, support of any kind to the Khmer Rouge.

These objectives remain unchanged but we have reviewed their implementation in the light of recent events. Vietnam has withdrawn its combat units from Cambodia. The international conference at Paris failed to reach agreement on a political settlement. Fighting continues within Cambodia itself and the need for humanitarian aid has grown. In these circumstances we have decided:

(i) to build up our humanitarian aid programme. We shall continue to provide substantial help to the many thousands of Cambodians living in camps along the Thai-Cambodia border who have been made homeless by the years of fighting. We stipulate that none of our aid should reach the Khmer Rouge. We shall now increase the humanitarian aid which we give inside Cambodia itself while continuing to channel this aid through the non-governmental organisations and organisations such as UNICEF and not direct to the Phnom Penh regime. As part of this policy, I propose to offer now a further contribution of £250,000 to UNICEF for humanitarian projects inside Cambodia. Arrangements will be made for a member of the British embassy in Bangkok to visit Phnom Penh soon to report on the situation at first hand. I am asking the heads of the NGOs to meet me to discuss details;

(ii) to adapt our stance at the UN. The report of the UN credentials committee again recommended acceptance of credentials of Democratic Kampuchea for the Cambodian seat and was approved without a vote. That question has thus already been settled for the present session. Our long-standing position on this legal and technical matter in no way implies readiness to deal with the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea as a government, much less support for the Khmer Rouge. We have decided with our friends and partners to modify the draft resolution which we, with 74 other UN member states, are co-sponsoring at the United Nations General Assembly in the debate on 15 November. These changes are intended to make clear that the situation in Cambodia has changed and that we do not support the Khmer Rouge in any way.

We wish to see peace and stability restored to Cambodia through a comprehensive political settlement which will create the conditions in which the Cambodian people can elect a government of their choice, free from the fear of Khmer Rouge atrocities, foreign occupation or civil war. In consultation with our friends and allies, notably the ASEAN group of countries, we shall continue to work to this end.

Hong Kong

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he proposes to take any action in response to the recent Chinese sacking of two members of the Basic Law Drafting Committee in Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: Members of the Basic Law drafting committee are appointed by the standing committee of the Chinese National People's Congress. The suspension of two members is a matter for the Chinese authorities and the members themselves. We hope that the Chinese Government will take full account of opinion in Hong Kong in their drafting of the Basic Law.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Gibraltar does not have elected representation in the European Parliament.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the observations made on this matter by my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary on 20 June 1984.

Amnesty International

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to ascertain the reasons for the refusal of the Indian Government to grant entry visas to representatives of Amnesty International in January, March and December 1985, November 1986, November 1987 and March 1989.

Mr. Maude: The Indian Government have made their views on Amnesty International clear in public statements. Equally, we have made known to them that we regard Amnesty International as a serious and responsible organisation. The issuing of visas is a matter for the Indian Government.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the changes in the totals and percentages of unemployed in (a) Wales and (b) the area covered by the valleys initiative since (i) July 1986, (ii) July 1987 and (iii) July 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is shown in the table. The figures used are not adjusted for seasonality and are affected by the change in benefit regulations for under 18-year-olds introduced in September 1988.

	Change in number of unemployed	[1]Change in unemployment rate (Percentage points)
July 1986-September 1989
Valleys area	−19,964	−9·1
Wales	−84,592	−8·1
July 1987-September 1989
Valleys area	−13,728	−6·3

	Change in number of unemployed	[1]Change in unemployment rate (Percentage points)
Wales	−61,535	−6·0
July 1988-September 1989
Valleys area	−7,630	−3·5
Wales	−35,478	−3·3

[1] The rates used for Wales are on the "narrow base" (ie the denominator consisting of employees in employment and unemployed claimants) which provides the closest basis on which a comparison can be made with my estimates for the valleys programme area.

Since the launch of the valleys programme in June 1988, the unemployment rate in the valleys area has fallen by 3·9 percentage points compared to a fall in Wales of 3·4 percentage points.

Health Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will break down the distribution of the sum of money allocated for the implementation of the White Paper, "Working for Patients", by authority and by the sub-divisions as in his answer to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside of 31 October; and what uses he expects to be made of the cash sum for health authorities' discretionary use.

Mr. Grist: The distribution of the £1·62 million allocated for the discretionary use of health authorities in meeting the costs of implementing the White Paper "Working for Patients" during the current financial year is shown in the table:

	£ million
Clwyd	0·19
East Dyfed	0·13
Gwent	0·23
Gwynedd	0·13
Mid Glamorgan	0·26
Pembrokeshire	0·07
Powys	0·08
South Glamorgan	0·29
West Glamorgan	0·20
Welsh Health Common Services Authority	0·04
	1·62

The funding provided recognises the need for health authorities to strengthen their systems and staffing particularly in the fields of finance and personnel in order to meet the operational requirements of the White Paper reforms. While information is not available on the precise deployment of these additional funds—since this is a matter for each health authority to decide in the light of its own local circumstances—all authorities have confirmed that they have borne in mind the following considerations:

(i) the information technology and staffing consequences of the need to introduce and maintain capital asset registers and to generate capital charges in respect of all registered assets;

(ii) the staffing consequences associated with the introduction of new contractual arrangements for service provision particularly in the contract negotiation, billing, paymaster and accounting function;

(iii) the staffing consequences associated with the need for the introduction of comprehensive (computerised) manpower management systems;

(iv) the need for district co-ordinators and supporting staff etc. (as necessary) to establish medical audit as district level.

The balance of the additional £5 million which the Department has provided toward the cost of implementing the White Paper proposals in the current financial year has been reserved centrally for the various purposes outlined in the table, but it is not possible to say at the present time how much of this funding will be allocated in due course to individual health authorities.

(a) £2·34 million has been earmarked in respect of authorities' information technology and resource management initiative plans under the revised Information and Information Technology Strategy for the NHS in Wales which is to be published shortly. The distribution of these funds between health authorities will be subject of detailed discussions between health authorities and my officials;

(b) £0·11 million has been reserved for medical audit purposes including support for some specific projects and the appointment of a clinical adviser to head a Clinical Resource User Group and to liaise with the Welsh Advisory Group on Medical Audit;

(c) £0·18 million is required for the cost this year of the Value for Money Unit which has been established to lead the drive for cost improvements and income generation, to promote opportunities for marketing NHS expertise and to advise authorities on the commercial exploitation of innovation;

(d) £0·14 million has been set aside for the cost of additional training at the all Wales level of health authority personnel and finance staff and for strengthening the functions undertaken by the Manpower Consultancy Service;

(e) £0·11 million has been reserved for preparatory work to enable the implementation of the White Paper proposals relating to family practitioner services. Of this sum, £0·08 million has been allocated to the family practitioner committees in Wales and £0·3 million is being used centrally to help meet the cost of appointing general managers to FPCs in Wales;

(f) £0·50 million is to be used in establishing treatment centres at Bridgend, Bangor and Cardiff but it is not possible at this stage to give an accurate assessment of the distribution of this funding between the managing authorities.

Untreated Sewage

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) by what date he plans to end the discharge of untreated sewage from Wales into the sea, whether by long or short outfalls;

(2) what assessment he has made of the cost of ending the discharge of untreated sewage from Wales into the sea;

(3) whether he will make it his policy to end the discharge of untreated sewage from Wales into the sea and into estuaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Government remain to be convinced that prior treatment is always necessary or desirable where properly designed and sited long sea outfalls are available. However, a study has been commissioned, to be undertaken by Consultants in Environmental Sciences Ltd., to investigate the likely costs and benefits, both environmental and financial, of applying various treatment standards to all major discharges.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the outfalls into the sea and estuaries carrying untreated sewage from Wales which are currently being extended or for which extensions are being planned, with the cost of each project and its projected date of completion.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for Dwr Cymru Cyfyngedig. Information is held centrally only in respect of investment on outfalls in connection with the United Kingdom's programme to achieve compliance with its obligations under the EC's bathing water directive. This was placed in the Library by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 20 October.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the outfalls which currently convey untreated sewage from Wales into the sea and into estuaries.

Mr. Grist: This information is available on National Rivers Authority registers and is not held centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Single Market

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms have approached his Department for information concerning the single market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The DTI has recorded over 260,000 inquiries for information on the single market since our 'Europe Open for Business' campaign was launched in March 1988, including more than 150,000 calls to our 1992 telephone hotline. The large majority of these requests have been from individual firms or business organisations. In addition, DTI Ministers and officials have spoken at more than 1,250 single market conferences and seminars since the campaign began, mainly to business audiences.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many single European market measures were agreed in principle, adopted or had common positions under the Spanish presidency of the European Commission; and whether this total exceeds those under previous presidencies.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 November 1989]: A record 68 measures aimed at removing barriers to trade within the Community were finally adopted, agreed in principle, or had common positions agreed for submission to the European Parliament, under the Spanish presidency of the Council of Ministers in the first half of this year. Of these 23 came from the single market White Paper. The comparable figures for earlier presidencies were:

Presidency and Date	All measures	White Paper
Luxembourg
July-December 1985	32	22
Netherlands
January-June 1986	13	4
United Kingdom
July-December 1986	48	24
Belgium
January-June 1987	23	15
Denmark
July-December 1987	31	8
Federal Republic of Germany
January-June 1988	56	23
Greece
July-December 1988	54	18
Spain
January-June 1989	68	23

Note: The figures in the White Paper column are for adoptions, except for the Spanish Presidency, which includes three common positions awaiting final adoption.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total expenditure per year associated with his Department's single market unit.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 November 1989]: Expenditure to date on the Department of Trade and Industry's "Europe Open for Business" campaign, which is the responsibility of my Department's single market unit, is around £13 million. Of this, around £8·9 million is represented by national advertising. The remaining £4·1 million has provided a detailed and comprehensive range of literature; a national telephone inquiry service and mailing operation; the Spearhead computer database; video materials; research into business preparations; and a major series of business conferences in 1988.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy to hold six-monthly national conferences bringing together business men and women, trades unions and professional bodies to discuss the implications of the European single market of 1992.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 November 1989]: I have no plans at present to hold regular conferences of this type. Department of Trade and Industry Ministers and officials have already spoken at over 1,250 single market conferences and seminars, and are further committed to participating in over 100 more. In addition, my Department's extensive day-to-day contact with business and representational bodies provides ample opportunity to discuss single market issues.

Woven Spun Cotton

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy towards placing restrictions on the importation of woven spun cotton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are various restraints on imports into the United Kingdom of woven spun cotton fabrics from low-cost supplying countries under the European Community's agreements under the multi-fibre arrangement and other restraint arrangements. If it can be clearly demonstrated that unrestricted imports from a particular country subject to these arrangements are causing or threatening disruption of the United Kingdom market, my Department will consider whether it is in the United Kingdom interest to request restraint action in Brussels.

Messrs. Gary Gilbert and Sankey

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will investigate whether Messrs. Gary Gilbert and Sankey or any of its employees and employees of related companies were knowingly connected with companies in whose shares they traded during the period 1982 to 1988.

Mr. Redwood: The concept of being knowingly connected with a company is one contained in the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985. Investigations into possible contraventions of that Act are not normally announced. If the hon. Member has information suggesting that there may have been such a contravention he should draw it to my right hon. Friend's attention.

British Steel (Flotation)

Mr. Boldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total cost of the flotation of British Steel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The total cost to the Government of the sale of British Steel is estimated to be as follows.

	£ million
Underwriting	21·3
Selling and broking commission	1·7
Receiving banks	4·3
Marketing	11·6
Advisers' fees	5·6
Other costs (excluding stamp duty)	0·2
Overseas costs	2·8
	47·5

This represents less than 2 per cent. of the gross proceeds of the sale.

Telecommunications (Liberalisation)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any decisions have been made as a result of the recommendations from the Director General of Telecommunications about the further liberalisation of telecommunication services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to the reply, 15 June 1989, c. 481-82]: I can now inform the House that I have signed the new branch systems general licence under the Telecommunications Act 1984. The licence enters into force today.

The new licence provides for significant further liberalisation in a number of areas. In particular, it allows "simple resale" whereby companies and others can sell on to third parties any spare capacity they have on the private lines they lease from British Telecom and Mercury. The licence thus gives operators of private networks complete freedom in their use within the United Kingdom.

The licence also contains a condition designed to limit the intrusion caused by unsolicited telephone and fax sales calls. Under it, users will be able to request that a particular company ceases such calls and if the company continues to make them, it will be in breach of the licence.

Since the licence will govern the operation of the overwhelming majority of private networks and branch systems in the country, as well as the provision of telecommunications services, we have been particularly careful to produce a document which will put into practice the measures announced by my hon. Friend in the simplest and most effective way.

We have also taken the opportunity to simplify further some of the conditions, particularly those relating to the provision of international data services.

We have also added a requirement that specially adapted telephones for the hard of hearing located in lifts to which the public have access should be clearly signposted. We hope these further changes will bring additional benefits to the users of telecommunications in the United Kingdom.

In preparing the new licence, my Department has received detailed advice from the Office of Telecommunications. I am grateful to the Director General of Telecommunications for this advice and for his recommendations, which have formed the basis for the further liberalisations that are contained in the licence.

Copies of the new licence will be generally available at a cost of £5 from the Office of Telecommunications, and I will ensure that they are placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

ENERGY

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the post-1980 NATO exercises in which the NATO Wartime Oil Organisation's United Kingdom headquarters and the United Kingdom National Oil Board have been exercised.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The United Kingdom National Oil Board and the eastern branch of the NATO Wartime Oil Organisation have participated in a number of post-1980 NATO exercises.

Plutonium (Transportation)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements for airport facilities British Nuclear Fuels plc. has made to transport plutonium from Sellafield to Dounreay and Europe in the light of the forthcoming closure of Carlisle airport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As this is an operational matter for BNFL, I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements have been made in the event of a nuclear accident occurring in the United Kingdom larger than the so-called reference accident.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the Prime Minister's statement on 12 December 1988. She said that extensive consultations with the emergency services and local authorities have > "confirmed the availability of contingency plans which would permit an effective response to be made to any nuclear accident, including those with more widespread effects than the specific site and off-site plans are designed to cater for".—[Official Report, 12 December 1988; Vol. 143, c. 388.]

Off-site emergency exercises are regularly based on an assumed radioactive release going significantly beyond that which could arise from the reference accident to ensure this wider capability is tested.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the increase in electricity prices in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Annual percentage changes in electricity prices in current terms, that is, with no adjustment for inflation, are given in the table. Separate figures are given for domestic and industrial consumers.

Change in prices over previous year per cent.

Year	Domestic	Industrial
1979	8·5	11·1

Gas Prices

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the increase in gas prices in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Annual percentage changes in gas prices in current terms, that is, with no adjustment for inflation, are given in the table. Separate figures are given for domestic and industrial consumers.

Coal Mining Subsidies

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by when the Government intend to comply with EEC directives on eliminating subsidies to the British coal mining industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There are no EC directives on eliminating subsidies to the British coal mining industry. The Government already comply with the EC directive on coal state aids under which member states can provide specified financial support to their coal industries subject to either the approval of, or prior notification to, the Commission.

Energy Efficiency

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how the Government intend to improve energy efficiency in the United Kingdom during 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Energy efficiency is primarily a matter for individual consumers. The Energy Efficiency Office will continue to provide help and guidance to consumers, to improve their energy management and to encourage the energy efficiency industry. For Government Departments, where the Government have direct responsibility for energy use, we announced a framework for securing energy savings rising to £45 million per year, equivalent to 15 per cent. of their energy bills, over five years.

Power Stations

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if provision will be made to make available to independent electricity generators the portfolio of redundant power stations currently held by National Power and PowerGen.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Electricity Act 1989 includes, in schedule 3, a provision which could enable one electricity licence holder to make a compulsory purchase order covering surplus land held by another.

EMPLOYMENT

YTS

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS starts and how many leavers were recorded by each payment type, by male and female, and by one or two-year training entitlement by standard training agency in the Yorkshire and Humberside region, for each of the last three months.

Mr. Nicholls: As the information is contained in several tables I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, (1) pursuant to the answer of the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) of 31 October, Official Report, column 160, what are the criteria for the 1990 target number of factory inspectors;

(2) what was the target number of factory inspectors for 1 April 1988 and April 1989; and what it is for 1 April 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government have made financial provision for the Health and Safety Executive to allow recruitment as follows:

	Total factory inspectors in HSE[1]	Inspectors in HM Factory Inspectorate
1 April 1988	634	574
1 April 1989	[2]649	588
1 April 1990	640	590

[1] Includes inspectors on non-inspection duties eg those contributing to policy or technical standards.

[2] Following an unexpectedly high rate of resignations during 1987-88, this "target" was reduced in October 1988 by HSE to 638.

The criteria for HSE's 1990 target for factory inspectors were set out in the Health and Safety Commission's plan of work for 1989-90 and beyond.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Labour and Social Affairs Council meeting held in Brussels on 30 October.

Mr. Eggar: The Council agreed some important items in the field of health and safety at work. They reached common positions on a directive to improve the minimum health and safety requirements for workers handling heavy loads, and on a directive covering health and safety requirements for workers working with visual display units.

The Council continued its discussion of a revised draft of the charter of social rights. The presidency conclusions on the draft charter will now go forward with a view to a decision on adoption, to the European Council in December.

A report on a comparative study on working conditions in member states, drawn up by the Commission, was also discussed and welcomed. The Commission was invited to continue the work in consultation with member states.

Disabled People (Quotas)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the various grants for which employers may apply in order to facilitate the employment of disabled people; and if he will indicate in each case (a) the amounts allocated by his Department and (b) the amounts taken up by employers, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 6 November 1989]: My Department provides a variety of help to facilitate the employment of people with disabilities, including six special schemes to help overcome specific barriers to work. Two of these offer grants to employers:

(a) the Job Introduction Scheme—grants towards an individual's wages during a trial period.

(b) the Adaptations to Premises and Equipment Scheme—grants to employers to adapt their premises or equipment to enable a specific disabled employee to work more effectively and productively.

The other four offer help directly to individuals. Money is allocated to the special schemes as a bloc, and expenditure on any one scheme is not constrained by estimates for that scheme; these are based each year on previous take-up and other evidence of likely demand.

Between 1979-80 and 1988-89, total expenditure on all the special schemes for the disabled rose from £743,000 per annum to £5,669,000 per annum.

The financial information requested about the two schemes is as follows:

Job introduction scheme

Year	Expenditure estimate £	Actual expenditure £
1979-80	334,000	297,201
1980-81	457,000	269,433
1981-82	425,000	354,588
1982-83	531,500	439,861
1983-84	571,000	567,980
1984-85	646,000	659,000
1985-86	760,000	674,000
1986-87	837,000	574,000
1987-88	920,000	619,000
1988-89	609,000	614,000

Adaptations to premises and equipment scheme

Year	Expenditure estimate £	Actual expenditure £
1979-80	330,000	50,000
1980-81	381,000	64,233
1981-82	150,000	71,469
1982-83	177,000	107,334
1983-84	280,000	134,412

1985-86	250,000	295,000
1986-87	450,000	256,000
1987-88	480,000	484,000
1988-89	354,000	423,000

NORTHERN IRELAND

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercise themselves; and what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. Cope: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments each play their part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required. It would not be appropriate for me to supply the detail requested.

Arts

The Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the visits made by each of the Ministers in his Department to events in the arts in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 1 November 1989]: The information on official visits to arts events is as follows:

Secretary of State
Julius Caesar, Grand Opera House.
Armada Exhibition, Ulster Museum.
Don Giovanni, Grand Opera House.

Minister of State
Spanish Armada Exhibition—Ulster Museum.
Ulster Orchestra Concert—London.

Parliamentary Under Secretary of State responsible for Health
Ulster Society of Women Artists Annual Summer Exhibition—QUB Department of Architecture, 15 Chlorine Gardens.
Save the Children Reception—Dolls House Exhibition—Ulster Folk Museum.
Faust—Grand Opera House.

Parliamentary Under Secretary of State responsible for the Environment
Look Back in Anger.
Jazz Concert—Cornmarket.

Parliamentary Under Secretary of State responsible for Education
Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts—Reception at Hillsborough Castle.
Armada Exhibition—Ulster Museum.
Young Farmers' Clubs Arts Festival, Ballymena.

National Choral Competition—Whitla Hall.
Opening Emigration Gallery and Ship—Ulster American Folk Park, Omagh.
American Waterways Wind Orchestra Performance—Donegall Quay, Belfast.

Parliamentary Under Secretary of State responsible for Economic Development
National Portrait Gallery, London—private viewing.
Tate Gallery, London—private viewing.
Hayward Gallery, London—private viewing.
Grand Opera House, Belfast.
Tate Gallery, London—reception.
Castleward Opera.
British Museum.

Parliamentary Under Secretary of State responsible for Agriculture

Spanish Armada Exhibition—Ulster Museum
British Food and Farming Exhibition—Cultra Manor.
Musical Evening.
Cinema Visit.
Queen's Film Theatre.

DEFENCE

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations have been undertaken into the presence of polychlorinated biphenyls in radar units and other equipment; what steps have been taken to arrange for their safe disposal; what measures have been taken to protect the health and safety of operators; what plans there are to discontinue their use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Extensive checks have been made over a number of years by the services and the Procurement Executive to ascertain whether equipment in use contains polychlorinated biphenyls. Such checks continue to be made as required. When disposal action needs to be taken, special arrangements are made to ensure that polychlorinated biphenyls are disposed of in accordance with the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980.

Appropriate control measures have been laid down in general guidance on the handling of equipment containing polychlorinated biphenyls which has been issued to all units and establishments. This includes advice on the hazards involved and the steps to be taken to prevent contamination, including the use of protective clothing as appropriate.

In accordance with the relevant regulations, whole equipments or components containing polychlorinated biphenyls, which are already in service, are not disposed of until they become obsolete or reach the end of their service life, unless they need replacing sooner.

Defence Procurement

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will estimate the value of defence procurement in the northern region.

Mr. Neubert: Table 6.9 in volume II of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989" (SDE) shows that in 1986-87, the latest year for which figures are available, equipment expenditure of some £500 million was recorded against locations in the northern region of England. The assumptions which underlie the calculations are explained in an essay on pages 61-62 of SDE 88 volume II.

Emergency Broadcasts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the liaison arrangements between his Department and the United States civilian or military authorities on the proposed content of emergency radio and television broadcasts in the United Kingdom during a pre-war crisis.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No liaison arrangements have been made between my Department and United States civilian or military authorities on the proposed content of emergency radio and television broadcasts in the United Kingdom during a pre-war crisis, but there would naturally be liaison between the United Kingdom and its NATO allies over such matters at such a time.

NATO Courses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom military and civil participants in the biannual courses on civil-military co-operation held by NATO at Oberammergau.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom sends military field-grade officers of rank from major to colonel and civilians of equivalent status who have responsibilities for civil emergency or contingency planning, crisis management or aid to the civil authorities.

Civil-Military Co-operation Conference

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom delegates to the annual conference on civil-military co-operation at headquarters allied forces central Europe, Brunssum.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: United Kingdom representatives at lieutenant colonel or equivalent level who have responsibilities for contingency planning and crisis management will attend the conference.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO Exercise Wintex-Cimex 1987 and Exercise Wintex-Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the detail requested.

Immingham and Tilbury Ports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present state of progress towards (a) Immingham and (b) Tilbury ports' development of Z-berths for nuclear-powered submarine visits.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The only ports which are currently under discussion with local authorities as possible venues for visits by nuclear-powered submarines are Swansea and Tilbury. Regarding Tilbury, I have nothing to add to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) on 5 May 1989 at column 277.

Meteorological and Hydrographic Offices

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the nature of the differences between the agency to be established for the Meteorological Office and the defence support agency to be established for the Hydrographic Office at Taunton.

Mr. Neubert: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence explained in his speech in the defence debate on 18 October, at column 155, many support activities are an integral part of overall military capability and must remain within the chain of command. Nevertheless, we believe that many of these support activities can be organised on the same lines as full Next Steps agencies, within framework documents which set out the terms under which the support agencies are to be managed on a day-to-day basis. In this way, it is possible for more of the Ministry of Defence to share in the advantages of the Government's Next Steps initiative.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place copies of the criteria governing the management and operation of (a) the agency to be established for the Meteorological Office and (b) the agency to be established for the Hydrographic Office in the Library.

Mr. Neubert: It is my intention to place in the Library, when these activities become agencies next year, copies of their framework documents, excluding any classified or commercially sensitive parts.

Defence Support Agencies

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) military survey activities, (b) defence accounts activities and (c) Royal Air Force training activities are due to become defence support agencies; and what is the nature of any other activities that are currently being considered for possible re-organisation into defence support agencies.

Mr. Neubert: We plan to start operating the Hydrographic Office at Taunton as a defence support agency from April 1990. In addition, we are currently preparing framework documents to cover the operations of the following activities:

(a) Directorate of Military Survey at Feltham (excluding overseas elements)
(b) Director General Defence Accounts, including its central bill-paying office at Liverpool and pay-roll offices at Cheadle Hulme and elsewhere
(c) The RAF's training organisation within RAF Support command, based at various locations within the United Kingdom
(d) Service Children's Schools in North West Europe.

We are also looking at a wide range of other possibilities for operation as defence support agencies, including activities in the areas of aircraft maintenance and repair, stores and transport, naval bases, computer services, education and chemical defence research.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what service schools in Germany are due to become defence support agencies.

Mr. Neubert: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 18 October at column 155, we are considering operating service children's schools in north-west Europe as a defence support agency, run on Next Steps lines, but remaining within the defence chain of command. The exact scope of the proposed new organisation is under study. There are 87 service children's schools in north-west Europe, located in the Federal Republic of Germany (and Berlin), Belgium and Sardinia.

Military Flights

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what details are required as standard operational practice before the competent authority authorises a flight by military aircraft operating within the United Kingdom airspace; and why no central records are kept of unauthorised low flights by military aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: The requirement for information varies according to the circumstances. No central records are kept of unauthorised low flights because none is required.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the offer by the Federal Republic of Germany to pay the costs of the alteration of the MSD 2000 radar to satisfy United Kingdom requirements for the European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Under agreed arrangements for procuring individual items of commonly required equipment, participants in the European fighter aircraft project pay for work undertaken within their own country. Two international consortia in which the industry of all four nations are represented have submitted proposals for developing radar for the European fighter aircraft; and discussions are proceeding among the European fighter aircraft nations with the aim of making a choice acceptable to all four participants.

Frigates

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the purchase of ships built under licence to the design of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation frigate replacement 90 programme in United Kingdom shipyards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Following the United Kingdom withdrawal from the NFR90 project, we are looking at how best to meet the Royal Navy's requirement for a replacement for the type 42 destroyer, to come into service at about the turn of the century. It is most unlikely that this would involve licensing any design which might emerge from the NFR90 project.

Low Flying

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many courts martial have been held in the RAF for alleged low-flying offences in the last 10 years for which information is available; how many findings of guilt there have been; and what sentences have been imposed.

Mr. Neubert: The table provides details of the Royal Air Force courts martial for low-flying offences in the last 10 years at which the accused were found guilty; there have been no cases in the past 10 years where individuals charged under sections 51 or 52 of the Air Force Act 1955 were found not guilty.

Year	Number of courts martial	Number of personnel involved	Charges under Air Force Act 1955	Sentence
1985	1	1	Sections 51 and 52	£300 fine and Severe Reprimand
1989	1	1	Sections 51 and 52	Loss of 18 months seniority and Severe Reprimand[1]

In addition one service man was charged under section 69[2] in connection with the 1989 case, and was sentenced to the loss of 18 months seniority and a severe reprimand[1].

[1] Findings and sentence subject to confirmation.

[2] Conduct to the prejudice of good order and Air Force discipline.

Conventional Forces

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the effect on the NATO doctrine of forward defence in the event that the CFE talks achieve substantial reductions in conventional forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Any CFE agreement will require the Alliance to examine its force structures. Our current assessment is that forward defence is likely to remain a key element in NATO strategy for the foreseeable future.

Airborne Stand-off Radar

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the deployment of an airborne stand-off radar system in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Studies into the feasibility and cost of an airborne stand-off radar system are in progress. No decisions to deploy such a system have been taken.

Conventional Weapons

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the redistribution of forces within NATO in the event that the CFE talks achieve substantial reductions in conventional weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The implications of a CFE agreement for NATO forces are under consideration in the Alliance.

Leaded Petrol

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any vehicles belonging to or used by his Department and used on public roads run on leaded petrol.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Most vehicles used by the Ministry of Defence on public roads either run on unleaded petrol, or use diesel fuel. However, there is a residual number of vehicles, in particular some types of Land-Rover, which run on leaded petrol and which it would not be cost effective to convert to unleaded fuel. As they reach the end of their useful life they are replaced with vehicles which can run on unleaded petrol or are diesel-engined.

SCOTLAND

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Scoland if he has been approached by Strathclyde police about the length of time taken by the West German federal police to release relevant evidence in the form of an Air Malta loading list from Frankfurt; and what effect this has had on the investigation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The investigation is being carried out by Dumfries and Galloway constabulary with assistance from Strathclyde police and other police forces who report to my noble and learned friend the Lord Advocate.

The police have not found it necessary to approach the Lord Advocate or any Government Minister in this connection.

The Lord Advocate does not consider that it is helpful to speculate upon specific lines of inquiry or their relevance to the general investigation.

Both he and the chief constable of Dumfries and Galloway constabulary have recently emphasised the importance and productivity of a good working relationship which exists with the West German police and prosecution authorities.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether all the available evidence that is held by the West German police forces investigating the Lockerbie air crash has been made available to the British police force investigating the crash.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As I have stated in another answer, my noble and learned friend, the Lord Advocate has overall responsibility for the criminal investigation and any criminal proceedings in this country which may result from it.

In a press statement which he issued on Monday 30 October and again on 5 November he emphasised that the degree of international co-operation in this case has been unprecedented. That co-operation has included unprecedented access to evidential material held by the West German federal police (BKA). Neither he nor the chief constable of Dumfries and Galloway constabulary, who is leading the international inquiry, has any reason to believe that any evidence available to the German police has been denied to the investigating team.

Oil Seed Rape

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the impact of the cultivation of oil seed rape on human health or allergies; and if his Department will sponsor any research on this subject.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Although oil seed rape pollens have been identified as a cause of allergic reactions in some individuals there are at present no medical grounds for distinguishing their effects from those of the pollens of other plants and trees. A range of medicines is available for the treatment of such allergic conditions.

The Scottish Office will give favourable consideration to any soundly based relevant research proposal.

Childhood Leukaemia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by year to date, and by health authority, the number of incidences of childhood leukaemia that have been reported following the Chernobyl accident; and what was the reported number of incidences in 1980 and 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of cases of leukaemia recorded in children in the 0 to 14 age group in Scotland, analysed by health board of residence in the years 1980, 1986 and 1987, are shown in the following table. 1987 is the latest year for which cancer registration in Scotland is complete.

Health Board	1980	1986	1987
Argyll and Clyde	4	4	6
Ayrshire and Arran	2	1	4

Gaelic Broadcasting

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to support a Gaelic broadcasting council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Government are currently considering the future of Gaelic broadcasting, including Comunn na Gaidhlig's proposals for the establishment of a Gaelic broadcasting council; and we will announce our conclusion shortly.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of Grampian Television to discuss Gaelic broadcasting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend met the managing director of Grampian Television on 5 April 1989 to discuss issues, including Gaelic broadcasting, arising from the broadcasting White Paper. The meeting was also attended by representatives of Scottish Television and Border Television.

Advisers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all current advisers to his Department who are not career civil servants, giving their date of appointment and fees.

Mr. Rifkind: There are currently two part-time advisers to the Scottish Office. They are:

Professor J. Lamb CBE, Scientific Adviser, appointed on 20 September 1987.

Dr. C. K. Bennington, Industrial Adviser, appointed on 8 August 1988.

It is not our practice to divulge the remuneration of industrial advisers. Fees are negotiated individually and relate to previous outside earnings.

School Boards

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number, in each regional council area, of schools in (a) the primary sector and (b) the secondary sector which now have a school board in place, showing each total as a percentage of the total number of such schools in the area.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table:

Number of schools with school board

Region/Islands areas	Primary schools	Percentage of Primary schools	Secondary schools	Percentage of Secondary schools

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number, in each regional council area, of schools in (a) the primary sector and (b) the secondary sector which did not require to hold elections for school boards, showing these as a percentage of the total number of boards currently in place.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of the bodies which have expressed themselves to his Department (a) in favour and (b) against the proposal to create three separate Nature Conservancy Councils, as referred to in the letter to the hon. Member for Linlithgow from the Minister of State at his Department, dated 31 October.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department consultation paper "Scotland's Natural Heritage" invited comments on the proposals to merge the Countryside Commission for Scotland (CCS) with a new Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland (NCCS) to form a single natural heritage agency for Scotland. Although not specifically invited to do so, some respondents commented on the Government's decision to create three separate NCCs but it is not possible to give a breakdown of these in the manner requested. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to announce the outcome of the consultation exercise soon.

Health Service (Grading Appeals)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report, to the latest available date, the number of appeals against clinical grading which have now been heard, the number that are still outstanding and the figures for each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 1 November 1989]: The information is not available since there is no central record of the total number of appeals lodged nor of the number resolved at unit level.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis is the notional income on capital calculated, under the Housing Benefit (Community Charge Rebate) (Scotland) Regulations 1988, such that £1 is deemed the notional income for every £250 increment of capital between £3,000 and £8,000.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

Tariff income on capital progressively reduces entitlement to community charge rebate for those with higher levels of capital. The Government believe that it is right to expect claimants with savings above £3,000 to use some of those resources to meet their day-to-day living expenses thereby reducing the burden on taxpayers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Government Finance

83. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the proportion of (a) all pensioner households and (b) those pensioner households financially dependent solely on state benefit likely to receive a rebate on the community charge.

Mr. Scott: All elderly people financially dependent solely on state benefits will be entitled to receive community charge benefit, and the vast majority of them will be entitled to maximum community charge benefit. The precise number of pensioner households who will receive community charge benefit will be affected by the community charge transitional relief scheme, and I will write to my hon. Friend about the remainder of his question when the Government's public expenditure plans have been published.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now reconsider the six-month rule relating to attendance allowance in order to ensure that there is no systematic failure to provide early stage community care for people with a proven attendance need arising out of chronic sickness or disability.

Mr. Scott: The provision of community care services is a matter for local authority social service departments who will consider clients' needs whether or not they are getting attendance allowance. We shall look at the six months waiting period for the allowance when we consider the future of disability benefits in the light of the results of the OPCS disability surveys. Meanwhile, we have already announced our intention to remove this waiting period for terminally ill people.

Income Support

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the levels of weekly income which may be disregarded for persons whose families are in receipt of income support and who may have some part-time self-employed work; and how these levels of disregard have changed over the past 10 years, under the present system and the previous supplementary benefit system.

Mrs. Gillian Shepherd: The weekly amount of earnings that may be disregarded for people with families who are in part-time self-employment and receiving income suport are:

	£
Couples aged under 60 years who have been continuously in receipt of supplementary benefit/income support for two years or more.	15 per couple
Couples receiving or with underlying title to the disability premium (for example people who have been sick for 28 weeks or more, or are disabled).	15 per couple
All other couples.	5 each member
Lone parents.	15

The equivalent levels of earnings disregarded under the Supplementary Benefit scheme since 1979 were:

	1979-80 £	November 1980—April 1988 £
People required to register for employment.	2	4
People not required to register for employment.	4	4
Lone parents.	6	[1]12 maximum

[1] £4 plus half the amount of any earnings between £4 and £20.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the total numbers in each region of the United Kingdom of (a) direct recipients of supplementary benefit or income support payments and (b) the estimated number of dependants of such recipients in June of each year since 1986.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information for Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. The information by social security region for Great Britain is as follows:

[1] Figures for June of each year are unavailable. The information relates to February 1986, May 1987 and May 1988. Figures are in thousands.

[2] Totals do not consistently sum due to rounding.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of the number of sick people receiving income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information on the number of sick people receiving income support is not available. However, the latest available estimates are that some 248,000 income support claimants are in receipt of the disability premium which is payable to sick or disabled people.

Grants and Loans (Clothing)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discretion his Department's local offices have over the payment of grants or loans to help people on pensions, income support and invalidity benefit meet the additional costs of purchasing necessary extra clothing for a person as in-patients in hospital; and if he will take steps to ensure that these provisions are interpreted with adequate generosity at local level to ensure that the real needs of claimants are met.

Mr. Scott: Social fund budgeting loans and community care grants may be awarded, at the discretion of a social fund officer, to help people on income support with the cost of clothing. Hospital in-patients who are not receiving income support may be able to obtain a crisis loan where it is planned that they will be discharged from hospital within two weeks and a loan is the only means of avoiding serious risk to health or safety. Whether a loan or grant can be made is for a social fund officer to decide having regard to the circumstances of the individual case.

Benefit Limits

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretaryof State for Social Security if he will list in the Official Report the various capital limits that have existed for each relevant social security benefit, including housing benefit, since 1979, above which no benefit is payable.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is as follows:

	Supplementary benefit (to April 1988) Income support (from April 1988)	Family income supplement (to April 1988) Family Credit (from April 1988)	Rent rebates and rent allowances[1] to April 1983) Housing benefit (from 1982-83) Community charge benefit (from April 1989)

[1] Note.—Between 1979 and the phased introduction of Housing Benefit in 1982-83 assistance with rent and rates was through the former rent rebate, rent allowance and rate rebate schemes which were not Social Security benefits.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will allocate funds to set up a working group to investigate improvements of wheelchairs for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No. The disablement services authority, which has responsibility for the provision of wheelchair services in England, has this matter under consideration.

Offices (Doncaster and Wath-on-Dearne)

Mr. Martin Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by social security offices in (a) Doncaster and (b) Wath-on-Dearne, the number of social fund applications that remained unprocessed at the end of the financial year 1988-89, the number that are currently awaiting determination, and the underspend at each office in 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is shown in the tables.

Part-time Workers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to revise the current national insurance plan to include provision for cover for part-time workers on a pro-rata basis.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Part-time workers who earn above the lower earnings limit, currently £43 per week, are already included in national insurance on the same basis as full-time employees. We have no current plans to introduce legislation to extend national insurance to those who earn less than the lower earnings limit.

Homelessness

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what problems he has identified arising from recent changes in social security regulations relating to homelessness among young people; and whether he intends to make any changes to the regulations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The broad thrust of our policy for the majority of 16 and 17-year-olds is correct; it would be irresponsible to provide a perverse incentive to leave home needlessly.

However, our monitoring and discussions with interested bodies revealed earlier this year that a minority were facing real difficulties. As a result, the following changes were made in July:

(a) 16 and 17-year-olds on income support who, for good reason, have to live independently, became entitled to a higher rate of income support as a recognition of higher and unavoidable expenses (there was a similar relaxation in the rules governing housing benefit);

(b) in addition, entitlement to income support during the child benefit extension period was extended to those 16 and 17-year-olds genuinely estranged from their parents;

(c) those 16 and 17-year-olds who seek emergency accommodation in night shelters are now automatically considered for payment of income support under the "severe hardship" provisions;

(d) special training arrangements were introduced for those officials who deal with claims from the vulnerable group of young people who are estranged from their families or who have had to leave home for some other good reason.

Those who are homeless continue to be able to claim a social fund crisis loan to enable them to secure accommodation.

We continue to monitor the effects of the 1988 social security reforms including those affecting 16 and 17-year-olds.

Social Fund

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount for each social security region of unspent social fund allocations, and the national total, for both loans and grants, for the last financial year.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is contained in the table.

Table

Year 1988–89	Grants Outstanding balance	Loans Outstanding balance
National £ million	18·5	17·5
North East Region	3·0	1·5
North West Region	1·5	2·5
Midlands Region	2·5	2·0
London North Region	2·0	4·0
London South Region	2·0	4·0
Wales and South West Region	1·0	1·0
Scotland	5·5	2·5

Note: Figures rounded to the nearest £½ million.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many housing benefit recipients are (a) retired pensioners, (b) unemployed and (c) sick.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information is not collected on a basis which can identify those who are sick. The information available is in the table.

Estimated numbers receiving housing benefit: Great Britain May 1988

	Claimants also in receipt of Income Support (000)	Claimants in receipt of Housing Benefit only (000)
Claimant or partner aged 60 or over	1,440	1,720
Registered unemployed	880	n/a

Single Claimants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average weekly payment of (a) unemployment benefit, (b) sickness benefit, (c) invalidity benefit and (d) retirement pension received by a single claimant.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The table shows the average weekly payments of unemployment benefit, invalidity benefit and retirement pension, at the latest available dates, to persons without adult dependants. They may be single, married, widowed or divorced. I regret that similar information is not available for sickness benefit, but the average payment to all sickness beneficiaries at 2 April 1988 was £33·65.

Type of benefit	Average weekly payment to persons without adult dependants
Unemployment benefit	£34·41 (at May 1989)
Invalidity benefit	£46·74 (at 2 April 1988)
Retirement pension[1]	£38·87 (at 31 March 1989)

[1] Contributory retirement pension only.

Unemployed Persons

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest estimate of the number of unemployed persons in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit only, (b) unemployment benefit combined with income support and (c) income support only.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is as follows. The figures relate to August 1989, the latest date for which they are available.

	Number of unemployed claimants
Unemployment benefit only	242,573
Unemployment benefit and income support	88,128
Income support only	1,001,918

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is yet in a position, following the undertaken given during the Committee stage of the Social Security Bill 1989, to publish the results of the monitoring exercise undertaken to establish the effects of the increase in the maximum period of disqualification for unemployment benefit on grounds of voluntary unemployment.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have today arranged for copies of two reports, one by Social and Community Planning Research, the other by the Department, to be placed in the Library.

War Widows

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is, for the latest year for which records exist, the average pension received from all sources by a war widow whose husband was of private rank or equivalent and who died or left the armed forces (a) before 31 March 1973 and (b) after that date.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 25 October 1989]: I regret this information is not available. Under the war pension scheme administered by the Department of Social Security a war widow of a private would receive currently a tax-free war widows pension of £56·65. In addition, age allowances of £6·10 at 65, £12·20 at 70 and £15·30 at 80 are payable. It is unlikely that widows whose husbands served on or after 31 March 1973 would be eligible for age allowances. A war widow whose husband served on or after 31 March 1973 would also receive a forces family pension paid under the armed forces pension scheme. For the widow of a private this would be about £68 a week, the exact figure depending on the year in which her husband's service ended. About 75 per cent. of war widows are also in receipt of a retirement pension, but no information is available about the rates received. Nor is it known what other pensions or income individual war widows may have.

Mr. Neil Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what definition his Department uses of war widow for pension purposes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 27 October 1989]: The Department applies the legislation for the time being in force. Different orders or schemes apply in different circumstances, but none of these provides an express definition of the term "war widow". The Service Pensions Order provides a pension in certain circumstances for a widow of a member of the armed forces whose death was due to service. Whether death was due to service is determined in accordance with the substantive provisions of the order. The civilians scheme includes provision for the award of pensions to widows where the late husband's death was a direct result of war injuries or war service injuries. There are a number of other schemes which also provide pensions for widows who satisfy the requirements of that particular scheme. These include widows whose late husbands were members of the Naval Auxiliary Service, Mercantile Marine, Her Majesty's Coastguard, Auxiliary Coastguard, Home Guard, Ulster Defence Regiment, Polish forces who served under British command during world war 2, the Polish resettlement forces, or the nursing and auxiliary services.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to increase the pensions of widows of the two world wars to make them more comparable with the benefits paid to widows of service men who died after 1973.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 1 November 1989]: Under the war pensions scheme administered by the Department of Social Security, the pension paid to a war widow is the same regardless of when she was widowed. Provision for service men's widows through the occupational forces family pension paid under the armed forces pension scheme is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence. The pensions paid under the war pensions scheme are larger than national insurance widows' pensions, can be received in addition to a retirement pension on the widow's own contributions and are free of tax. In addition, age allowances of £6·10 at age 65, £12·20 at 70 and £15·30 at 80 are paid. These allowances are unique to the war pensions scheme and will be increased from next April to £7, £13·50 and £20 respectively. Eighty five per cent. of all war widows receive age allowances.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

River Crane

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what surveys or investigations concerning the River Crane in Isleworth have been carried out or authorised by or on behalf of his Department and what financial assistance is being given or promised by his Department to the National Rivers Authority for works connected with the River Crane.

Mr. Gummer: My Department's involvement in works in connection with the alleviation of flooding from the River Crane has been limited to giving agreement to the outline proposals for contract 1 which comprises the rebuilding of the channel of the tidal river downstream of Talbot Road bridge to its confluence with the Thames. No financial commitment has yet been requested or issued.

Monofilament Fishing Nets

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will extend the prohibition on the use of monofilament nets by fishing fleets in inshore Scottish waters to cover the whole of Great Britain and offshore waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We have no plans to extend the prohibition on the use of nylon monofilament gill nets although we maintain close monitoring of the fishery. However, there are national mesh size restrictions pursuant to the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975; the use of such nets is variously controlled in some inshore waters under byelaws made by National Rivers Authority regions or sea fisheries committee; and we announced on 27 July 1988 our intention to introduce certain national restrictions on the use of gill and other nets whose mesh sizes fall between 65mm and 89mm.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the fishing industry.

Mr. Curry: I am well aware of the current difficulties facing the industry but these must be seen against the years of unparalleled growth and prosperity since 1983. I am sure that the industry will be able to tackle the future with confidence within the framework of the common fisheries policy.

Sheepmeat Regime

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current state of negotiations on the future of the sheepmeat regime.

Mr. Curry: The Council of Agriculture Ministers adopted a regulation in September providing for substantial changes to the sheepmeat regime. The regulation will begin to have effect in January next year.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county in England and Wales the Forestry Commission woodlands which have been sold during each of the last three years, stating for each disposal the hectarage involved.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland on 6 November 1989 at column 486.

Animal Products (Exports)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries require additional certificates accompanying animal products exported from the United Kingdom to show they are free from radioactivity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Scientific advice on which the Government rely is to the effect that all food produced and marketed in the United Kingdom may be safely consumed as free from harmful radioactive material. Nevertheless since the Chernobyl incident a number of countries—especially in the middle and far east—have required official certificates to this effect in respect of their food imports from the United Kingdom. My Department has routinely provided these at the request of the exporters to facilitate exports. No exhaustive list of those importing countries requiring such certification has been maintained and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has taken or he plans to take to ensure that breeding flocks in other European Community countries known to be contaminated with salmonella enteriditis become free of this bacteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I am pressing for the adoption of Community measures to tackle the problem of salmonella in poultry flocks.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any evidence to link salmonella typhimurium with the contamination of eggs, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Salmonella typhimurium is known to be present in some poultry laying flocks and, like Salmonella enteritidis, has the potential to contaminate eggs. This can arise in a number of ways including contamination of the shell by infected faeces as the egg is laid and subsequent penetration into the egg contents. The evidence supporting this view was upheld by the Select Committee on Agriculture in its first report on salmonella in eggs published in February 1989.

Contaminated Meat

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the results of the research carried out at his central veterinary laboratory on the bacteriological contamination of poultry meat and sausages.

Mr. Gummer: No research on the bacteriological contamination of poultry meat and sausages is carried out at the central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge.

London Food Commission

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to invite a representative from the London Food Commission to participate in the new consumer panel announced by him on 2 November.

Mr. Maclean: I have written to the National Consumer Council, the Consumers Association and the Consumers in the European Community group inviting each organisation to nominate representatives of consumer interests to the consumer panel. I have suggested that in those nominations they should put forward ordinary consumers rather than representatives of particular organisations or lobby groups.

Potassium Bromate

Mr. Cran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take as a result of the recent review by the Food Advisory Committee on the use of potassium bromate in foodstuffs.

Mr. Maclean: Potassium bromate is currently approved for use as a flour improver. That approval was given on the basis that when the flour was used in bread the baking process ensured that there were no residues left. Recently, improved analytical techniques have indicated that this is not necessarily the case and that there may be some very small residues. The Food Advisory Committee has thus recommended that approval for potassium bromate as a flour improver should be withdrawn. I accept that advice and as the law requires will be circulating the draft regulations for consultation today. Potassium bromate is also used in the brewing industry but there are not the same residue questions there and this usage will therefore be allowed to continue for the present.

I have deposited a copy of the Food Advisory Committee's advice in the Library of the House.

Straw and Stubble Burning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county the number of successful prosecutions for breaches of straw and stubble burning law for the current year, and the penalties imposed.

Mr. Patten [holding answer 27 October 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

Information held centrally for 1988 is given in the table. Of the 33 offenders found guilty one (in Hertfordshire) was given an absolute discharge and the remainder were fined. Data for 1989 are not yet available.

BSE

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to take any further action in the light of the Southwood report on bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the reply, 13 June 1989, c. 352]: All bovine animals which are found to have BSE are slaughtered and destroyed. Meat from these animals does not enter the food chain either for human or animal consumption. Earlier this year my predecessor announced that he would take a further precaution which would be to exclude certain bovine offals derived from healthy animals. Further technical studies have now been carried out and additional independent expert advice has been taken. The offals affected are brain, spinal cord, thymus, spleen, tonsils and intestines. A full consultation with all interested parties as required by law has now been completed with one exception, subject to results in this final case, we are proposing to make new regulations today to implement the ban to come into effect on Monday 13 November.

Offals from calves under six months of age will be excluded from these arrangements since any of these offals which may be used for human food will not present a human health hazard. There are no known cases of human beings being infected by any animal encephalopathy. This is a further addition to the very tough measures which Sir Richard Southwood's expert committee recommended earlier this year.

HEALTH

Funding

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much funding for the Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde district health authority and the West Lancashire family practitioner committee has increased in the period 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Freeman: The recurrent revenue funding for the Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde district health authority has increased from £37·8 million in 1982-83 to £65·3 million in 1989-90. This increase of £27·5 million represents an increase in real terms of about 16 per cent., and an increased share of north-western region's recurrent revenue expenditure from 4·7 per cent. to 5·1 per cent. The health services now provided by the Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde health authority were part of the Lancashire area health authority up to 1982-83 and expenditure on them was not separately identified.

The recurring revenue funding of the Lancashire family practitioner committee has increased from £1·15 million in 1985-86 to £1·42 million in 1989-90. This increase of £270,000, in cash terms, represents an increase in real terms of 19 per cent.

Family practitioner committee administration expenditure prior to 1985-86 is not available as it was included as part of district health authorities expenditure and not separately identified.

Insulin

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date synthetic human insulin was licensed in Britain; and on what date warnings to patients were inserted in packs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Synthetic human insulin was licensed in June 1982. General patient leaflet warnings were available from the outset. As a result of reports that some patients had noticed less pronounced or no symptoms of hypoglycaemia on transferring to human insulin the licensing authority reviewed all data sheets and patient information leaflets. In March 1989 they requested manufacturers to add a specific warning to this effect.

Fluoride

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is carrying out, and what information he has gathered, regarding the effect on the health of people of fluorides in drinking water.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is not currently commissioning any research into the effects of fluoridated water on general health. The Government remain convinced that fluoridation at a concentration of one part per million—the level used in all United Kingdom fluoridation schemes—has no adverse effects upon health, and there is no medical evidence to challenge this view. Numerous studies undertaken in this country have, however, demonstrated that dental caries is reduced in fluoridated areas by as much as one third to one half compared to non-fluoridated areas.

Waiting Lists (Southampton)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report, the hospital waiting list numbers for the Southampton and South West district health authority for the last six years for which records are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The requested information is given in the table.

Numbers of cases on the in-patient waiting list, Southampton and South West Hampshire DHA, at 31 March, 1984 to 1989.

Year	Total numbers
1984	9,199
1985	8,732
1986	8,492

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to health authorities on the protection of day services in mental handicap hospitals during the period of rundown in patient numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Planning guidelines issued to health authorities in Health Circular (88) 43 (a copy of which is in the Library) state that health authorities should aim > "to provide good quality care for mentally handicapped people in all settings including maintaining and where necessary improving standards in large hospitals as their populations reduce."

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about the current provision of day services in mental handicap hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The most current information available for 1987-88 concerning the provision of day care facilities in England is contained in the Department of Health publication "Summary of KH14—NHS Day Care Facilities", a copy of which is in the Library. These figures include facilities outside mental handicap hospitals.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to ensure that the resources of large mental handicap hospitals are redeployed for the benefit of people with mental handicap, in particular for the provision of day services, when these funds are no longer required on site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Decisions regarding the use of resources released from large mental handicap hospitals are primarily matters for health authorities in consultation with the relevant local authorities—as they are best placed to know the needs of the population in their area. Arrangements already exist whereby health authorities can transfer funding to local authorities to assist in the provision of community care. Proceeds from the sale of mental handicap hospitals must be used specifically for the development of services for that client group unless there are exceptional circumstances and the Department has agreed otherwise.

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will encourage health and local authorities to co-operate in ensuring continuity of day service provision when residents move out of hospital, in particular the provision of therapist input to community day services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Government policy is to encourage the development at local level of a comprehensive range of well-co-ordinated health and social services for mentally handicapped people. Every district is required by 1991 to have agreed in consultation with the relevant local authorities policy statements and action plans for meeting those needs of mentally handicapped people for which health authorities have the relevant skills, expertise and responsibility. This includes the provision of therapy services.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in the preparation of the White Paper on community care, he has considered the training provided by the Crossroads care attendant schemes for care attendants, local voluntary management committees and co-ordinators of local schemes; and whether this might provide a model for training by local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Training needs will be considered along with other implementation issues following publication of the White Paper.

Mental Handicap (Community Care)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will instruct health authorities to review their day services for people with mental handicap following the social services inspectorate report on day services outside hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We expect health authorities to review their day services for people with a mental handicap as part of their general responsibility to keep all the services which they provide under review.

Patients

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will give the number of patients treated in the northern region for each year since 1983 as (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients.

Mr. Freeman: The information is given in the table.

Cases treated, NHS hospitals, Northern Regional Health Authority, 1983—1987-88

Year	In-patient cases treated	New out-patients
1983	409,115	557,125
1984	420,080	569,743
1985	433,131	595,232
1986	441,095	602,318
1987-88	462,766	592,469

Hospital Improvements

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list major hospital improvements in the northern region since 1983, together with the cost of each.

Mr. Freeman: Following is a list of capital schemes over £1 million in northern region which, according to information available centrally, have been completed since 1 January 1983, together with the cost of construction at tender stage in each case:

Project/scheme	Construction cost £
Blyth Community Hospital & Health Centre	4,258,871
Darlington Memorial Maternity Department	1,125,935
Fenhan Blood Transfusion Service Centre	3,542,500

Darlington Health Authority

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list the total spending allocated to Darlington health authority for each year since 1983, adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Freeman: Gross revenue expenditure in Darlington health authority between 1982-83 and 1988-89, the latest year for which figures are available, is shown in the table.

Northern Region (Spending)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will list total spending in the northern region for each year since 1983 adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Freeman: Gross revenue expenditure in the northern region between 1982-83 and 1988-89, the latest year for which figures are available, is shown in the table.

Breast Cancer

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of women aged (a) between 50 and 64 years and (b) over 64 years, have now been screened for breast cancer in each health authority; and how many cases of breast cancer have been detected as a result of this screening.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The NHS is setting up a national breast cancer screening service over the three years to 1990, and the service is not yet operational in all health authority areas. Following the introduction of a new statistical return for breast cancer screening from April 1989, we expect to have details of the percentage of women screened in 1989-90 towards the end of 1990. Preliminary data assembled by the cancer screening evaluation unit from 16 screening centres indicates that, as at June 1989, of 154,191 women aged 50 to 64 invited for screening by these centres, 679 women were found to have breast cancer.

Helicopter Ambulances

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report those ambulance services in England which have helicopter ambulance facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We do not collect this information centrally. However, we are aware that several health authorities now have dedicated helicopter ambulances. In the London area an emergency helicopter service has been operating for some months and in Cornwall the first air ambulance service has been operating for over two years. South East Thames has announced that it is shortly to commence a limited helicopter trial. In addition, other authorities have been co-operating with police forces in helicopter projects.

All health authorities can make use of RAF helicopter transport in emergency rescue missions which are free and in secondary transfers for which a charge is made. Fixed wing transport is also sometimes used where appropriate, again at commercial rates.

Disablement Services Authority

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if, in the light of an overall overspend on the wheelchair service, and the forecast increase in patient attendance, and the supply of non-powered wheelchairs and of special seating, he will increase the level of funding to the Disablement Services Authority; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what provision is made for inflation and rising salary costs when determining the level of resources for the Disablement Services Authority; and on what basis that provision is decided.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to ensure that the Disablement Services Authority has the financial resources to carry out its planned service development in indoor/outdoor wheelchairs and special wheelchair seating; if he will indicate the source of funding for these developments and whether it is to come from a reduction of other savings or from savings of improved efficiency; whether these savings have so far been realised in the two and a quarter years' existence of the authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: These are matters that have been addressed in the public expenditure survey, the result of which will be announced shortly.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many haemophiliacs have been infected with HIV due to contaminated blood products for the period (a) since 1979, (b) since 1985 and (c) in the current year;

(2) how many haemophiliacs have died as a result of having been infected with HIV due to contaminated blood products for the period (a) since 1979, (b) since 1985 and (c) in the current year.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) and the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 7 November which gives the information currently available for the numbers of haemophiliacs reported as HIV-antibody positive.

The latest information available on the numbers of haemophiliacs with AIDS known to have died in the United Kingdom is given in the table. No reliable figures are available for years before 1983.

	Number
For the period 1983-85	14
For the period 1986-88	71
For 1989 up to 31 October 1989	22
Total	107

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are now being taken to ensure that all blood, imported or otherwise, and blood products, used by the National Health Service for treatment of haemophiliacs in Britain is not contaminated by HIV.

Mr. Freeman: The safety of the blood supply in this country is maintained in two ways. First, since August 1983 potential donors have been given a leaflet which asks those at risk of HIV infection not to give blood. Secondly, since October 1985 all blood donations have been tested for antibodies to HIV-1. In addition, since June 1988 all donations from donors who have visited certain specified west African countries where HIV-2 is more common have been tested for antibodies to HIV-2.

All blood products (home-produced or imported) used in this country, including Factor VIII which is used in the treatment of haemophilia, are now made from screened plasma, and are treated to inactivate HIV. All products concerned are also tested by the National Institute of Biological Standards Control under its batch release system.

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. Freeman: This Department plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the detail requested.

Oil Seed Rape

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about the impact of the cultivation of oil seed rape on human health or allergies; and if his Department will sponsor any research on this subject.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is aware that several studies were being conducted during the summer of 1989 into the possible links between oil seed rape and allergy. We will be interested in seeing the findings when the results are published in due course. The Department's view is that there is no conclusive proof of any link between the growing of oil seed rape and the increase in the numbers of allergy, hay fever, and asthma sufferers. It is possible that other factors such as pollens from less visibly prominent sources are causal or contributory factors. The Department has no plans to sponsor any research in this area.

Childhood Leukaemia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by year to date, and by regional health authority, the number of incidences of childhood leukaemia that have been reported in England and Wales following the Chernobyl accident; and what were the reported incidences in 1980 and 1986.

Mr. Freeman: Cancer registration data for 1985 onwards are still being collected, and thus the requested information for 1986 and for the period since the Chernobyl accident in 1987 is not yet available. The table shows the data for 1980.

Number of newly diagnosed cases of leukaemia[1], ages 0-14 years, England and Wales, 1980

Spina Bifida

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities that provide a test for spina bifida in the foetus; and when this test will become generally available to pregnant mothers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Screening tests for spina bifida are already generally available to pregnant mothers.

Midwives (Grading)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of midwives still awaiting the results of their regrading claim; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the number of appeals to district health authorities is not collected centrally.

Tranquillisers

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health following the publication of the findings by the Association of Health Councils for England and Wales, if he will institute research to ascertain why tranquillisers are prescribed in connection with physical illness and as to whether guidelines should be issued on the management of different conditions which could avoid the use of benzodiazepines; and if he will take steps to institute a practice policy on repeat prescribing involving frequent monitoring and review.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We share the association's concern about inappropriate prescribing of benzodiazepines. It is a matter for clinical judgment whether a patient with a physical illness needs to be treated with a benzodiazepine drug either to treat the physical symptoms themselves or in addition to a drug or drugs to treat such symptoms. Doctors already have all the guidance they need about the use of benzodiazepines.

From April 1990 under our proposals in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" it will be a responsibility of family practitioner committees to encourage the development of repeat prescribing control systems in those practices that do not already have such a system.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess the findings by the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales published in "Health News Briefing—Benzodiazepines: A Suitable Case for Treatment", on numbers of people taking benzodiazepines and the reasons for the prescriptions being made.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The association's report acknowledges that the number of people taking benzodiazepines and all the reasons for prescriptions are unclear. In 1988 in Great Britain the number of prescriptions for these drugs fell by 9 per cent. from 25·5 million in 1987 to 23·2 million. This is a reduction of nearly 25 per cent. since 1979, when 30·9 million prescriptions were written.

I share the association's conclusion that benzodiazepine prescribing could be further reduced.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assess whether the findings by the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales suggest that inappropriate long-term prescribing of benzodiazepines comes to an end and as to whether benzodiazepone prescribing for (a) women and (b) the elderly constitutes a disproportionate percentage of all benzodiazepine prescribing; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not collected centrally about the numbers or types of patients prescribed drugs.

Advice has been issued to doctors by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Royal College of Physicians, psychiatrists and general practitioners and the British Medical Association. This advice, contained in the "British National Formulary", addressed appropriate use of benzodiazepines and strategies for reducing long-term prescribing, including prescribing for women and for the elderly. We support that advice.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidelines to hospitals to take account of the findings by the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales on benzodiazepine use.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The use of benzodiazepines in the treatment of a patient is a matter of clinical judgment, and therefore a matter for the clinician and the patient concerned to decide in any individual case. Some hospitals have already established their own drug formularies and we welcome this move.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will review the advice given to doctors in the Committee on Safety of Medicines bulletin "Current Problems, No. 21", January 1988, in the light of the findings of the Association of Community Health Councils of England and Wales.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The advice on benzodiazepines, dependence and withdrawal symptoms published in "Current Problems No. 21" remains valid and is summarised in the latest edition of the "British National Formulary" which the Department issues free to all doctors.

Dependent Adults

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give consideration to legislation to provide dependent adults with legal status, basic rights and social protection should their carer be unable to provide for them;

(2) what powers exist for the appropriate authorities to ensure that the rights and health of dependent adults are safeguarded in the event of their carer being unable to provide for them;

(3) what protection exists to safeguard the care of dependent adults in the event of their carers being unable to provide for them;

(4) what steps he plans to take to ensure that dependent adults' personal and medical welfare is properly protected by effective liaison between all interested professional parties in the event of their carer being unable to provide for them.

Mr. Freeman: Section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948 and sections 115 and 135 of the Mental Health Act 1983 empower local authorities to take action to safeguard the welfare of dependent people who are not receiving proper care. The exercise of these powers is a matter for the local authority concerned which will need to keep in touch with the appropriate health authority. When failures of care come to light we ask the authorities for reports which are carefully studied to see whether any action is called for.

Contraception

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on women and the Dalkon shield contraceptive device.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans for Government intervention in relation to this matter of litigation in the United States courts. For the initial claims deadline, the court itself directed, and approved, publicity by the Dalkon shield manufacturers. Further extensions of the deadline have received independent media publicity. It is for individual health authorities to decide whether they wish to direct their resources to specific activity on this matter. Our longstanding advice has been that they should be as helpful as possible with regard to the release of information.

Petrol

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authority vehicles run on (a) unleaded petrol, (b) leaded petrol, (c) diesel and (d) have three-way catalytic converters.

Mr. Freeman: The information in the form requested is not available centrally and the cost of obtaining it would be disproportionate. All regional and district health authorities in England are implementing a lead-free policy and are converting their vehicles at the earliest opportunity.

Energy Efficiency

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to issue guidelines to health authorities requiring them to carry out an energy audit for health authority buildings, identify priority areas for energy saving and segregate fuel bills for each building.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has issued comprehensive guidance, the national energy code (ENCODE), on all aspects of energy efficiency for health care buildings including the need for energy audit and prioritising energy saving measures. Recommendations for separate metering where applicable will be issued shortly.

We have no plans to require health authorities to undertake a formal energy audit.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require health authorities to establish an energy management unit and allocate responsibility for energy efficiency to one member of staff for each building.

Mr. Freeman: The comprehensive guidance, the national energy code (ENCODE), on energy efficiency published by the Department recommends a level of energy management and responsibility appropriate to the size of the estate and potential for energy savings.

Environmental Audit

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to require health authorities to carry out an environmental audit on (a) energy consumption, (b) purchasing policy, (c) waste arising and disposal methods, (d) pollution from health authority premises and (e) environmental training.

Mr. Freeman: Health authorities are expected to comply with all relevant statutory legislation. We have no plans to require them to carry out environmental audits on energy consumption, purchasing policy, waste arising and disposal methods, pollution from health authority premises or environmental training.

Environment Policy

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will allocate funds for implementing an environment policy for the National Health Service;

(2) if he will draw up an environment policy for the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health authorities to decide on their overall environmental policies and the allocation of associated resources.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will include as items for the regional review by Ministers (a) any adverse impact of health authority practices on the environment and (b) any adverse impact of environmental factors on public health within the region.

Mr. Freeman: This year public health issues were discussed with each region in preparation for regional reviews, which are now normally conducted by the chief executive of the management executive. Where there are serious concerns about these or other specific areas, they are raised at the review itself. Management action is taken in relation to the impact of health authority practices on the environment as they arise.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidance banning the use by health authorities of products proven to be environmentally damaging where an alternative is available.

Mr. Freeman: No. We consider that, as responsible public bodies, health authorities should be able to take account of all relevant factors, including environmental factors and statutory requirements, in securing best value for money in their purchasing policies.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities which have regular planning and consultative meetings with local authority environmental health officers; and what exchange of information there is between them.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about health authorities as (a) consumers, (b) waste producers and (c) polluters.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health authorities to ensure that they perform their duties effectively, efficiently and responsibly with due regard to the effects on the environment.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will require health authorities to monitor progress on their environment policies and practice and report to him.

Mr. Freeman: The Department already monitors a number of key aspects of health authorities' environmental policies and practices and will continue to do so.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there is an environmental component in the training and qualification of (a) nurses, (b) doctors, (c) radiographers, (d) hospital administrators and (e) health visitors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Nurses and health visitors: The standard and content of training for nurses and health visitors is determined by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

(b) Doctors: The General Medical Council recommend the curriculum for undergraduate medical students.

(c) Radiographers: The Council for the Professions Supplementary to Medicine through its Radiography Board, is responsible for regulating the professional education of radiographers.

(d) Hospital Administrators: Health authorities and the National Health Service Training Authority are responsible for the standard and content of training for hospital administrators.

Air Pollution

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities premises which have boilers and incinerators giving rise to air pollution problems.

Mr. Freeman: Information on health authority premises where boiler and incinerator are known to give rise to air pollution problems is not available centrally but all installations are expected to comply with current legislation.

Waste Management

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there is a staff member specifically responsible for waste management in each health authority.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available centrally. It is for health authorities to determine responsibilities for waste management. As far as clinical waste is concerned, the Department has issued guidance to health authorities which recommends that it should be the responsibility of a designated officer within each authority.

Lead Piping

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of health authority buildings have lead piping.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available on the extent to which lead piping is installed within health care buildings. All current guidance recommends the use of copper piping.

Recycling

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities provide collection facilities for (a) glass, (b) paper and (c) cans for recycling.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of National Health Service stationery is (a) 100 per cent. recycled and (b) not recycled.

Mr. Freeman: National contracts for copy paper and listing paper for computer use do make provision for the use of recycled paper. No figures are yet available to show the percentage of recycled paper used. However, it is unlikely that the use of 100 per cent. recycled stationery will be significant. Large quantities of chemicals are necessary to achieve a desirable standard of whiteness in the paper. This calls into question the level of benefit to the environment, and can involve higher costs of production than ordinary paper.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has issued guidance to health authorities requiring them to phase out the use of chlorofluorocarbons as sterilant gases.

Mr. Freeman: Regional supplies directors were advised at a meeting of the national procurement group in September 1988 that the small-scale use of chlorofluorocarbons in sterilisers as a carrier gas for ethylene oxide should be avoided, if possible, since pure ethylene oxide and ethylene oxide/carbondioxide mixtures were available as satisfactory alternatives.

Nurses

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many enrolled nurses have been turned away from conversion to first-level nursing places in the last year;

(2) what is the current average waiting list for an enrolled nurse conversion course.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many practising enrolled nurses there are in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally. Information provided by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting about the numbers in the United Kingdom who have paid the periodic fee and were therefore on the effective register shows that on 31 March 1989 there were 158,500 people who held an enrolled nurse qualification.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by health district (a) the current nursing staff establishment, (b) the number in post at the latest available date and (c) the number who had left the National Health Service in the preceding year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 3 November 1989]: Information on the number of nursing and midwifery staff employed in each district health authority in England at 30 September 1988 is given in the table.

We do not collect information on nursing staff establishments centrally. Reliable information on the numbers leaving the National Health Service last year is not yet available.

Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his latest meetings with doctors and dentists.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have frequent formal and informal meetings with doctors and dentists, mostly very amicable, constructive and supportive of our objectives. I met the British Dental Association on 27 September when I reached full agreement with it on the terms of its new contract. I met the British Medical Association on 18 October to discuss the implementation of our proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients" and had a friendly and constructive discussion.

Residential Care

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the Government's initiative announced in February for improving life for people in residential homes; whether he proposes to take any further action on the recommendations of the committee on residential care chaired by Lady Wagner; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In February we announced our intention to launch a development programme aimed at improving life for people in residential homes, based on recommendations of the committee chaired by Lady Wagner.

We have appointed five agencies to carry forward important recommendations from the committee's report "Residential Care: A Positive Choice". Work has now begun and will continue for the next three years at a total cost of around £2·2 million. This initiative aims at better training for staff in homes, better information for the public in making choices, effective, accessible and widely known arrangements for making suggestions and complaints, a closer relationship between homes and their local communities and better management of homes. Cost-effective ways of achieving these objectives will be explored through a wide range of development projects. The results of these activities will be made widely and regularly available to national and local agencies concerned and will be independently assessed.

The thrust of many of the committee's recommendations, for example on the organisation and funding of community care, has been taken into account in the wider context of community care development and will be reflected in the forthcoming White Paper.

The committee's recommendations on setting and maintaining standards have been incorporated in our proposals to achieve even-handedness in inspection of residential care homes, as between independent and local authority homes, through the setting up of inspection units in social services departments at arms length from the management of local authorities' own homes. Issues concerning children and young people, on which the Wagner committee made recommendations, are covered in the Children Bill, including education and health needs of children in care, keeping siblings together wherever practicable and appropriate, the needs of ethnic minority groups and accommodation for young people leaving care. And we are considering issuing guidance on encouraging and enabling people in residential care homes to manage their own finances where they are capable of doing so.

The Wagner committee has done a valuable service in pointing the way to better standards. The Government are playing their part in responding to its report. We also look to local authorities and private and voluntary agencies, to whom much of the report was primarily addressed, to take those messages to heart and act on them.

The selected agencies and their fields of activity are as follows:

Basic training programmes for care staff: the National Institute for Social Work;

Ways of increasing contacts between homes and their local communities and a wider role for volunteers: the Social Care Association (Education);

Methods of self-assessment and performance evaluation by managers: the Polytechnic of North London;

Ways of providing information to help people in choosing a home or alternative to residential care: the Policy Studies Institute.

The department of government, Brunel university will co-ordinate this activity, provide an information service and publish an independent assessment of the programmes.

In addition the Department's social services inspectorate will develop procedures for dealing with suggestions and complaints.

Drug Deaths

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths per year in the United Kingdom are attributable to the use of hard drugs.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 3 November 1989]: The exact information requested is not available. The table shows the number of deaths attributable to certain drugs in the United Kingdom 1986-88.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Guidance

8. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what comments he has received on his proposal to drop the special prescription in favour of development from the draft PPG3 planning guidance note.

Mr. Howard: None so far, although a number of informal responses indicate a generally favourable reaction to our draft guidance.

Toxic Waste

17. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to deal with the problems of disposing of toxic wastes.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am preparing legislation, to be introduced at the earliest opportunity, to strengthen the law on waste disposal. This will include a duty of care on waste producers and improved controls over the disposal or treatment of waste. I shall also be issuing a consultation paper on the review of the special waste regulations shortly.

Sewage Works

19. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to introduce legislation to provide local authorities with powers to abate odour nuisance from sewage treatment works.

Mr. Trippier: We are currently considering the possibility of doing so.

European Community Water Directives

20. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last discussed United Kingdom compliance with European Community water directives with the Community environment commissioner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I discussed United Kingdom compliance with the drinking water directive with Commissioner Ripa when I attended the meeting of the Environment Council in Brussels in September.

76. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress towards reaching agreement with the Commission of the European Communities on plans for the implementation of the drinking water directive, 80/778/EEC, and the bathing water directive, 76/160/EEC.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 30 October to my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown), Official Report, columns 261-62.

42. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date the United Kingdom will meet the requirements of European Council directives on water quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: In the majority of cases the United Kingdom already meets the requirements of the various European Community directives concerning water quality. For the remainder of cases measures are in hand to achieve these, notably in the case of the directives on the quality of drinking water and bathing waters, where timetabled improvement programmes have been submitted to the Commission of the European Communities.

Dioxins

21. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what standards there are for the control of the emissions of dioxins in processes of burning or incineration.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is impractical at present to set specific limits for emissions of dioxins, as the monitoring and analysis of these compounds is complex, slow and expensive. Emissions of dioxins are therefore controlled in the United Kingdom, as in the European directives on municipal waste incineration plants, through effective control of combustion conditions and the fitting and use of suitable abatement equipment.

Home Ownership

22. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has plans for additional assistance to people seeking to become home owners.

34. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to help people into home ownership.

70. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any new proposals to assist first-time home owners.

Mr. Howard: The Government will continue with the policies which have enabled there to be 3½ million more home owners today than in 1979.

69. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the level of home ownership in the south-west of England.

Mr. Chope: Estimates of the number and percentage of dwellings in owner-occupation in the South West region are given in table 9.4 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1978-1988", a copy of which is available in the Library.

South Africa (Sporting Links)

23. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent steps he has taken to discourage sporting links with South Africa.

Mr. Moynihan: The sixth conference of European Ministers responsible for sport which I attended in Reykjavik from 30 May to 1 June 1989 agreed a resolution concerning apartheid in sport and discouraging sporting contact with South Africa. The resolution has been adopted by the Committee of Ministers and I have asked the Sports Council to circulate a copy of it to the governing bodies of sport.

In August I wrote to the chairman of the Test and County Cricket Board and the president of the Rugby Football Union about the proposed tours to South Africa restating the Government's commitment to the Gleneagles agreement and our policy of seeking to discourage sporting contact with South Africa. I asked for copies of my letters to be passed on to individual players who had accepted invitations to visit South Africa.

81. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is Her Majesty's Government's current policy on sporting links with South Africa.

Mr. Moynihan: Her Majesty's Government remain fully committed to the Commonwealth statement on apartheid in sport—the Gleneagles agreement.

Water Industry (Investment)

24. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total estimated cost of the investment programme in the water industry over the next 10 years.

Mr. Moynihan: The estimated expenditure by the English water plcs, required by the programmes of which account was taken by the Secretary of State in setting the initial level of K, is £22·8 billion in prices prevailing at November 1989.

Rural Housing

25. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any measures were announced during the summer adjournment to ensure that low-cost rural housing association property remains available for local housing needs after the first occupants move on.

Mr. Howard: The Housing Corporation issued a consultation paper on 10 October on the way in which the repurchase scheme for shared ownership properties in rural areas would work.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress being made in providing affordable housing in rural areas to fulfil local needs.

Mr. Chope: The Government's policy on rural housing was set out in a statement of 5 July 1988, and in statements of 3 and 7 February this year, copies of which are in the Library. It will take some time for this initiative to have its full effect, but I am sure that in due course it will make a significant impact on availability of housing in rural areas.

Green Belt

26. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on his policy regarding planning applications for development within green belt areas.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend continues to be fully committed to upholding green belt policy as set out in planning policy guidance note 2.

57. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it remains Government policy that land vested in local authorities under the Green Belt (London and Home Counties) Act 1938 including land occupied by tenanted properties will be treated as inalienable.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope) gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Sir R. Boyson) on 24 July at column 469. The Government remain committed to ensuring that all green belt land, including land held under the 1938 Act, continues to fulfil green belt objectives.

Domestic Waste

28. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to enable him to reach his target of a substantial increase in recycled domestic waste by the year 2000.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A substantial increase in the amount of domestic waste recycled can be achieved only by a combination of measures. First, by manufacturers designing recyclability into their products, cutting down on the amount of unnecessary packaging and pricing recycled products competitively. Secondly, by consumers knowing about and choosing recycled products and making use of recycling facilities provided by local authorities, retailers and voluntary groups. Thirdly, by local authorities and retailers substantially increasing their commitment to providing recycling facilities so that the majority come up to the standard of the best. Fourthly, by Government creating the right waste management framework for an increase in recycling through measures which we intend to bring forward in the Environmental Protection Bill and through our support for major experiments such as Recycling City in Sheffield, intended to identify and apply best practice in recycling techniques.

County Hall, London

31. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the future of the County hall, London SE1.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The future of County hall is in part the subject of an appeal to the House of Lords against a judgment of the Court of Appeal given on 20 July, and in part the subject of planning applications considered at a public inquiry which closed on 6 November.

Acid House Parties

32. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to take further measures to eliminate so-called acid house parties.

48. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he proposes to take to tackle the noise problems associated with acid house parties.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Department and the Home Office are currently consulting local authorities and the police about the possible need to extend their powers to prevent or control acid house or similar parties. We will consider further action in the light of that consultation.

Environmentally Friendly Products

35. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to regulate the labelling of ecologically friendly products.

62. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he intends to provide to consumers who wish to purchase products which do not damage the environment.

Mr. Trippier: We have announced our support for the establishment of an EC-wide scheme of eco-labelling in a discussion paper which I issued in August jointly with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I am pleased to say that the Environment Council on 19 September asked the Commission to bring forward proposals as soon as possible.

Association of County Councils

36. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the Association of County Councils; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend last met the Association of County Councils and other local authority associations on 17 October to discuss the Government's proposals for the community charge transitional relief scheme.

Dutch Minister for Sport

37. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Minister for Sport next expects to meet his equivalent from the Dutch Government; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no immediate plans to meet the new Dutch State Secretary for Welfare, Health and Cultural Affairs, who has responsibility for sport. Officials from his Department and mine are members of the Council of Europe standing committee on the European convention on spectator violence. The committee is meeting today.

Community Care

38. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what help from the transitional relief scheme will be available to those people discharged from residential care into the community after 1 April 1990.

Mr. Chope: It is the Government's intention that the scheme for transitional relief should operate under rules that are as simple as possible so as to produce practicable arrangements which will enable authorities to issue community charge bills next April which reflect both transitional relief and rebates. As with other schemes it will be necessary to establish a qualification date for entitlement. We have proposed that in order for a person to qualify for relief at an address that person should be entered in the charging authority's community charges register for 31 March 1990 as living at that address.

Rents

40. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has agreed any definition of an affordable rent or a market rent.

Mr. Chope: Section 14 of the Housing Act 1988 sets out how a rent assessment committee should determine a market rent.

Sports Council

41. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Sports Council; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I will next meet the chairman of the Sports Council on 16 November when we will discuss current issues in sport.

Royal Parks

43. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review encroachment fees charged by his Department in relation to the fringes of royal parks.

Mr. Trippier: Encroachment licences are essential to control developments on the boundaries of the royal parks. Encroachment fees are normally reviewed every five years but in some cases there has been a considerably longer period without review. There is an element of catching-up in some of the increases.

Planning Appeals

44. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of planning appeals have been allowed during the latest 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Moynihan: In the 12 months to 31 August 1989, 35·4 per cent. of planning appeals were allowed.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many local authority planning appeals referred to him were agreed by him in 1979, 1984 and 1989;

(2) how many local authority planning appeals referred to him were subject to a change in the inspector recommendation in 1979, 1984 and 1989;

(3) what was the number of appeals against planning permissions to local authorities which were referred to him for 1979, 1984 and 1989.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is given in the table.

	Planning appeals				Secretary of State's decision contrary to inspector's recommendation
Year	Received	Decided	Allowed
			Number	Percentage

Planning Applications

46. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding the process for determining planning applications.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend receives a number of representations about the operation of the development control system. In particular, more than 400 individuals and organisations have responded to a consultation paper entitled "Efficient Planning" which we issued on 28 July.

Low-cost Housing

45. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve the supply of low-cost housing for rent and shared ownership.

54. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress his Department is making in its policy of increasing the supply of affordable housing.

61. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase the supply of affordable housing.

Mr. Chope: We have planned for an increase of more than 60 per cent. between 1989-90 and 1991-92 in public support through the Housing Corporation to housing associations, which are now the main providers of new subsidised housing; associations' output will increase further as a result of their enhanced capacitity to use private finance. Deregulation of the private rented sector will stimulate new investment in housing to rent. We have also announced a series of measures to promote supply of affordable housing for rent and sale, including shared ownership sale, in rural areas. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement will set out the Government's revised plans for expenditure on subsidised housing rolled forward to 1992-93.

Water Pollution

47. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress towards the removal of pollution from inland coastal waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the investment plans that I have announced for improvements to sewage treatment works Official Report, 7 December 1988, cols. 199-200 and to bathing waters, Official Report, 20 October 1989, cols. 261-2. These programmes are the biggest of their kind, and will bring about substantial improvements to the quality of our estuarial and coastal waters.

Councillors' Allowances

49. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the letter dated 14 July from the chairman of the three local authority associations about members' allowances.

Mr. Chope: The Government have introduced amendments in another place to the Local Government and Housing Bill which will give power to implement a new system of councillors' allowance on the lines supported by the chairmen of the three local authority associations concerned.

Nitrates

50. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce the level of nitrates in public water supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Water undertakers have prepared firm programmes to achieve compliance as quickly as practicable with the nitrate standard of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 which is the same value as that set by the EC drinking water directive. Some water undertakers are already blending water that has a high nitrate concentration with water that has a low nitrate concentration in order to meet the standard. Investigation is also proceeding of treatment processes, such as ion exchange and biological de-nitrification. In addition, agricultural measures to prevent pollution will be introduced under a pilot scheme in nitrate sensitive areas.

Waste Recycling

51. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to legislate on waste recycling.

Mr. Trippier: We hope to bring forward provisions to promote recycling in the Environmental Protection Bill.

School Sport

52. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies his Department has to encourage sport for schoolchildren outside school hours.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government are committed to promoting participation in sport for schoolchildren both in and out of school hours.

The Sports Council's initiatives aimed at increasing young people's participation in sport, include the "Ever thought of Sport?" and 'What's your Sport?" campaigns. The Government are currently considering the recommendations of the School Sport Forum; our response will be published shortly.

Stop Notices

53. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to introduce changes to planning laws relating to stop notices.

Mr. Moynihan: As soon as parliamentary time permits.

Environmental Groups

55. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list any official engagements he has between the present time and the end of November with environmental groups.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing).

Sports and Recreation Facilities

56. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend compulsory competitive tendering to the management of local authority sports and recreation facilities.

Mr. Moynihan: The draft order requiring competition in the management of local authority sports and leisure facilities was laid before Parliament on 25 October. Subject to parliamentary approval, implementation in England will take place in three stages between 1 January 1992 and 1 January 1993.

Unleaded Petrol

58. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest figure he has for unleaded petrol sales.

67. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of petrol sold in the United Kingdom is unleaded.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot).

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any vehicles belonging to or used by his Department run on leaded petrol.

Mr. Chope: The exact answer can be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. Wherever possible all vehicles that can be run on unleaded fuel do so. Those vehicles which can run only on leaded fuels are being replaced.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any Government ministerial cars run on leaded petrol.

Mr. Chope: Most ministerial allocated cars run on unleaded petrol. It is our intention to move the rest of the Government car fleet to unleaded petrol as the vehicles fall due for replacement.

Housing Report

59. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the Association of District Councils report, "A Time to Take Stock".

Mr. Chope: The report makes a useful contribution to the discussions we shall be having about the details of the new local authority capital finance system and the new renovation grant system that remain to be settled. We shall be discussing points raised in their report with the Association of District Councils and other local authority associations when the Housing Consultative Council meets at the end of this month.

Motor Fuel

60. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the impact of different fuel brands and of petrol, lead-free petrol and diesel, respectively, on the environment.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The composition of motor fuels sold in the United Kingdom is controlled and no assessment is made of the environmental effects of different brands. The reduction in lead content of petrol in 1986 and the growth in sales of unleaded petrol have more than halved the concentration of lead in the air. However, it is now estimated that some 80 per cent. of lead in air still comes from petrol vehicle emissions. Diesel fuel has no lead added to it.

The impacts on the environment of other materials emitted from vehicles are given in the report of the Department's terrestrial effects review group, acid rain review group, and building effects review group. The proportions of total emissions of these materials which come from diesel and petrol vehicles are given in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics. Copies of review group reports and the digest are in the Library of the House.

Housing (Hackney)

63. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to visit the London borough of Hackney to discuss housing finance.

Mr. Chope: No, but the Department has regular contacts with the borough and has recently held a meeting with the council in the current housing investment programme round.

Planning Guidance

64. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations on the draft PPG3 planning guidance note.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has not so far received many formal responses to our draft planning policy guidance note, "Housing". He has, however, received a number of informal responses which indicate a generally favourable reaction to the new draft guidance.

Comments may be made on the draft guidance until 5 January 1990.

Planet Protection Fund

65. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he supports the creation of a planet protection fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We do not need new international institutions to tackle the environmental problems facing the world today. Instead, we support the use of the existing bilateral and multilateral channels for environmental assistance, adapting or improving those channels as necessary. In her statement in the House on 26 October my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister drew attention to the support expressed in the Langkawi declaration on the environment for existing international environmental organisations, especially the United Nations environment programme. We consider that any additional resources should not go towards creating new bureaucracies but directly to measures to protect and improve the environment.

Council Tenants

68. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to take any action to ensure that tenants have the right to receive information on their council's effectiveness in housing policy.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 1 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo).

Homelessness

72. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department plans to offer to local authorities which are obliged to house people made homeless as a result of mortgage arrears.

Mr. Chope: We will announce the conclusions of our review of the homelessness legislation very shortly.

Housing Repairs

73. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has made any estimate of the total amount needed to tackle housing disrepair in England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: The most recent English house condition survey estimated that the average cost of repair of all dwellings was, in 1986, £950 which sums to £17·9 billion for the housing stock in England as a whole. Against this should be set the same survey's estimate of the annual value of work undertaken on the repair and improvement of the stock which was, in 1986, £17·3 billion. Figures relating to Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Estate Action

75. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has since his appointment visited any housing projects funded by Estate Action.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has not done so but he hopes to do so in future. My hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning visited Holmewood estate, Bradford, at the end of September and last week I visited Marlborough Road estate in Derby where Estate Action funding has totalled more than £2·1 million last year and this.

Ivory

77. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to curtail the global trade in ivory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Effective action to curtail world trade in ivory requires concerted international co-operation, principally through the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Fauna and Flora (CITES). We strongly supported the ban on commercial trade in African elephant ivory at the recent CITES conference. We were also successful in obtaining agreement to our resolution urging all parties to the convention to implement these more stringent controls immediately. The Indian elephant is already subject to a similar prohibition.

Litter

78. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to enable local authorities to impose fixed penalties for the dropping of litter.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that our proposals for legislation to tackle the problem of litter, published on 20 July, include a provision which will allow all district and borough councils to operate a fixed penalty scheme for littering.

Lower Grange Estate, Bradford

80. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to approve grants enabling new homes for rent and for sale to be built on the Lower Grange estate in Bradford, and some existing homes to be modernised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: An application for city grant in respect of 280 houses to be built for sale and 28 flats to be refurbished for sale was received on 6 October. It is being examined and my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities hopes to issue a decision as quickly as possible.

My Department has not yet received a detailed application for estate action support in respect of the houses which the city of Bradford metropolitan council intend to refurbish. The Housing Corporation has also not yet received a detailed appplication for housing association grant for the houses proposed to be built for rent by North British Housing Association. Both applications, when received, will also be dealt with as quickly as possible.

Northumbrian Water Authority

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give the capital spending of the Northumbrian water authority for each year since 1983 and the total spending planned over the next five years.

Mr. Howard: Northumbrian Water Group plc estimates that expenditure required in 1990-95 by the investment programme which was taken into account in setting K will amount to £540 million at November 1989 prices. Northumbrian water authority's capital expenditure since 1983, taken from the authority's annual report and accounts and repriced, was as follows:—

Northumbrian Capital Expenditure 1982-83 to 1988-89

£ million (1988-89 prices)

	DOE services	Land drainage
1982-83	49·1	0·2
1983-84	41·9	0·2
1984-85	34·3	0·3
1985-86	47·2	0·2
1986-87	42·8	0·3
1987-88	44·1	0·2
1988-89	41·2	0·2

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department plays its part in testing those procedures in which we have an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the details requested.

English Heritage

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the total per head of the population of England that was spent by English Heritage in each of the past three years.

Mr. Trippier: On the basis of OPCS mid-year population estimates and English Heritage gross expenditure, the spend per head for the financial years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89 was £1·42, £1·50, and £1·65 respectively.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by individual water company the amounts proposed for (a) industry debt written off and (b) the injection of new Government capital.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 26 October 1989 to my hon. Friend for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) [Official Report, col. 555].

Seaforth Nature Reserve

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the reasons why the Seaforth nature reserve is being demolished; how many appeals has he received in favour of the reserve; and how many against.

Mr. Trippier: I have received 23 representations supporting the reserve, but I understand that Sefton MBC, the local planning authority, proposes to meet the Merseyside Docks and Harbour Company—the land owners—to discuss the issues of present concern at Seaforth. It is too soon to tell what the future of the reserve will be.

Radioactive Discharges

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has monitored the effect of radioactive discharges from the Health Service to air and water.

Mr. Trippier: Radioactive waste may be disposed of only if an authorisation has been issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP). Authorisations are issued only after careful assessment of the environmental impact of the proposed disposals. They impose strict conditions and activity limits, which are designed to ensure that any dose to the general public is well below the maximum permissible as recommended by the International Commission on Radiological Protection. The premises concerned are subject to inspection to ensure compliance with the terms of authorisations.

Monuments (Policy Review)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the policy review on the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments—England, Wales and Scotland that was undertaken by Peat, Marwick and McClintock; and when he expects to act on the report's recommendations.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 7 November 1989]: The consultant's review was commissioned as part of a policy review of the three commissions undertaken jointly by the Department, CADW Welsh Historic Monuments and the Scottish Development Department. We announced our decisions on the main points of principle raised in the PMM report's recommendations relating to the English Commission on 20 February at columns 496-97. There remain further points of detail which affect all three commissions. We aim to conclude this further work by the end of the year.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been affected by the use of local authorities' powers to restrict the amount of rent payable through housing benefit such that only part of the eligible rent is assessed for benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply. This information is not held centrally.

Local Government Finance

18. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to prevent the circulation by councils to community charge payers of misleading information on (a) on the level of charge and (b) the sums by which it is calculated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The code of practice issued under the Local Government Act 1986 already requires publicity issued by local authorities to be accurate and balanced. In addition I propose to lay regulations before the House under the Local Government Finance Act 1988 prescribing the precise form of bills to be sent to charge payers next year.

79. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the proposed system for transitional relief for the poll tax.

Mr. Chope: The Government have issued two proposals papers on 11 October and 20 October, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Discussions are now taking place with the local authority associations following which a further consolidated paper will be issued. The paper will set out the detailed arrangements for the operation of the scheme.

66. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning his recent statement relating to the community charge.

74. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning his recent announcement relating to the community charge.

Mr. Chope: I have received representations from individual local authorities and other bodies. The Department has also held a number of discussions with the local authority associations.

39. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on all those degenerative mental conditions which can now be assessed for poll tax exemption.

Mr. Chope: The revised exemption for people who are severely mentally impaired will not refer to specific conditions. Any person who is entitled to a qualifying benefit—which will now include attendance allowance and constant attendance allowance—and who has a certificate from a registered medical practitioner stating that his intelligence and social functioning are severely impaired, whatever the cause, will be exempt from the community charge.

33. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the likely administrative costs of the poll tax transitional relief scheme in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 18 October at column 155.

29. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the causes for the relative levels of base community charge in areas of greater social needs as against areas without such problems.

Mr. David Hunt: The proposals for Standard Spending Assessments which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 6 November take account of substantial research which has been discussed with the local authority associations over the last year.

30. Mr. Summerg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what costings have been undertaken by his Department as to the financial and manpower implications of implementing a two-tier system of local government finance, comprising a local income tax and a property tax.

Mr. David Hunt: A two-tier system of local government finance could, we estimate, cost up to twice as much to administer as the community charge.

27. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any intention to revise the indicators used in the calculation of revenue support grant in those local authorities whose amount of grant is adversely affected by the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Chris Patten: I announced my proposals for the calculation of revenue support grant in my statement on 6 November.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 9 November 1989

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Rudolf Hess

Mr. Morg[illegible] To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 7 November to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West, if he will place in the Library a copy of the Jones report on the circumstances of the death of Rudolf Hess.

The Attorney-General: No. The document which the hon. Member refers to as the Jones report is a report submitted by the Metropolitan police to the Director of Public Prosecutions setting out the result of a police investigation into an alleged criminal offence. Such reports are confidential.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information his Department has on the length of time taken to respond to letters from Members.

Mr. Ridley: The majority of letters from hon. Members should receive a substantive reply within three weeks. Exceptionally, replies to some letters about matters receiving considerable public attention at the time of writing may be delayed until a substantive reply can be sent.

European Trade Mark

Mr. Iain Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on current negotiations on the establishment of a common European trade mark and the location of the proposed European trade mark office.

Mr. Forth: There has been no progress on either issue in recent months. Earlier this year the European Community devoted its efforts to negotiations with other countries on the international registration of marks. These were successfully concluded at a diplomatic conference in June. Indications are that negotiations on the European Community trade mark system will resume next year.

Chocolate Eggs (Safety)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in the light of the death of Jennifer Ashton aged three on 6 November, he will consider the safety aspects of Kinder chocolate eggs and their contents; and if he will urge their withdrawal from sale pending any recommendations for their improved safety.

Mr. Forth: I was saddened to learn of the death of baby Jennifer Ashton. My Department is seeking full information on all the circumstances and this will of course include the findings of the coroner's inquest which is to be held on 10 November. When all the facts are available I will give the matter my urgent attention. I hope that the considerable media attention which this tragic accident has attracted will alert parents to the dangers which can be associated with small toys and their parts.

Common Air Interface

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on the common air interface; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The common air interface has been issued by my Department as a standard, with the reference MPT 1375. It has been notified as a United Kingdom national standard to the European Commission under the procedure laid down in directive 83/189/EEC. My Department is currently preparing to issue an accompanying test specification schedule. A number of other European countries are considering adopting this standard.

CT2

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any proposals to specify technical standards for CT2 following the grant of licences to four consortia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The technical standards for CT2 have for the most part already been specified. Equipment has to satisfy the requirements of the standards BS6833 and MPT 1334. It is intended that by the end of next year the Telepoint operators will be obliged by conditions of their licences to install the common air interface in their base stations. Equipment using this interface will have to satisfy the standard MPT1375. A test specification schedule to this standard is in preparation. At some future time, after consulting the industry and taking advice from the Director General of Telecommunications, consideration will be given to the general adoption of the common air interface for Telepoint equipment. It is not expected that the adoption of this interface will be mandatory for CT2 equipment which is not capable of being used for Telepoint.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy at the next European Council of Industry Ministers on 14 November in Brussels, to introduce initiatives on (a) recycling of materials, including paper, packaging, metals and chemicals, (b) environmental protection for industrial plants, in regard to potential trans-frontier pollution and (c) energy policies in industry to reduce carbon dioxide and chlorofluorocarbon release to help mitigate the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Forth: Environmental issues such as those cited by the hon. Gentleman have important implications for business and it may be expected that these will in due course be considered by the Council of Industry Ministers. However, there are no plans to raise them at the meeting on 14 November.

The agenda for Council of Ministers meetings is determined by the presidency which is currently held by France.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has been invited to participate in the seminar on waste incineration and the environment, to be held at the Institution of Mechanical Engineers in London on 13 December.

Mr. Forth: Two members of the pollution abatement division of Warren Spring laboratory will be attending this conference.

ENVIRONMENT

Wheelchairs

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of support provided to local authorities through the rate support grant for the supply of wheelchairs.

Mr. Chope: The Disablement Services Authority which is a centrally funded special health authority provides wheelchairs free to all those with a clinical need, generally on the recommendation of a general practitioner, occupational therapist or physiotherapist. There is therefore no need for support to local authorities through rate support grant.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what protection there will be for private sector tenants who at the moment pay contractual rental inclusive of rates upon the introduction of the community charge; and how tenants will be protected where landlords do not wish to settle on the basis of individual contracts.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) on 9 May at column 386. We are preparing an explanatory booklet for tenants about rent and rates, and reference to this will be included in the prescribed notes attached to community charge bills.

Mobility Back-up

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make provision for a statutory back-up to mobility across all tenures and providers.

Mr. Chope: I have received the report of the mobility working party and will make an announcement soon.

Aerials

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish his consultative document on aerials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We hope to be able to issue a consultation paper on planning controls over satellite television antennas and other telecommunications development within the next two or three months.

Environmental Policies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the reasons for his decision not to meet representatives from Greenpeace (United Kingdom) to discuss environmental policies and environmental protection.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has made no such decision. He expects to meet representatives of Greenpeace in the next few weeks.

Radioactive Waste Disposal

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in establishing an agency responsible for the final disposal of high-level radioactive waste.

Mr. Trippier: It is too early to consider whether an agency will be required to be responsible for the final disposal of heat generating or high level radioactive waste. This waste is being stored at British Nuclear Fuels' site at Sellafield for at least 50 years to enable a reduction in the heat and radioactivity to take place before disposal.

Sunderland Enterprise Zone

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has as to the number of full-time equivalent jobs that will arise within (a) the Hylton colliery area and (b) the Southwick shipyard area of the Sunderland enterprise zone by the end of each year from 1990 to 1994, inclusive, listing the estimated numbers separately for each of the areas.

Mr. Moynihan: It is estimated that, when fully developed, these and the other parts of the proposed Sunderland enterprise zone may together give rise to some 3,000 to 4,000 jobs. It is not practicable to break this down further, as the timing and location will depend inter alia on the progress of reclamation and development and the decisions of individual firms.

Rutland Water

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information is available to the National Rivers Authority about (a) the specific extent of the toxicity of the blue-green algae at Rutland Water in early September; and whether that toxic level was a normal seasonal phenomenon and (b) whether any animals died as a result of toxic blue-green algae poisoning at any other reservoirs under the scrutiny of the National Rivers Authority during the period in question;

(2) whether he will place in the Library and make available to Rutland district council and Leicestershire country council (a) the scientific findings relating to the death of animals at Rutland Water carried out by the National Rivers Authority, (b) the similar investigations and reports by Dundee university on behalf of Anglian Water and (c) information made available to the National Rivers Authority as a result of post-mortems by veterinary surgeons following the death of dogs and sheep.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 6 November 1989]: I understand that the NRA has results of mammalian toxicity tests performed in September which showed the blue-green algae in Rutland Water to be highly toxic. It is not possible to determie whether or not the level of toxicity at Rutland Water was a normal seasonal phenomenon, although blooms of blue-green algae in later summer are a common occurrence in many waters of the United Kingdom. Apart from Rutland Water, the NRA has no knowledge of animal deaths elsewhere which can be attributed to toxic blue-green algae.

Data from monitoring the algae at Rutland Water have been made available to the appropriate local authority environmental health officers and this, together with the results of the toxicological work commissioned from Dundee university, is also included on the public register maintained by the NRA. Studies and post mortems on animal deaths at Rutland Water connected with the algae have been carried out by the veterinary service of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I understand that final results are not yet available.

TRANSPORT

M20 (Improvements)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if the proposed improvements to the M20 between junctions 5 and 8 will be completed before the opening of the Channel tunnel;

(2) what is the estimated completion date for the improvement of the M20 between junctions 5 and 8;

(3) when he expects to let the contracts for improvement of the M20 between junctions 5 and 8.

Mr. Atkins: The timing of contract letting will depend on the outcome of the statutory procedures, but subject to that it is our aim to complete the improvement before the Channel tunnel opens.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest available traffic flow figures on each link of the M20 motorway from junction 5 to junction 8.

Mr. Atkins: The figures based on 24-hour annual average daily two-way traffic flows in 1987 are as follows:

	Numbers
Between junctions 5 and 6	61,000
Between junctions 6 and 7	46,000
Between junctions 7 and 8	24,000

Intermodal Transport

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department had any representation at, or presented any papers to, the conference on intermodal transport and the single European market in Paris on 9 and 10 November.

Mr. Atkins: No.

Humber Bridge

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate what would be the impact on local poll tax payers if the whole of the outstanding debt on the Humber bridge was carried by people (a) within the city of Hull boundary and (b) within the county of Humberside boundary.

Mr. Atkins: Current discussion with the Humber Bridge Board will lead to the production of estimates of the effect of the recent toll increase on their debts. Although the Humber bridge legislation provides that deficiencies in toll revenue should be met by local taxpayers none of the estimates to be made will assume that the whole debt is met by them. In agreeing to treat the Humber bridge as a special case for assistance, the Government have accepted that they will have a part to play.

Traffic Information Broadcasts

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department received about the closing of the north and southbound carriageways of the A1 near Welwyn Garden City on Friday 27 October, due to an accident; when the BBC were informed; and what information he has on the timing of broadcasts by the BBC to warn motorists of the traffic chaos.

Mr. Atkins: The Department's agent, Hertfordshire county council, was notified of this incident by the police as soon as it was evident that its assistance would be required.

The BBC learnt of the accident from Hertfordshire police at 14.35 and broadcast the first bulletin on Radios 1 and 2 during the next 10 to 15 minutes. This was updated regularly throughout the afternoon.

Fare Increases (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he received from London Regional Transport for proposed percentage fare increases in 1990; what increases he agreed to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has discussions with LRT covering the whole range of LRT finances, as part of the annual public expenditure survey. Final decisions on fares rest with the LRT board.

Rat-running

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safeguards are being considered to prevent rat running arising from the introduction of the autoguide system in London.

Mr. Atkins: The Road Traffic (Driver Licensing and Information Systems) Act 1989 gives the Secretary of State power, in licensing driver information systems, to impose conditions about the roads on which systems can direct traffic. The need for such conditions in relation to a commercial Autoguide scheme will be considered in the light of the results of the proposed London pilot scheme. The local authority associations and the police will be closely involved in monitoring such a scheme.

Drowning Incident

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek the publication of the taped telephone and radio calls between callers to the Barnstaple 999 centre, Her Majesty's Coastguard and the emergency services relating to the accidental drowning of Mark Woodward on 16 August.

Mr. McLoughlin: Her Majesty's Coastguard tapes relating to this incident were kept and were available at the coroner's inquest. Following the inquest they were cleaned and put back into service. I understand that British Telecom plc has a similar arrangement for the recording of 999 calls. Any request for access to BT tapes should be made directly to BT.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tapajos Project

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy considerations lie behind British support for the Tapajos project.

Mrs. Chalker: We have not agreed to provide support to this project from the aid programme, but only to explore the possibility of doing so. I understand that the aim of the project [illegible] to promote sustainable forest management and to provide demonstration areas in which to develop such management practices; these are relevant to the needs of Brazil and other countries.

DEFENCE

Halons and CFCs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent halons and chlorofluorocarbons are used for defence applications in the United Kingdom and by British forces abroad.

Mr. Neubert: Halons are widely used in fire-fighting systems. Chlorofluorocarbons are used for air conditioning/refrigeration equipment, aerosol propellants, and cleaning purposes (solvents) and are present in manufactured items such as insulation material.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist for reducing the use of halons and chlorofluorocarbons for defence applications, as a contribution to protecting the ozone layer.

Mr. Neubert: The testing and demonstration of fire-fighting systems based on the use of halons has already been curtailed. Plans exist to replace chlorofluorocarbons unfriendly to the ozone layer by alternative, ozone-friendly, substances as they become available. Steps have already been taken to reduce the emissions of CFC's in certain areas.

Electromagnetic Interference

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the latest precautions his Department is taking to reduce the potential hazard arising from electromagnetic interference to (a) ground based, (b) airborne and (c) seaborne nuclear weapon systems.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All nuclear weapon systems are designed to minimise their vulnerability to hazards such as electromagnetic interference. Standard safety procedures ensure that nuclear weapons are only handled, maintained or transported under conditions where the possibility of hazards is extremely remote. These procedures are kept constantly under review.

Microwave Transmission (Soviet Union)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the purpose of the powerful microwave transmission from the Soviet Union beamed at the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have no information on powerful microwave transmissions from the Soviet Union beamed at the United Kingdom.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been any change in the past five years in the microwave transmission intensity radiated to the United Kingdom from the Soviet Union and known as the woodpecker signal.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have no information on microwave transmissions radiated to the United Kingdom from the Soviet Union. "Woodpecker" is a high frequency over-the-horizon radar transmission to which there has been no change over the last five years.

Dunkirk Evacuation (Anniversary)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans are in train to mark the 50th anniversary of the Dunkirk evacuation; and what facilities are to be provided to enable members of the Dunkirk Veterans Association (a) from the United Kingdom and (b) from Commonwealth countries to participate in any planned commemorations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are considering requests for meservice participation in events in France to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Dunkirk evacuation. We have no plans to provide official facilities to enable members of the Dunkirk Veterans Association from the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth to participate in any of the planned commemorations.

RAF Jets (Cameras)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for replacing the 16mm cine cameras on Royal Air Force fast jets and jet-trainer aircraft with video cameras.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As a general rule, it is our intention that all new fast jet aircraft should be fitted with video cameras. Cine cameras on older aircraft are being replaced by video cameras where this is deemed cost effective.

RAF Jets

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made towards equipping all crews of Royal Air Force fast jets and jet-trainer aircraft with self-inflating life jackets and dinghies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We intended to equip all fast jet and jet trainer aircrew with automatically inflating life-saving jackets. These have already been issued to Phantom aircrew, though the automatic inflation capability is not yet operational. The contract to equip the rest of the fast jet force has recently been awarded and it hoped that all the RAF's needs will be met by the end of 1991. All appropriate aircrew are already equipped with dinghies; these are easily inflatable manually and studies do not suggest that provision of a self-inflating variety would improve aircrew survival.

Electronic Warfare

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what action his Department is taking to prepare for defensive and offensive electronic warfare;

(2) what plans he has to counteract the effects of electronic warfare signals beamed at the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on operational matters of this kind.

War Widows

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the cost of applying the Ministry of Defence occupational pension to all war widows widowed prior to 1973; how many extra widows would then become entitled; and what would be the estimated average increase in pension per widow that they would then receive.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Separate figures relating to those war widows whose husbands died before 31 March 1973 are not available. The attributable forces family pension introduced into the armed forces occupational scheme in 1973 is payable only to those war widows whose husbands gave service on or after 31 March 1973. The cost of paying such a pension to all war widows whose husbands' service ended before that date, at current rates, is estimated to be around £200 million a year. About 52,000 war widows would benefit and the average increase in pension received per widow, on that basis, would be approximately £74 per week.

THE ARTS

European Literary Prize

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he is yet in a position to respond to the request from the hon. Member for Paisley, South that the proposed European literary prize should be launched in 1990 in Glasgow as the European City of Culture.

Mr. Luce: I am grateful to the hon. Member for having made the suggestion that the new European literary prize should be launched in Glasgow in 1990. I am pleased to say that at their informal meeting on 2 November 1989, EC Ministers responsible for cultural affairs welcomed this proposal on my recommendation.

CIVIL SERVICE

Centre for Policy Studies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service under what circumstances, and on whose authority, civil servants are permitted to participate in the deliberations of the Centre for Policy Studies; whether they are allowed to advise that body; and whether that body makes any payment for the professional expertise provided by such civil servants.

Mr. Luce: Guidance on the circumstances in which civil servants may attend or participate in activities organised by outside bodies such as the Centre for Policy Studies is set out in chapter 6 of the personnel management handbook, which also covers the question of payment. Copies of the handbook are available in the House Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Consumer Credit

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of current personal sector debt is accounted for by consumer credit; what percentage of the consumer debt is in the form of credit card borrowing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: At the end of 1988 consumer credit formed 14 per cent. of personal sector borrowing. At that time bank credit card lending formed 16 per cent. of consumer credit. More recent but less complete figures indicate that there has been no change since then in the proportion of consumer credit represented by credit card borrowing.

Building Societies Act

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has regarding the interpretation placed upon section 100 of the Building Societies Act 1986 by the Building Societies Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have nothing to add to the guidance issued by the Building Societies Commission on 20 October, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament. This sets out the Building Societies Commission's interpretation of section 100. Nothing in the guidance calls into question the validity of schemes along the lines of that adopted by Abbey National.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend section 100 of the Building Societies Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have no such plans.

Credit Unions

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many credit unions have been established in each of the past 20 years; what is the approximate size of membership of each of these credit unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The number of credit unions registered since the coming into operation of the Credit Unions Act 1979, which provided the first statutory framework for credit unions in Great Britain, has been:

	Number
1979	2
1980	55
1981	16
1982	8
1983	2
1984	3
1985	2
1986	13
1987	16
1988	45
[1] 1989	44

[1] To 7 November.

According to the most recent annual returns received by the registrar of friendly societies from each credit union registered in Great Britain, the average membership of all credit unions is 141. However, there is considerable variation in membership levels, as the following table shows:

Number of members	Number of credit unions
Less than 100	109
100 to 250	44
250 to 500	23
500 to 1,000	8
More than 1,000	6

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to change the tax treatment of the receipt of workplace nursery provision by employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 3 November 1989 at column 361.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Refuseniks

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Mark and Veronika Proekt and their sons, Alexander and Simon, of Leningrad.

Mr. Maude: We have not previously raised this particular case with the Soviet authorities, but we shall be happy to do so if my hon. Friend will provide the necessary details about this case.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Boris Tsirelson, and his parents, Simon and Esther, of Leningrad.

Mr. Maude: We take every opportunity to press the Soviet authorities on individual refusenik cases such as that of the Tsirelson family. This case was last raised when my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Mr. Shevardnadze in New York on 29 September. We shall maintain our pressure until the Tsirelson family is allowed to emigrate.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Emmanuel and Judith Lurie, of Moscow.

Mr. Maude: We take every opportunity to press the Soviet authorities on individual refusenik cases such as Emmanuel and Judith Lurie. My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised this case when he met Mr. Shevardnadze in New York on 29 September. We have recently heard the very welcome news that Emmanuel and Judith Lurie have at last received permission to emigrate from the USSR.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian authorities about the case of Boris and Anna Klemberg, of Kiev.

Mr. Maude: Boris Klemberg recently received permission to emigrate and is now in Israel with his daughter. We shall now include Anna Klemberg among those refusenik cases on which we press the Soviet authorities.

Israel-South Africa (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from the United Kingdom ambassadors to South Africa, Israel and the United Nations on the allegation made by the United States security services that the Israelis and South Africans are jointly developing a nuclear-capable launch vehicle and a compatible atomic warhead.

Mr. Maude: We are aware of the recent reports in the press to which the question refers. Any collaboration between Israel and South Africa in nuclear weapon or ballistic missile research would be a matter for serious concern. It is not our policy to comment on the substance of confidential diplomatic correspondence.

Microwave Transmission

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protection has been provided to embassy staff and buildings in Moscow and elsewhere to counteract the effects of microwave radiation.

Mr. Maude: For security reasons, we do not divulge details of measures taken to protect Her Majesty's overseas missions and their staff.

PRIME MINISTER

Homelessness

Q33. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit the homeless people sleeping on the South Bank.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Central and Eastern Europe

Q45. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received concerning Her Majesty's Government's response to political events in central and eastern Europe.

The Prime Minister: I have received many representations on this subject, from hon. Members, the public and interested organisations. The Government greatly welcome current developments in Poland and in Hungary which are moving towards democracy, freedom and market-based economic systems. We are taking many practical steps to aid this process and we are prepared to do more. We hope that other countries in the region will evolve in the same way and that current changes in the GDR will continue.

Stevenage

Q93. Mr. Wood: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit Stevenage.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Council

Q115. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the proposals made by the president of the Council on monetary union and other matters on 25 October.

The Prime Minister: The issue of economic and monetary union will be on the agenda for the next meeting of the European council in Strasbourg on 8 and 9 December. The President of the Council will no doubt present any proposals he wishes to make at that meeting.

Edmonton

Q156. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit Edmonton.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Port Glasgow

Q158. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Port Glasgow in the near future.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

South Hams

Q195. Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit South Hams.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Fishing Industry

Q198. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister what representatives she has received from organisations representing the fishing boat building industry regarding the state of the industry; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Minister for Industry received a delegation from the Shipbuilders and Ship Repairers Association on 2 November at which the current problems of the fishing boat building industry were discussed.

The Commission has imposed a ban on state aid to fund boat building, but there are support measures available for the industry to help it to develop new products and export services to help in identifying and developing new markets.

Ministers (Financial Affairs)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what safeguards are in place to ensure that Ministers or former Ministers do not allow stockholding companies or financial intermediaries handling their personal affairs to trade in stocks where price-sensitive information has been made available;

(2) what safeguards are in place to ensure that former Ministers do not give price-sensitive information to stock market traders; whether any breaches have occurred in the period 1982 to 1988; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: For any individual knowingly to deal on the basis of unpublished price-sensitive information obtained (directly or indirectly) from an insider is a criminal offence under the insider dealing legislation. As has been the practice under successive Governments, Ministers are given advice, on taking up office, on steps which should be taken and action from which they should refrain in respect of any investments they may hold or acquire so as to avoid a conflict of interest. This includes the advice that Ministers should scrupulously avoid speculative investments in securities about which they have, or may be thought to have, early or confidential information likely to affect the price of those securities. I am unaware of any breaches of the legislation by Ministers or former Ministers having occurred in the period 1982-88.

Aging

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she takes to co-ordinate Government policy on aging and related issues.

The Prime Minister: Elderly people, like all other groups in society, are affected by the policies of many different Government Departments. Consequently there are many occasions when policies cannot be made in isolation and Ministers and officials in different Government Departments consult each other as necessary. I am satisfied that these consultations permit issues to be dealt with speedily and effectively.

Cabinet Secretary

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what is her practice on the attendance of the Cabinet Secretary at Commonwealth heads of government conferences.

The Prime Minister: With my agreement, it is the practice of the present Secretary of the Cabinet not to accompany me to Commonwealth Heads of Government Meetings, or on other overseas visits, in order to permit him to use these opportunities to visit Civil Service locations outside London in his capacity as head of the home Civil Service.

Engagements

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 November.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 November.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 November.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 November.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 November.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

WALES

Community Charge

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what will be the average cost per family in Newport that will be demanded by the community charge.

Mr. Grist: If Welsh local authorities spend in line with standard spending assessments for 1990-91 the average community charge in Wales will be £175. However, until relevant population figures from community charge registers are available it would be misleading and unhelpful to produce illustrative figures for individual authorities for 1990-91. Ultimately it will be for local authorities themselves to set their budgets and fix actual community charge levels in spring 1990.

Hospital Ward Closures

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) against what criteria he expects health authorities in Wales to have taken decisions on possible ward closures during the Christmas period;

(2) how many beds will be involved in ward closures during the Christmas period in each health authority in Wales;

(3) if he will give, for each health authority in Wales, the average number of days per bed that will be involved in ward closures during the Christmas period;

(4) if he will list the ward closures during the Christmas period planned by each health authority in Wales;

(5) what arrangements have been made by each health authority in Wales to guarantee the comfort and wellbeing of any patients affected by ward closures during the Christmas period;

(6) what categories of speciality are involved in possible hospital ward closures during the Christmas period in each health authority area in Wales;

(7) what guidance he has offered to health authorities in Wales in regard to meeting the personal needs of patients affected by ward closures during the Christmas period.

Mr. Grist: Arrangements for the provision of hospital services over the Christmas period are operational matters for the district health authorities concerned.

Announcements

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria he employs in deciding whether to make an announcement by oral statement in the House, by written answer, by depositing papers in the Library or by press notice; and how these criteria were applied to his announcement of the proposed system of Welsh revenue support grant on 6 November.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on Monday 6 November.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current or most recent salary level for the administrator post in respect of each of the family practitioner committees in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The current salary bands which apply to each of the FPC administrator posts in Wales are shown in the table:

FPC	Salary Minimum £	Maximum £
Clwyd	22,404	27,258
Dyfed	22,404	26,210
Gwent	22,404	27,258
Gwynedd	20,714	24,233
Mid Glamorgan	22,404	27,258
Powys	20,714	23,301
South [illegible]amorgan	22,404	27,258
West [illegible]morgan	22,404	27,258

The maximum salary figures for all the posts except that of Powys FPC reflect an element of salary protection consequent upon assimilation onto the new pay scale for NHS administrative and clerical staff applicable from 1 April 1989.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what salary level has been set for the chief executive's post in respect of each family practitioner committee in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The flat rate salaries currently proposed for the FPC general manager posts in Wales are shown in the table:

FPC	Salary £
Clwyd	29,300
Dyfed	28,300
Gwent	29,300
Gwynedd	28,300
Mid Glamorgan	30,400
Powys	25,500
South Glamorgan	29,300
West Glamorgan	29,300

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of advertising the posts of chief executive for each of the family practitioner committees in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The new general manager posts for the family practitioner committees in Wales were advertised by means of a comprehensive advertisement in the national and specialist health service press. The cost of this was £13,257.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of appointing chief executives to the family practitioner committees in Wales, including advertisers, costs of interviews, travel and meetings for everyone involved, and the costs of staff time involved.

Mr. Grist: This information is not yet available as the appointment exercise is only now being completed and several final accounts have still to be presented.

A55 Expressway

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to protect the environment of North Wales consequent upon the completion of the A55 Expressway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am confident that planning authorities will in discharging their responsibilities continue to take full account of the need for balance between conservation and new development.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received a copy of the Institute of Welsh Affairs report entitled "Prospects for North Wales: the New A55 Expressway;" and if he will make a statement on his response to its recommendations.

Mr. Peter Walker: The chairman of the institute forwarded a copy of the report to me on 11 October. I attach a copy of my response which I am also placing in the Library.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a task force to respond to the effects of the A55 Expressway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I expect to make an announcement before the end of the year in response to the views which my hon. Friend the Minister of State has sought on how the opportunities presented by the A55 improvements can best be used to the advantage of north Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the annual increase in inward migration in Wales consequent upon the completion of the A55 Expressway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The mid-year estimates of population for Gwynedd and Clwyd indicate an increasing net inward migration since 1981 into both counties. I would expect this trend to continue as the A55 improvements bring forward further opportunities for industrial and economic development.

BP Plant (Balan Bay)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ask Her Majesty's chief inspector of pollution to investigate the potential dangers to the local population in South Wales from the incident on 6 July at the British Petroleum Balan Bay plant.

Mr. Grist: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has already investigated this incident and are satisfied that there was no danger to the local population on account of atmospheric emissions from the plant.

SOCIAL SECURITY

NATO Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the extent of involvement by his Department in NATO exercise Wintex/Cimex 1987 and exercise Wintex/Cimex 1989; what is the number of staff engaged in the exercise planning process and in the exercises themselves; and what are the posts, ranks and responsibilities of the staff involved.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department plays its part in testing those procedures in which it has an interest. Staff participate as required; it would not be appropriate for me to supply the detail requested.

Registered Unemployed

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect of the changes in social security on the number of registered unemployed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We expect the changes will result in a reduction of some 50,000.

Local Office, Norcross

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time it takes his Department's office at Norcross, Blackpool to reply to letters from (a) claimants and (b) hon. Members; and what steps are being taken to speed up the process.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information on the average time taken to reply to letters from claimants is not available, but the quality of service provided by the Department's offices at Norcross is currently being monitored. The average time taken to reply to letters from hon. and right hon. Members is between five and six days.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current level of support for the provision of wheelchairs for disabled people.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for the Disablement Services Authority to which my hon. Friend may wish to address his question.

Hostel Board and Lodging Charges

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements will be made, following the recent changes to hostel board and lodging charges, to cover charges for ineligible services once the present transitional arrangement period ends; and what is the position for the payment of ineligible services payments for new hostels.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Hostel dwellers are expected to meet their normal, day-to-day service charges from income support, in the same way as other income support recipients. As explained in the statement given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) on 16 March (Official Report, column 546), from April 1991 the money expended by the central unit to maintain hostel income will be transferred to existing funding sources. We would expect hostels to take this into account when setting their charges. The Department of Social Security has transferred a total of over £2 million in a full year to the Department of the Environment, Scottish and Welsh Offices to help certain new hostels.

Income Support

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the overall cost of (a) increasing the rate of income support for all single people under 25 years to the same rate as those over 25 years and (b) extending entitlement to full income support to all those under 18 years in receipt of bridging allowance, special hardship allowance and those registered as waiting for a YTS place with no other income; and if he will express these figures as a percentage of the total social security budget.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The overall estimate cost of (a) increasing the rate of income support (and aligned income-related benefits) for all single people under 25 years is £205 million, or 0·4 per cent. of the total social security budget, and (b) extending entitlement and giving the full income support personal allowance to all under 18 years in receipt of bridging allowance and "severe hardship" allowance is £12·5 million, or 0·025 per cent. of the total social security budget.

Information about those registered as waiting for a YTS place is not available.

Community Charge Rebate

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the numbers of adult residents of (a) each London borough and (b) each district council likely to be entitled to the maximum rebate, during the first year of operation of the community charge in England and Wales; and if he will express these figures as a proportion of the estimated population of each local authority liable to community charge.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is not possible to estimate the number of adult residents in each local authority area who will be entitled to maximum community charge benefit in 1990-91. Current estimates suggest that, in Great Britain as a whole, between one quarter and one third of those liable to pay the full community charge will be entitled to community charge benefit.

Tax Benefit Model Tables

Mr. French: To ask the Secretry of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the 1989 edition of the tax benefit model tables.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Copies will be placed in the Library today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Agricultural and Food Research Council

75. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the Agricultural and Food Research Council's research and development budget.

Mr. Jackson: Grant-in-aid to the agricultural and food research Council in 1989-90 is expected to be £74·563 million. The figure for 1990-91 will be decided by my right hon. Friend after he has considered the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils later this year. The council will also receive in 1989-90 approximately £45·6 million in commissioned research from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and a further £16 million from other sources.

Youth Service

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) central Government and (b) local government expenditure on the youth service in (i) 1979-80, (ii) 1984-85, (iii) 1985-86, (iv) 1986-87, (v) 1987-88 and (vi) 1988-89 in 1989 prices.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is given in the table.

Notes

(1) The figures given for central Government expenditure reflect direct expenditure by the Department to voluntary organisations and specific grant payments to local authorities in support of youth service activities as recorded by local authorities in their annual returns.

(2) The figures given for local government expenditure reflect outturn as recorded by local authorities in their annual returns. This expenditure will not only have been supported by central Government specific grant payments, but also by unhypothecated rate support grant.

(3) The cash figures for the earlier years have been repriced to 1988-89 prices using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator. They include recurrent and capital expenditure on the youth service.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list by local education authority (a) 1988-1989 expenditure on the youth service and (b) the related grant-related expenditure allocation for each local education authority.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Figures for the expenditure of local authorities in 1988-89 are not yet available. Table 1 shows the actual recurrent expenditure of each local education authority on youth and community services in 1987-88, with the exception of four authorities which failed to make a return. Table 2 shows the grant related expenditure assessment for the youth and related services for each local education authority in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

PE Teachers

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, in the latest available figures, the number and percentage of vacancies for physical education teachers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: LEA returns to the Department's regular collection of vacancy data showed 162 vacancies for teachers of physical education in England in January 1989. This suggests a vacancy rate of 1·2 per cent.

Physical Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce a working party on physical education under the provisions of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 7 November at columns 579-80.

Research Councils

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any proposals to reverse the decline in the number of researchers employed by (a) the agricultural and food research council, (b) the natural environment research council and (c) other research councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no plans to suggest to the councils how many researchers they should employ. The numbers of researchers employed by the agricultural and food research council, natural environment research council and the three other research councils are matters for the councils themselves to determine within the resources available to them.

School Governors

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had about the deselection of school governors by the Isle of Wight county council; and what advice he has given London education authorities about deselection of school governors on political grounds.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received a number of representations concerning the removal from office of school governors appointed by local education authorities, including the Isle of Wight. These matters are currently being investigated.

We have not issued advice to local education authorities generally on this subject. We are considering whether it would be appropriate to do so, following the recent judgment of the House of Lords in the case involving the Haberdashers' Aske's schools.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to relocate his Department's offices to the north-east of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Not at present. My Department is proposing to relocate a further 50 posts from London to its Darlington office during 1990. In addition, a senior official of the Department is about to undertake a study of the long-term location requirements of the Department in the light of the Government's policy on relocation. The study will consider various possibilities, including the handling of some functions regionally.

Student Rents (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average student rent in London; and how much the average student in London will receive in housing benefit during term time.

Mr. Jackson: Data from a survey of undergraduate income and expenditure conducted by Research Services Limited in 1988-89 indicate that average rent payments for single students living in privately rented accommodation in London totalled £1,531 per student over the 1988-89 academic year. The average amount of housing benefit received by such students in the same period was £324.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the comparable average teachers' pay in 1979 and 1988.

Mrs. Rumbold: The average salary of teachers in primary and secondary schools in April 1988 was £13,670. The equivalent figure in 1979 (at 1988 prices) was £10,493.

State Schools (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last visited a state school in Nottingham.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has not yet visited a state school in Nottingham.

Church Aided and Voluntary Schools

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce the allocation of funds for capital projects for church aided and voluntary schools for 1990.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend expects to be able to announce the 1990-91 allocation for capital projects for voluntary aided and special agreement schools shortly before Christmas.

Hampshire (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will allocate additional resources to Hampshire's county education budget for the capital expenditure programme outlined in its 1989 strategic planning document; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend is currently considering submissions from all local education authorities, including Hampshire, covering their planned capital expenditure programmes for 1990-91. He expects to announce each authority's annual capital guidelines for that year shortly before Christmas.

Japan (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what lessons were learnt for the research work of British universities from the recent official visit to Japan of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson).

Mr. Jackson: My recent visit to Japan, accompanied by the biological secretary to the Royal Society, was extremely valuable. Comparisons between the United Kingdom and Japanese systems for support of university research and for science were fascinating. My view was reinforced that British public funding of university research has sustained high quality and creative work. Our system, with autonomous universities and a Universities Funding Council separate from the Government, delivers a high quality and quantity of research. Equally interesting is the way in which Japanese business is succeeding in the development of "strategic" science and in harnessing scientific insights to the production of commercial products.

School Visits

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the schools which he has visited in his official capacity since becoming Secretary of State, with dates, the purpose of each visit and whether the school is private or maintained.

Mr. MacGregor: I visited three LEA maintained schools in Norfolk to meet local teachers—Costessey high (19 September), Redenhall Dove first (25 September), and St. Augustine's county primary (3 November). I accompanied my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the opening of the Djanogly city technology college in Nottingham on 29 September, and met teachers at Hinchingbrooke school, Huntingdon on 2 October.

I have also had many other meetings with teachers and shall be visiting further LEA and grant-maintained schools in Manchester, Kent, Norfolk and London shortly.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table for each local education authority with a total for England of the amount of the bid made to him for capital allocation for (a) county and voluntary-controlled schools, (b) voluntary-aided schools and (c) all maintained schools for the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. MacGregor: It is not possible to provide the information sought, since not all LEAs have yet submitted their bids.

Teaching Posts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all the local education authorities in England showing (a) the established teaching posts and (b) the current vacancies for such posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The numbers of full-time teachers employed by each local education authority in England, together with the number of vacancies, are given in the table.

The figures relate to January 1989, the last date for which complete information for all authorities is available.

GCSE changes

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the necessary changes to be made to GCSE in order to meet the requirements of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The future development of the GCSE examination was the subject to a report from the School Examinations and Assessment Council sent to my right hon. Friend on 13 July. Copies of the report, together with my right hon. Friend's reply, have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Long-serving Teachers

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment his Department has made of the availability of special allowances to long-serving teachers in small special needs schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions has been asked to advise on what further increase should be made in the number of incentive allowances, and in their value relative to the main professional grade. All teachers in special schools, other than heads and deputies, receive at least a B incentive allowance. The Department's present plans assume that the proportion of special schools teachers receiving higher value allowances will progressively increase until 1990.

Supply Teachers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to encourage an increase in the number of supply teachers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Our education support grant programme to assist teacher recruitment urges local education authorities to encourage flexible working practices, including part-time working. This should stimulate the employment of supply teachers. However, the employment and deployment of teachers is a matter for local education authorities and schools. It is for them to decide how many supply teachers to appoint. They also have discretion to pay teacher on short-notice contracts at rates they consider appropriate in order to recruit and retain the teachers they need.

SCOTLAND

Fish Farms

74. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effect of (a) deliberate release of fish from fish farms and (b) accidental escape of fish from fish farms on the habits and genetic coding of North Atlantic salmon.

Mr. Lang: A study of "genetic protein variation in farmed Atlantic salmon in Scotland: comparison of farmed strains with their wild source of populations" was published in August in "Scottish Fisheries Research Report No. 42". Further studies on both wild and farmed populations of salmon have been completed or are in progress.

At this stage it is too early to predict what scientific conclusions might emerge. The recently published work does show that there are genetic differences between farmed strains of salmon and the wild populations from which they are drawn. The genetic consequences of interaction between farmed fish and a wild stock are unknown but are thought likely to be complex. So far there is no direct evidence of adverse effects of actual damage to any wild stocks in Scotland.

A Report "The Genetic Impact of Farmed Atlantic Salmon on Wild Populations" was published by the Nature Conservancy Council in August. This made a number of recommendations about further research and about mangement of wild and farmed stocks of salmon. We support the view that further studies are required and that great care is needed to ensure that deliberate restocking of rivers is carried out in the right way and that releases of farmed fish are prevented or reduced as far as possible.

Land Acidity

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence his Department has about deterioration in terms of acidity of Scottish agricultural land over the past 10 years; and whether he will re-introduce a lime subsidy for Scottish agriculture.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The farming industry is well aware that regular liming is an essential and cost-effective element of land husbandry and I understand that lime usage is currently at about the same level as it was when a general lime subsidy was available. We have no plans to reintroduce a lime subsidy, but grant assistance is available for the application of lime for certain grassland improvement operations under the farm and conservation grant scheme (EC).

Oilseed Rape

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hectares of oilseed rape were harvested in 1989; what tonnage was produced; what was the value of the crop; and what subsidy was paid from public funds for its production or processing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Latest estimates show that in 1989 some 36,000 hectares of oilseed rape were harvested in Scotland producing some 122,600 tonnes. The value of the 1989 crop in the United Kingdom as a whole is still being assessed. An estimate of the value will be included in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom" due to be published early in 1990. Production aid for oilseed rape under the EC oilseeds scheme is being paid on the 1989 crop; final estimates of the total amount will not be known until at least the end of the 1989-90 marketing year.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the presence of pollen and other airborne material derived from flowering crops of oilseed rape giving the concentration in the atmosphere above the crop and the maximum extent of detectable contamination; and if he will give comparable information for other agricultural crops.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no information on concentrations of airborne material from oilseed rape in the atmosphere above the crop nor comparable information on other crops. I am aware that some experiments have been carried out by individuals to detect the presence of oilseed rape pollen in the atmosphere in the vicinity of crops.

Legal Profession

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to introduce a separate Scottish Bill dealing with proposed reforms to the legal profession; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering what legislative provision may be necessary to implement the conclusions to his review of the legal profession which were set out in "The Scottish Legal Profession—The Way Forward" which he issued on 10 October.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress in site evaluation in terms of geology, transportation routes and effects on local economies, of prospective sites for the disposal of (a) low level, (b) intermediate level and (c) high level radioactive wastes in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In relation to low and intermediate-level wastes it is for the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive (Nirex) to evaluate these factors in relation to sites in the United Kingdom which it wishes to investigate. As regards possible geological investigations at Dounreay, I would refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 6 November, at column 495. If Nirex were subsequently to propose the construction of a repository it would be required to present a full safety case and environmental impact assessment, and a public inquiry would be held.

It is Government policy to store high-level radioactive wastes at the sites where they arise for at least 50 years. No current site evaluation is taking place for the disposal of this category of waste.

Health Service (Contracts)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given to Lothian health board about awarding Health Service catering contracts to outside contractors.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None in relation to any specific contract.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards sending in auditors to examine the workings of health boards which have awarded in-house contracts.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As with any area of health board expenditure, the procedures governing the award of contracts may be the subject of examination at any time by the statutory auditor.

Housing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report, by district council area, the average time taken by each district council in processing applications by sitting tenants for purchasing their council houses; and if he will also list for each district council their total housing stock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Storm Damage

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, which local authorities will benefit from the Bellwin scheme invoked after the severe storms in February of the current year; and by how much.

Mr. Rifkind: The claims have now been assessed and I can announce that a quarter of a million pounds in grant will be made available for those authorities which, in terms of the scheme of special financial assistance which I announced on 27 April, suffered an undue financial burden in responding to the storms and floods of February.

The details of the grant are:

	£
Highland Regional Council	207,975
Inverness District Council	29,250
Western Isles Islands Council	14,058
	251,283

Subject to parliamentary approval of a supplementary estimate which will be presented shortly payments will be issued to those authorities as soon as possible.

Roads

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number and location of proposed improvements to the A96 which require SDD funding.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1989]: The following programme of improvements on the A96, to be funded by the Scottish Development Department, has been developed in line with the strategic six-point plan for the route which I announced last December:—

1. Major Schemes (over £1 million)

There are 7 major schemes programmed.

Bucksburn Diversion
Blackburn Bypass
Kintore Bypass
Inveramsey-Waterside
Keith Bypass
Lhanbryde Bypass
Nairn Railway Bridge

In addition, the Scottish Development Department is considering the justification and possible options for bypassing Fochabers. If a satisfactory scheme can be worked out it will be added to the trunk road programme.

2. Minor Schemes (less than £1 million)

Three improvement schemes are planned to start this financial year. These are the Dramlachs climbing lane at Fochabers, the Tearie junction at Brodie and the Drumine to Gollanfield scheme. In addition, a report has been commissioned from Grampian regional council which is expected to identify at least another 5 minor schemes for early implementation which will provide overtaking opportunities along the route. In parallel with this, a specialist consultant has been appointed to develop a computer based simulation model for the whole of the A96 to assist in the identification of the optimum locations for further overtaking opportunity schemes.

3. Accident Remedial Schemes

Good progress has already been made on accident remedial schemes on the A96, and Grampian and Highland regional councils will in the near future be recommending a further programme of schemes for the next financial year. These schemes will be implemented quickly in line with departmental policy.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number and location of SDD funded improvements which are currently being undertaken on the A96.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 1 November 1989]: One major scheme, the Inverurie bypass, is currently under construction. In addition, seven accident remedial schemes involving measures such as signing and surface dressing are under way or recently completed at a number of locations along the route. This work has also included a thorough overhaul of all road markings on the route with highly reflective, long-lasting materials to the most recent specification.

EMPLOYMENT

Agricultural Equipment (Safety)

73. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives to improve safety of agricultural equipment are currently being funded by his Department.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission are currently funding seven research projects in the area of safety of agricultural equipment:—

(1) Seat belts in agricultural tractors;

(2) Interlocking devices for component guards on agricultural machinery;

(3) Tractor driven equipment—noise test procedures;

(4) Practical application of noise reduction methods in agriculture;

(5) Power take-off shafts—alternative power supply systems;

(6) Integrity of safety cabs fitted to tractors;

(7) Dynamic and static test methods for tractor mechanical coupling components.

Factory Inspectors

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many extra factory inspectors will be employed in January 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: A recent recruitment campaign has resulted in 27 extra inspectors being appointed since August. The increase will be partly offset by January by retirements and resignations. A further campaign is now under way to ensure that the figure planned in the Health and Safety Commission's plan for 1 April next is met; the inspectorate will continue to grow thereafter.

Health and Safety at Work

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he proposes to take on the issue of the level of fines for health and safety at work offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Following representations from the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission and the director general of the Health and Safety Executive about the low level of fines for health and safety offences, my right hon. Friend is considering them in conjunction with my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Noise at Work

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements he has made to monitor the effectiveness of the Noise at Work Regulations 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors appointed under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 will enforce the regulations as they do other regulations made under the Act. In addition inspectors will be carrying out a special programme of visits during 1991 and 1992 to obtain information on the extent to which employers and employees together with the makers and suppliers of machinery understand and meet their obligations under the regulations.

Council for Social Aid, Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide (a) details of the destinations of all the employment training trainees who were on the Council for Social Aid scheme in Greater Manchester at the time of the scheme's closure in May of the current year and (b) give the numbers of those who were unable, or refused to join another scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The table lists the latest known destinations of the trainees who were on the Council for Social Aid's scheme at the time of the closure.

	Number
Transferred to other Training Managers	818
Known to have found permanent employment through Employment Training	23
Not known	170

All trainees were offered a place with another training manager.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide details of the additional cost incurred by the Training Agency to date as a result of the closure of the Council for Social Aid's employment training scheme in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Nicholls: Additional costs of £12,270 have been incurred in payment of start fees to the training managers who took over the training of Council for Social Aid's former trainees.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has about the present employment of the staff formerly employed on the Council for Social Aid scheme in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no information on the present employed/unemployed status of the former employees of the Council for Social Aid.

Employment Training, Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the most recent details of the ethnic origin, sex and disability of employment training trainees for each scheme in the Greater Manchester area.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not readily available in the form requested and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary stationed at Kells Royal Ulster Constabulary station during the period 1 June 1988 to 1 March 1989 were transferred to other duties in other parts of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable has informed me that three members of the RUC serving at Kells RUC station were transferred during the period in question.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary who were stationed at Kells Royal Ulster Constabulary station from 1 January 1988 and 1 March 1989 resigned from the police service during that period or subsequent to it.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable has informed me that two members of the RUC serving at Kells RUC station have resigned from the force since 1 January 1988.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Royal Ulster Constabulary authorised and carried out a search for arms and ammunition at Kells Royal Ulster Constabulary station during the period 1 January 1988 to 1 March 1989.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable has informed me that a search of the RUC station at Kells was carried out on 12 October 1988. No unauthorised firearms or ammunition were discovered.

Nurses

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by health district (a) the current nursing staff establishment, (b) the number in post at the latest available date and (c) the number who had left the National Health Service in the preceding year.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 November 1989]: The information requested in respect of the current nursing staff establishment and the number in post at the latest available date is as follows:—

Nursing staff[1]—current funded establishment at March 1989

	Number
Eastern Health and Social Services Board	9,330·20
Northern Health and Social Services Board	2,680·79
Southern Health and Social Services Board	2,443·92
Western Health and Social Services Board	2,799·44
Northern Ireland Total	17,254·35

[1] 'Nursing staff' includes staff employed in the personal social services.

Western Health and Social Services Board	3,053	2,856·21
Northern Ireland Total	20,491	17,792·59

[1] 'Nursing staff' includes staff employed in the personal social services.

The number of nursing staff who have left the Health Service is not known.

EC Border Area Programme

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount received by each Northern Ireland Government Department, from the European Community's border areas programme, in each of the years since 1980.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The total amounts received by Northern Ireland Government Departments and Government-sponsored agencies from the Europen Community's border areas programme since 1980 are as follows:

	1988–89 £	1989–90 £
Department of the Environment	600,000	—
Local Enterprise Development Unit	450,053	75,569

Further payments will fall due to these bodies as the programme progresses. Resources available from the start of the programme in 1980 were used in the early years to finance district council schemes.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will list all those projects and initiatives in Northern Ireland which have received financial aid from the European Community's border areas programme.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 November 1989]: A total of 99 tourism and communications projects have been approved for financial support from the European regional development fund under the border areas programme. A number of initiatives benefiting small and medium-sized companies have also received financial aid from the programme.

I will write to the hon. Gentleman enclosing a full list of projects and initiatives assisted under the programme.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will list the entire stock of advance and refurbished factories for new investment, held by the Industrial Development Board, giving details by district council areas.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The information is as follows:

District council	Advance and refurbished factories now available	Vacant factories not refurbished	Factories awaiting surrender	Under construction
Antrim	1	1	1	4

Police

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to ensure further effective development of the policy of ensuring that there should be a police presence in operations which involve direct contact between the armed forces and the community; and whether additional police are being recruited for this purpose.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 6 November 1989]: As agreed between the British and Irish Governments at the last Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference meeting on 18 October 1989 a working group has been established on the subject. The results of this work will be considered when they are available.

Industrial Development

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all those parcels of land held by the Department of Economic Development, LEDU or the Industrial Development Board and zoned for industrial development by the planning authorities, giving details by district council area.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 November 1989]: The IDB's land holdings for future industrial development are as follows. Neither the DOE nor LEDU owns land for industrial development purposes.

Funding (North Down and Ards)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the level of funding for the home help service in the North Down and Ards unit of management of the Eastern health and social services boards in each of the past three years; how many persons received the assistance of home helps in each of these years; and if he will make a statement on the future development of the home help service within the North Down and Ards unit of management.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

	Expenditure £	Recipients
1986-87	962,744	1,354
1987-88	1,187,434	1,376
1988-89	1,255,714	1,320

Responsibility for the management and delivery of the home help service in the North Down and Ards unit of management is primarily a matter for the Eastern health and social services board. The initial allocation of funds to health and social services boards in Northern Ireland in 1989-90 amounted to £696 million. This provides for an 8·4 per cent. increase over 1988-89 and affords boards the scope to increase expenditure on the provision of particular services, including the home help service, in the light of their view of priorities.

HEALTH

District Medical Officers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current notional national complement of district medical officers; how many are currently in post; and what steps he is taking to increase levels of recruitment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We accepted the recommendations of the report "Public Health in England" (published December 1988) that each health authority should designate a director of public health (formerly district medical officers). Regional health authorities are to submit manpower plans to meet the report's recommendations by December 1989.

As at 30 September 1988 there were 136 district medical officers in post and 18 vacancies.

We have funded 40 additional training posts to aid future recruitment to the specialty.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now support an out of court compensation scheme to alleviate the physical and financial distress of families of haemophiliacs who have contracted AIDS through National Health Service treatment.

Mr. Freeman: The Government have already provided an ex gratia payment of £10 million to set up the Macfarlane Trust to meet the special needs of haemophiliacs infected with HIV and their dependants. Claims for compensation are now being pursued through the courts and I am advised these matters are sub judice.

Hospices

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to introduce financial support for hospices similar to the pound-for-pound scheme introduced by the Scottish Office.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Arrangements for financial support for hospices in England have been under careful consideration for some time. It is hoped to bring forward plans in due course.

NHS Reform

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be giving the budget figures for hospitals wishing to opt out.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: NHS trusts will remain an integral part of the NHS. In common with other NHS units, they will derive the majority of their revenue income from contracts with health authorities and GP practice budget holders to provide services for NHS patients. In addition they will be able to borrow money both from the Government and private sector, subject to an external financing limit which will be set for each trust and reviewed annually. Each trust will be expected to frame its budget so as to remain within its external financing limit.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total sum spent in securing the implementation of the health services Bill to date; and what is his estimate of the sum which will be spent for this purpose before this measure is enacted.

Mr. Freeman: The Government announced on 11 May 1989 that £82 million has been allocated in 1989–90 for implementing the proposals contained in the White Paper "Working for Patients". By no means all of the proposals will require legislation, but for those that do we shall seek a Bill at the earliest opportunity. Future levels of support will be announced shortly.

Salmonella

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were (a) the number of outbreaks of food poisoning, connected with salmonella for each month of the current year to date, (b) the corresponding figures for 1988 and (c) the source of the information.

Mr. Freeman: There were 712 outbreaks of salmonellosis in humans reported in England and Wales in the period January to September 1989. The corresponding figure for 1988 was 332. Figures are not routinely collated on a monthly basis. The dates are based on formal reports to the communicable disease surveillance centre by public health laboratory service and other laboratories and by local authorities, and were published on 30 October in the "Update on salmonella infection" produced jointly by the public health laboratory service and the state veterinary service.

Artificial Insemination

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of those women who received artificial insemination by donor in the latest year for which figures are available were (a) married, (b) unmarried, (c) fertile and (d) infertile.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to ensure that artificial insemination by donor is available only as a treatment for married, infertile women; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The White Paper "Human Fertilisation and Embryology: A Framework for Legislation" explains that it is Government policy to introduce legislation in this Parliament to license the provision of specified infertility services including those provided through artificial insemination by donor (AID). The statutory licensing authority's licensing structure and code of practice will cover arrangements for counselling, assessment and screening; these will need to take into account the position of the donor, the recipient, the individual clinician and the interests of the child or children who may result from AID.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has concerning the numbers of women who have received artificial insemination by donor in each year for which figures are available from each of the clinics which currently provide such a service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not held centrally.

Polkinghorne Report

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the letter with which he circulated copies of the Polkinghorne report to health authorities made it clear that the contents of the report and its recommended code of practice had no statutory authority;

(2) why he decided to circulate to health authorities copies of the Polkinghorne report before the House had fully debated its conclusions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) on 23 October 1989 at column 315. Health circular (89) 23, issued in July 1989, informed health authorities of the Government's acceptance of the Polkinghorne committee's main recommendations and asked authorities to ensure that the new Polkinghorne code of practice on the use of foetuses and foetal material in research and treatment is adhered to.

Medical Research

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to require medical research in non-National Health Service establishments to be supervised by medical ethical committees.

Mr. Freeman: There are no plans to introduce legislation. The general principles governing research in human subjects are contained in the declaration of Helsinki. The General Medical Council, whose powers derive from the medical Acts, is responsible for enforcing professional standards.

Tobacco (Marketing)

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to sign the voluntary agreement between Her Majesty's Government and United States Tobacco International on the marketing of oral tobacco in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been seeking to conclude a revised voluntary agreement with United States Tobacco International, without prejudice to my decision on whether to ban oral snuff, for some considerable time. On 6 October I wrote to Jack Africk the President of United States Tobacco, enclosing a copy of a new agreement which I had signed, for his signature. So far I have received no reply.

Leeds General Infirmary

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will call for a report from the chairman of Leeds Western health authority on the proposal for Leeds general infirmary to opt out; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. The decision on whether or not to prepare a formal application for NHS trust status is a matter for the sponsors of the expression of interest in the unit concerned. There is no question of any hospital "opting-out" of the NHS.

Measles Vaccination

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department is taking any measures to examine what limitations of the vaccine used against measles there may be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department continues to monitor adverse events and reactions to all vaccines using the yellow card reporting system. The incidence of measles is also monitored and it is a notifiable disease.

The Medical Research Council continues its long-term (25-year) study of 10,000 recipients of measles vaccine.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there are any proposals to modify immunisation strategies for the measles virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are no current plans to modify the present measles immunisation strategy. This strategy aims to continue to improve the uptake of measles, mumps and rubella (MMR) vaccine to achieve the elimination of measles as an indigenous disease by the year 2000, in accordance with the World Health Organisation's objective for its European region.

Uptake of measles-only vaccine in England in 1987-88 reached 76 per cent. and the incidence of measles in the first three quarters of 1989 is lower than that in any comparable previous period.

Ambulance Service (Pay)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average pay increase for ambulance men in each year since 1978-79.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Increases were as follows:

	Per cent.
1979-80	[1]23·0
	[1]13·0
1980-81	7·3
1981-82	6·0
1982-83	4·5
1983-84	4·5
1984-85	[2]10·0
1985-86	6·0
1986-87	5·0
1987-88	[3]5·4
1988-89	[4]6·5

[1] Staged Clegg award paid 1 August 1979 and 1 April 1980.

[2] Introduction of new salaried structure—average increases more than 10 per cent.

[3] In addition the standard working week was reduced by one hour.

[4] Current offer from 1 April 1989—additional 2·8 per cent. for qualified staff in the London ambulance service.

Cervical Cytology

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the median, (b) the longest and (c) the shortest time in each district health authority between a woman having a cervical smear for screening and when she is notified of the results.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by (a) regional health authority and (b) area health authority, the number of cervical cytology screening call-recall systems in operation; and what is the average waiting time for processing of cervical smears in each category.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 23 June 1989]: All 190 district health authorities in England introduced computerised call and recall system for cervical cancer screening by April 1988. Information on laboratory processing times is not available in the form requested. In September over 75 per cent. of districts were achieving the Department's target for laboratories of returning results of smear tests to the doctor who took them within one month. We do not collect figures on processing times in these districts. The average processing time of districts failing to meet the one month target is 6·5 weeks.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Illegal Weapons

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions there have been for the illegal carrying of knives since this section of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 was implemented.

Mr. John Patten: Section 139 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 which relates to the possession of knives in public places came into force on 29 September 1988. In 1988 in England and Wales, 150 persons were prosecuted for the offence of which 130 were found guilty.

Drugs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the recent allocation of Government funds for an anti-crack campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have received a number of representations about the drug prevention initiative which was announced on 11 October. These representations will be taken into account in developing our plans for a central drug prevention unit and the initial nine local drug prevention teams to be located in areas where the misuse of drugs, particularly of cocaine and crack, presents a serious problem.

Joy Riding

Mr. David Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of fatalities involved with joy riding and on the measures he recommends local police forces to take when giving chase to those who steal cars.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police service faces a genuine dilemma between the apprehension of offenders and the safety of the public. On many occasions when a driver fails to stop, the police do not know whether they are dealing with a joy rider or a more serious crime. The police manual "Roadcraft", which is used as the basis for police driver training, states that no emergency is so urgent as to justify an accident. This is emphasised in the more detailed guidance which chief officers give members of their forces.

Broadcasting (Deaf People)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what provisions he proposes to include in the proposed Broadcasting Bill to ensure that the Broadcasting Standards Council or the Independent Television Commission have adequate powers to enforce representation of deaf people and to monitor and enforce standards for hard of hearing and deaf people;

(2) what provisions he will include in his proposed Broadcasting Bill to ensure access to television viewing for deaf viewers through subtitling or sign language and for the monitoring of sound quality.

Mr. Mellor: The arrangements we propose in relation to subtitling for the deaf and hard of hearing were set out in a reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) to my hon. Friend the Member for Devizes (Sir C. Morrison) on 26 July. The Independent Television Commission (ITC) will be empowered to require Channel 3 and 5 licensees and Channel 4 to provide services of a high technical standard, including high sound quality.

The ITC will act as a licensing and regulatory body. Its members will be chosen on the basis of their experience and knowledge but will not represent specific interest groups. The Broadcasting Standards Council was set up to deal with matters of taste and decency on television and radio. Since these issues affect all viewers and listeners, it would not be appropriate to appoint a member solely concerned with the needs of people who are deaf.

Magistrates Clerks

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the magistrates courts in England and Wales showing (a) the established posts for clerks and (b) the number of vacancies for the posts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Manpower returns received from 88 of the 105 magistrates courts committees in England and Wales indicated that there were 149 vacancies for court clerks out of an establishment of 1,249 at 30 June 1989 the latest date for which information is available, as shown in the table.

The staff in post figure includes trainees occupying court clerk posts, but information on their number is not readily available.

The problems of recruitment and retention of court clerks, especially those qualified as solicitors or barristers, were addressed in the pay settlement for magistrates courts staff which I have recently approved for grant purposes.

Prisoners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by open prison (a) the percentage of inmates convicted of sexual offences and serving life sentences and (b) the number of inmates who have absconded during the last 12 months; and if he will show, in his answer, which of these figures concern female inmates.

Mr. Mellor: According to the information held centrally, which is approximate, there were seven males on 30 June 1989 serving life sentences for sexual offences in open prisons in England and Wales. All were held at Leyhill accounting for 2 per cent. of its population. Information on absconds from open prisons is given in the table.

Burglary (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the most recent figures for burglary in South Yorkshire; and what is the national figure.

Mr. John Patten: The latest information relates to the 12 months to the end of June 1989; for England and Wales the information is published in table 4 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin 29/89 and for South Yorkshire in a separate table, copies of both are available in the Library.

Overseas Students

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications from overseas students seeking extensions to their leave to remain in the United Kingdom were outstanding at the latest convenient date; and what was the comparable figure for each of the previous five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The estimated number of student applications outstanding in July this year was 14,000. Comparable figures for the previous five years are not available.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances overseas students are currently being granted extensions to their leave to remain in the United Kingdom despite their applications being submitted out of time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Any application from an overseas student who has overstayed his or her last leave to remain is considered on its individual merits, taking account, for example, of the time since leave expired and the reasons for overstaying.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what relaxations in immigration procedures have recently been introduced to reduce the backlog of applications from overseas students seeking extensions to their leave to remain in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An exercise was mounted recently to clear applications from students where most of the period of leave applied for had already passed. It did not involve any relaxation of the immigration rules. In addition improved working procedures have been introduced to reduce the time taken to process after-entry cases, including applications from overseas students.

Community Issues (Leicester)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations or reports from the Chief Constable of Leicestershire concerning the Divali celebrations in Leicestershire on 29 and 30 October.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Leicestershire, Mr. Michael Hirst, as to the criteria he applies in deciding whether to meet the hon. Member for Leicester, East to discuss community issues.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. This is a matter for the chief constable to decide in the exercise of his responsibilities. We fully support the chief constable's continuing efforts to ensure good relations between the police and all sections of the community in Leicestershire.

Police and Fire Services (Pay)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average pay increase for (a) firemen and (b) police in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

1. Fire Service (5th year qualified firefighter)

[1] Implemented in two phases.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers are currently at Heathrow airport; and how many are in accommodation provided by the immigration service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information centrally available relates to passengers who are detained under the Immigration Act 1971 having claimed asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom, and in respect of whom an asylum questionnaire has been completed. On 8 November the number in detention was 21. The immigration service does not provide accommodation for passengers given temporary admission although hotel accommodation is occasionally arranged in cases of exceptional need.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities are made available at major ports of entry for asylum seekers arriving in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Asylum seekers without means of support in the United Kingdom will, if they meet the relevant criteria, qualify for social security benefits and emergency housing. In addition a number of voluntary organisations assist asylum seekers.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the plight of asylum seekers at ports of entry into the United Kingdom; and what resources are provided by his Department to voluntary organisations providing assistance for asylum seekers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A number of organisations concerned with the welfare of refugees and asylum seekers have made representations concerning the need for better reception facilities for asylum seekers who arrive at ports of entry and who have no means of support in the United Kingdom. An element of the Home Office grant to the British Refugee Council goes to assist asylum seekers arriving at Gatwick airport. We have agreed in principle to grant being made available to strengthen the reception arrangements which are made by the voluntary sector, and officials are in discussion with the refugee agencies about specific proposals.

Probation and Magistrates Services

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to cash limit the specific grants to the probation and magistrates courts services.

Mr. Waddington: Under the new capital finance system for local authority services, capital grant for probation and magistrates courts will be cash limited from April 1990. Following our consultations with the local authority associations and relevant service organisations about the specific grants payable in respect of these services, I propose to introduce cash limits on their current grants. I shall be seeking a suitable opportunity for the necessary legislative provision with a view to implementing the new arrangements in April 1992. We shall be discussing further with the relevant bodies possible mechanisms for the allocation of cash-limited grant.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the income and expenditure account for the administration of citizenship applications for 1988-89.

Mr. Waddington: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the nationality fees income and expenditure account for the 12 months ended 31 March 1989.

Experimental Reparation Schemes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the research report on experimental reparation schemes which was submitted to his Department in April 1988 and which according to the Green Paper, "Punishment, Custody and the Community" was to be published by the end of 1988.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 27 October 1989]: Assessment of the four experimental reparation schemes is part of a wider study of reparation and mediation. Some results have been published but the main report has taken longer to prepare for publication than we expected. We hope to publish it in the next few months.

Drugs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women and from which country of origin, are currently serving prison sentences for attempting to bring drugs into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 3 November 1989]: The latest readily available information is given in the table. The recording of nationality for citizens of Commonwealth countries, Pakistan and the Irish Republic is not always reliable.

ENERGY

Coal Supplies

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will examine the prices of imported coal within the Community to establish any variations which may exist or be developing.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department receives regular information on the price of imported coal in European Community countries. The average price of coal imports into the United Kingdom is currently higher than that of imports into other Community countries as a high proportion of United Kingdom imports are of premium quality coking rather than steam coal. In addition, United Kingdom imports of steam coal usually have to be transshipped from deep water ports on the Continent and this adds to their cost.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, in planning the future arrangements to secure British energy supplies, he has taken into account the likelihood of changes in the value of sterling.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government seek to ensure that the United Kingdom has adequate, diverse and secure supplies of energy in the forms that people want at the lowest realistic prices. We aim to achieve this wherever possible by ensuring that energy prices reflect their true economic costs and by subjecting as much of energy supply to market forces as is feasible. We believe that this approach provides the flexibility to bring about any necessary adjustment of the energy economy in response to outside influences, of which the value of sterling would be one.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what advice he has given to the electricity industry in regard to any development of dependency upon imported coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. Coal purchases are a commercial matter for the CEGB.

Nuclear Safeguards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions have taken place between his Department and the officials of (a) the Euratom

Safeguards Agency and (b) the International Atomic Energy Agency Safeguards Division, on the subject of the fungibility of nuclear materials under safeguards controls.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The international requirements covering fungibility of materials are contained in article 20 of the Official Journal of the European Communities, Commission regulation 3227/76 of 19 October 1976. No recent discussions have taken place on these requirements with Euratom. The IAEA is concerned solely with the total amounts of nuclear material not its origin.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provisions have existed (a) since May 1979 and (b) since June 1986, to ensure that plutonium originating in safeguarded electricity board reactors in the United Kingdom has never been put into the military unsafeguarded stockpile following reprocessing of Magnox spent fuel at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Pursuant to the requirements of article 14 of INFCIRC 263 the Department of Energy must approve all withdrawals of nuclear material from safeguards. It is Government policy that plutonium originating from the electricity board reactors will not be used for defence purposes.

Natural Uranium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the average spot market price in 1988 for commercial natural uranium traded (a) within Euratom member states and (b) to Euratom member states from outside the European Community.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Euratom Supply Agency's report for 1988 shows that the average price of natural uranium deliveries made during the year to the electricity utilities of the European Community under spot contracts was 35·5 ecu per kilogramme of uranium.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many flue gas desulphurisation plants have been installed in coal-fired and oil-fired power stations.

Mr. Wakeham: Work is currently under way on the first of the flue gas desulphurisation retrofits: the 4,000 MW Drax power station.

Electrical Accidents

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many people have been (a) killed and (b) injured in electrical accidents in each year since 1978-79, distinguishing between domestic and other users and electricity industry staff.

Mr. Wakeham: The following figures are applicable:

All the dates of appointment listed are first dates of appointment. Some members have been reappointed since those dates.

The list does not include the area electricity consultative council chairmen who are members of the area electricity boards but are appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The following salaries are paid to board members:

(i) Salaries for CEGB chairman and deputy chairman:
The chairman is paid £111,000 per annum. The deputy chairman is paid in the salary range £75,000-£80,000.

(ii) Salaries for CEGB full-time members:
Full-time members are paid in the salary range £60,000-£70,000 per annum.

(iii) Salaries for CEGB non-executive members:
Two members are paid under £8,000 per annum; One member is unpaid.

(iv) Salaries for area electricity board chairmen:
The chairmen are paid in the salary range £45,000-£80,000 per annum.

(v) Salaries for area electricity board deputy chairmen:
The deputy chairmen are paid in the salary range £45,000-£50,000 per annum.

(vi) Salaries for area electricity board non-executive members:
Non-executive members receive under £5,000 per annum.

It is not possible without disproportionate cost to provide details of each appointee's background.

Coal Prices

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the basis of his Department's assumption that the price of coal at delivered pence per therm will remain stable between now and 1999.

Mr. Wakeham: Relatively little weight can be attached to assumptions about coal prices as far ahead as 1999. The delivered price of coal will depend on commercial negotiations between coal suppliers and their customers.

Fuel Exports and Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the total of coal exported by the United Kingdom in each year since 1973-74 (a) in tonnes and (b) in value at constant prices;

(2) what was the total of coal imported by the United Kingdom in each year since 1973-74 (a) in tonnes and (b) in value at constant prices;

(3) what was the total of oil and gas exported by the United Kingdom in each year since 1973-74 (a) in tonnes and (b) in value at constant prices;

(4) what was the total of oil and gas imported by the United Kingdom in each year since 1973-74 (a) in tonnes and (b) in value at constant prices;

Mr. Wakeham: The information for exports and imports for each year since 1973 is shown in table 1 (volumes) and table 2 (values at constant 1985 prices). Gas is natural gas (there are no exports), and oil is the sum of crude oil and refined petroleum products:—

PCBs (Continental Shelf)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf have equipment containing polychlorinated biphenyls.

Mr. Wakeham: There are no significant quantities of polychlorinated biphenyls on any offshore installations on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Nuclear Safety Research

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what guidance he has given to the Health and Safety Commission on the exercise of the responsibilities for nuclear safety research which it is to take over from his Department.

Mr. Wakeham: I wrote to the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission in August enclosing a set of guidelines within which I wish the commission to work when it takes over these responsibilities on 1 April next year. The guidelines describe the objectives which I wish the commission to pursue; the area and nature of the research for which it is to become responsible; and the principles by which the commission should define the programmes which it sponsors, and by which the executive should recover the costs of these programmes from the nuclear power industry. A copy of the guidelines has been placed in the Library of the House.

Gas Explosions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been (a) killed and (b) injured in accidents involving gas explosions in each year since 1978-79, distinguishing between domestic and other users and gas industry staff.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The available information for injuries involving domestic and other users, and gas industry employees is show in the tables.

Table 1

[1] Injuries arising from incidents reported under the 1972 Gas Act for the years 1981-82 to 1985-86 and under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR) for later years.

[2] Under the Gas Act initially non-fatal injuries which later became fatal were updated and reclassified. Under RIDDOR, the supplier/fitter is only required to notify HSE upon the receipt of an injury notification and may not be aware of the subsequent death of an injured person.

[3] Under RIDDOR figures relate to injuries causing hospitalisation for more than 24 hours. Under the previous legislation, overnight stays in hospital were the basis of the reporting requirement.

[2] Injuries reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR). Under the reporting regulations applying to earlier years it is not possible to distinguish injuries from explosions from other injuries.

[3] As defined under RIDDOR.

[4] Injuries causing incapacity for work for more than 3 days.

[5] Year beginning 1 April.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside Scheme

14. Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the progress of the set-aside programme.

Mr. Maclean: This year we have received applications from about 1,400 United Kingdom farmers to set-aside more than 55,000 hectares of land. This encouraging further response brings the total amount of land set aside under the scheme to 110,000 hectares.

23. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much land has now been set aside.

Mr. Maclean: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham).

Livestock (Slaughter)

15. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what codes of practice the Government propose to issue in response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of livestock at slaughter.

Mr. Gummer: I am proposing to issue codes covering the welfare of livestock at slaughter, the construction and layout of slaughtering premises and the use of electrical stunning equipment. These will give effect to recommendations made by the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Sheep (Hill Farms)

16. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about levels of support for sheep which are to be used for breeding on hill farms, which are not put to the ram until they are 18 months old, under the new sheep regime.

Mr. Curry: The special concession will continue under which these sheep will be able to receive premium at the same special rate which applies to goats. This will be set at 80 per cent. of the rate for ewes in 1990 and 70 per cent. thereafter.

Sheepmeat Regime

17. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further discussions he plans to hold regarding the future of the sheep meat regime.

Mr. Curry: We will continue to consult the industry on the implementation of the revised sheepmeat regime.

Chemical Fertilisers

18. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Ministry is offering to farmers about reducing the quantity of chemical fertilisers they are using to prevent high nitrate build-ups in the soil.

Mr. Maclean: ADAS advises farmers on the avoidance of excessive or untimely fertiliser usage, particularly autumn nitrogen applications. We are also introducing a pilot scheme to limit nitrate leaching in sensitive areas.

Countryside

19. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies his Department will be developing to help maintain the present character of Britain's countryside.

53. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his Ministry's plans to further conservation of the countryside.

Mr. Gummer: A number of important measures have been introduced by my Department in the last few years aimed at maintaining and improving the character of our countryside. The effectiveness of these measures is being monitored and the assessments will help in the determination of future policies having the same objectives.

Salmonella

20. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department has taken in the last three months further to safeguard egg supplies from the effects of salmonella.

Mr. Maclean: I have introduced two amending orders on the testing of poultry laying and breeding flocks and hatcheries, and five codes of practice on the control of salmonella in protein and feedingstuffs.

Pesticides

21. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to improve the effectiveness of his Department's policies on minimising the harmful effects of pesticide spray drift.

Mr. Gummer: Users of pesticides must avoid the harmful effects of spray drifts, and we have published a draft code of practice to help farmers and growers comply with their legal obligations.

66. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the operation of the advisory committee on pesticides.

Mr. Maclean: Yes.

69. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what publications his Department has recently produced on pesticides.

Mr. Maclean: During 1989 my Department has produced, or collaborated in the production of :

> "The Pesticide Register" a monthly list of new approvals;
>
> "Pesticides 1989" an annual list of approved products;
>
> "Pesticides and Food: A Balanced View" a free booklet which answers the questions most often asked by consumers;
>
> "Report of the Working Party on Pesticides Residues 1985-1988";
>
> "Wildlife Poisoning Incidents Report 1987";
>
> plus evaluations by the advisory committee on pesticides of five new active ingredients and various ad hoc surveys.

Untreated Milk

22. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will be introducing regulations to control the sale of untreated milk in England and Wales.

Mr. Curry: The sale of untreated milk is already controlled under the Milk (Special Designation) Regulations 1988. I expect to lay new regulations before the House shortly, which will require untreated milk to be labelled more fully and to be subject to more sophisticated testing.

Horticultural Research

24. Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his planned reforms for the organisation of horticultural research will take effect.

Mr. Gummer: The aim is for the new organisation to be in place by 1 April 1990.

Fishing Industry

25. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from organisations representing the fishing boat building industry regarding the state of the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have received one representation from the fishing boat building industry.

47. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he is making towards publishing proposals which will reduce capacity of the fishing fleet in line with the target set under the multiannual guidance programme.

Mr. Curry: Fisheries Ministers hope to be able to announce before the end of the year what additional measures, if any, are considered necessary to achieve the target reductions.

Milk Products (Labelling)

26. Mr. Bright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will reconsider introducing a scheme to label milk products when hormone treatment has been used on the cattle.

Mr. Curry: I have no plans at present to introduce a mandatory requirement to this effect, but it is open to the industry to introduce voluntary arrangements if they wish.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

27. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what matters were discussed at the last meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 25 October to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) at column 507.

Pigmeat

28. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to oppose European Council proposals to change the formula used to calculate pigmeat sluicegate prices and import levies.

Mr. Curry: At the Agriculture Council on 23 and 24 October, I argued that the pig industry needed a chance to recover their 1988 losses and now was not the time to be reducing levies in the way the Commission had proposed.

Hormone Growth Promoters

29. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will re-examine the law relating to the prosecution of farmers who implant hormone growth promoters in cattle.

Mr. Gummer: The Animals and Fresh Meat (Hormonal Substances) Regulations 1988 already provide for substantial penalties for farmers convicted of using hormone implants in their animals. Additional controls will be the subject of an announcement shortly.

Microwave Ovens

30. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the makers of microwave ovens on the subject of improved user instructions.

Mr. Maclean: My officials regularly meet relevant organisations, including representatives of the oven manufacturers, to discuss all matters relevant to the safe use of microwave ovens. I attended one such meeting in July at which I stressed the importance the Government attach to this issue.

Butter

31. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of butter exported by the European Economic Community over the past 12 months; and what was the range of prices at which it was disposed of.

Mr. Curry: The most recent 12-month period for which final figures are available is from July 1988 to June 1989 inclusive. Some 483,000 tonnes of butter were exported by the European Community, at prices ranging from about £150 per tonne for old intervention stock sold to the USSR, to around £1,100 per tonne for fresh product exported on to the world market.

Food From Britain

32. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what overseas trade fairs Food From Britain has participated in during the last six months.

Mr. Curry: Food From Britain has participated in the following nine overseas events since 1 April 1989:

Date	Event	Place
12 to 13 April	Foodex '89	Dublin
7 to 10 May	FMI	Chicago
6 to 10 May	MIAD	Milan
23 to 24 May	PLMA	Brussels
28 to 30 May	Fine Food Show	Toronto
25 to 28 June	Fancy Food Show	Atlanta
3 to 6 September	Fine Food Show	Sydney
14 to 19 October	ANUGA	Cologne
20 to 24 October	Expo CT	Milan
5 to 8 November	Gulf Food Exhibition	Dubai

Fisheries Policy

33. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to attend a meeting of the Council of Ministers to discuss fisheries policy.

38. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to attend a meeting of the Council of Ministers to discuss fisheries policy.

58. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to attend a meeting of the Council of Ministers to discuss fisheries policy.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 9 November 1989.

Pigs

34. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will next meet the president of the National Farmers Union to discuss the pig sector of the agricultural industry.

Mr. Curry: We remain in close touch with the representatives of the pig industry and trade about matters of concern to them.

Food White Paper

35. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received from the food industry since his White Paper was published.

Mr. Maclean: Since publication of the White Paper "Food Safety—Protecting the Consumer" in July this year I have received numerous comments from a wide range of food industry interests, including those of food manufacturers, distributors and retailers.

Eggs

36. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on health standards of imports of eggs into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 1 November at column 210.

65. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will institute a review of the overall effectiveness of recent legislation affecting the egg producing industry.

Mr. Gummer: We are continuing to monitor the effects of the measures introduced to tackle the problem of salmonella in eggs.

Horticulture (Gas Prices)

37. Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the effect on horticultural gas prices of the response by British Gas to the seven-point plan put forward by Ofgas.

Mr. Curry: I have received no representations specifically on the seven-point plan. I am, however, keeping in touch with the horticultural industry on the question of gas supplies in general and know that producers are currently evaluating the proposals. This subject was discussed at a recent meeting between Baroness Trumpington and NFU representatives.

National Fruit Collection

39. Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his current plans for the maintenance and development of the national fruit collection; where he intends that it should, in the future, be located; who he intends to manage it; how it will be funded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have made clear their intention to continue to fund the national fruit collection. My Department is in active discussion with three organisations interested in taking over responsibility for the management of the national fruit collection in the event of the closure of Brogdale as a Ministry experimental horticultural station. The East Malling Trust and Wye college would transfer it to their sites whilst Swale borough council is co-ordinating local initiatives to retain it under the direction of a trust at Brogdale. Whichever option may be taken up, the collection will be maintained to a high standard as a living, growing collection.

Hormone Implants

40. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on stockpiles of hormone implants held within the European Community.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 31 October 1989 to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) at column 212.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

41. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the agricultural and food research council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have received a number of letters about the council's plans for restructuring its research institutes, particularly in relation to the Langford laboratory of the Institute of Food Research. These are matters for the council itself and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Organic Agriculture and Horticulture

42. Mr. Malins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to encourage the development in the United Kingdom of organic agriculture and horticulture.

Mr. Curry: A major step taken by my Department was to initiate the setting up by Food From Britain of the United Kingdom register of organic food standards (UKROFS) which on 2 May launched production and processing standards for organic produce and an independent certification and inspection system.

But the development of organic agriculture and horiculture is being helped in a number of other ways. I recently announced that we are introducing a comprehensive economic survey of organic farming, the results of which should provide organic farmers and growers with a better understanding of the economics of production. The fallow option of the set-aside scheme enables farmers wishing to switch to organic farming to prepare their land without forgoing income entirely. We are considering an organic option under the forthcoming extensification scheme. Organic farmers are able to benefit from the farm and conservation grant scheme and from assistance towards the establishment of co-operatives. A sizeable part of our R and D programme is of interest to the organic sector and we are receiving advice from the organic sector, co-ordinated by UKROFS, or specific R and D requirements. Finally ADAS is offering a specialised countrywide service to organic farmers and growers.

Council of Fisheries Ministers

43. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to attend a meeting of the European Community Council of Fisheries Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: On 27 November. The draft agenda is not yet available but I will seek to ensure that the United Kingdom's concerns are properly met.

Fishing Ports

44. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to visit fishing ports before the next meeting of the European Community's Council of Fisheries Ministers.

Mr. Curry: I have already visited Fleetwood, Grimsby and Lowestoft and will be going to Hull, Brixham and Newlyn before the next Fisheries Council.

Overseas Food Fairs

45. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which overseas food fairs his Department has visited in the last three months.

Mr. Curry: Together with two of my officials I attended the ANUGA food fair in Cologne on 16 October, when I visited a number of stands in the British pavilion. I must congratulate the British companies exhibiting there for their marketing effort which I felt compared favourably with that of other countries.

Poultry (Testing)

46. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce amendments to the Testing of Poultry Flocks Order to assist small egg producers.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the written reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary on 3 November 1989 at column 397.

National Consumer Council

48. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the National Consumer Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: I last met representatives of the National Consumer Council on 14 August when we had a broad discussion on various food law and food safety issues.

Egg Imports

49. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the levels of imports of foreign eggs.

Mr. Curry: Confirmed data are only available to the end of September.

In the first nine months of this year imports of eggs were about 30 per cent. up on those in the comparable months of 1988. But, as imports from such a small proportion of total United Kingdom supply, it is likely that these will represent no more than around 3 per cent. of United Kingdom output in 1989. Over the same nine-month period exports in 1989 increased by about 100 per cent. over 1988 levels and, to the end of September, exports exceeded imports by over 200,000 cases (each of 360 eggs).

Research and Seed Certification

50. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support is given by the food and agricultural industries to agricultural research and seed certification.

Mr. Gummer: Our best estimates are that the private sector spends around £320 million on research and development on agriculture and food. No direct support is given by the agriculture and food industries to seed certification. The costs incurred by the Agriculture Departments in connections with statutory certification schemes are recovered in full from the seed industry through fees currently prescribed in the Seeds Fees (Amendment) Regulations 1987.

Food Safety

51. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his priorities for food safety.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's priorities for food safety were set out in the recent White Paper "Food Safety —Protecting The Consumer" (CM. 732). The Bill to be introduced as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits is a major priority.

52. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about his role in protecting food from contamination by radioactivity.

Mr. Maclean: My Department plays a key role and takes whatever means are necessary to protect food from contamination by radioactivity.

Food Advisory Committee

54. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his food advisory committee last met; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Maclean: The agendas of food advisory committee meetings are published in advance. The committee last met on 19 October 1989 and I have sent the hon. Member the press release of 28 September 1989 which listed the main agenda items.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 2 November, Official Report, column 317, if he will list the organisations to which he writes prior to a food advisory committee meeting requesting comments on agenda items; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: As I indicated in my earlier reply, the agendas are published in a press notice so that it is open to any organisation or individual to comment to the secretary of the food advisory committee on matters currently before the committee. Approximately 900 persons or organisations are also sent copies of food press notices. I will write in due course to the hon. Member giving the list of names.

Battery Fowls

55. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of battery fowls suffer broken limbs on the way to slaughter.

Mr. Maclean: Recent MAFF-funded research has indicated that about 30 per cent. of end of lay hens from battery units suffer from broken bones. Most of these are thought to occur when the birds are removed from the cages. The problem is not confined to battery units as further research indicates that birds from other systems —percheries and free range—have more old breaks than birds kept in cages.

Both MAFF and the industry are funding more research into the problem. The Government are supporting action by the industry to reduce the incidence of broken bones and plans to introduce legislation designed to improve cage design in order to minimise injury when the birds are removed.

Dairy Sector

56. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessments his Department has recently undertaken on the present profitability of the dairy sector.

Mr. Curry: My Department carries out annual assessments of profitability in the dairy and other farming sectors, the results of which are published in February each year in reports entitled "Agriculture in the United Kingdom". The most recent report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, shows the net income from dairy farming in 1988-89 rose in real terms to its highest level since 1982-83.

Scottish Fishermen's Federation

57. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation; and what subjects were discussed.

63. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: Since taking up my post in July, I have not yet met the Scottish Fishermen's Federation, but I know my Scottish colleagues, with whom I am in close touch, are in frequent contact.

Farm Visits

59. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last made an on-farm visit; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Gummer: Since my appointment in July, I have made a number of tours in the regions, including on farm visits. During the most recent such visit, on 3 November, a range of countryside matters were discussed, including in particular the maintenance of wildlife habitat.

Animal Products (Licensing)

60. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to consider socio-economic criteria in assessing whether to grant licences to animal products under the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Maclean: The purpose of licensing under the Medicines Act is to protect public and animal health and I do not believe that socio-economic or other additional criteria contribute to this purpose.

Pigmeat Prices

61. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what improvements in pigmeat prices his Department has recorded during the last 12 months.

Mr. Curry: Over the past 12 months the monthly average of the all pigs price, as calculated by the Meat and Livestock Commission, has been as follows:

	Price
1988
October	93·07
November	97·54
December	101·23
1989
January	99·08
February	100·62

	Price
March	102·56
April	105·83
May	109·43
June	113·44
July	115·85
August	116·94
September	127·41
October[1]	133·21

[1] To week ending 21 October 1989.

Fish (Drugs)

62. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what drugs he has licensed for use with fish in the past 12 months.

Mr. Curry: In the last 12 months licences have been issued for Aquaguard, an ectoparasiticide for use against infestations of sea lice, and for furogen immersion vaccine and furogen injection vaccine for use against certain strains of Aeromonas salmonicida.

Farm and Conservation Grants

64. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contributions to pollution control have resulted from grants made under the farm and conservation grants scheme.

Mr. Maclean: Under the farm and conservation grant scheme grants of 50 per cent. are available throughout the country for the installation, replacement and improvement of facilities for handling, storing and treating slurry and silage effluent. This is the highest rate of grant available in Europe. It underlines the Government's determination to assist farmers in the vital task of preventing pollution of water courses by farm waste. The industry have reacted very positively and uptake of new grants is high.

Nitrate Fertilisation

67. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average level of nitrate fertilisation of United Kingdom farmland for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Curry: Data in the precise form requested is not available, but average total inorganic nitrogen usage on all crops and grass in England and Wales has been as follows (expressed in kg/ha):

Year	kg/ha
1979	114
1980	120
1981	130
1982	132
1983	139
1984	147
1985	146
1986	146
1987	147
1988	133

Whaling

68. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards a continuation after 1990 of the moratorium on commercial whaling.

Mr. Curry: We played a leading role within the International Whaling Commission in the achievement of the moratorium on commercial whaling. We have worked hard to ensure that IWC members adhere to it. It is to be reviewed next year on the basis of major scientific work on whale stocks and appropriate management procedures. We shall consider these results very carefully. If we are not satisfied we shall press for the continuation of the moratorium.

Salmon Fishing

70. Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies his Department is pursuing in order to improve the prospects for the United Kingdom salmon fishing industry.

Mr. Curry: The Government are pursuing a wide range of policies for the conservation and management of salmon stocks which are beneficial to the United Kingdom salmon fishing industry, whether recreational or commercial. In England and Wales, the National Rivers Authority, established in September 1989, has the duty of maintaining, improving and developing salmon fisheries. In Scotland, district salmon fishery boards have similar powers and duties within their district. In Northern Ireland, the Department of Agriculture in conjunction with the Fisheries Conservancy Board and the Foyle Fisheries Commission are responsible for the conservation and protection of salmon.

There are substantial programmes of research and development on salmon which contribute to these aims. Finally, the United Kingdom—through the Commission of the European Communities which is a contracting party—plays an active role in the work of the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation.

Food Irradiation

71. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about his plans for the introduction of food irradiation.

Mr. Maclean: I have nothing to add to my reply given on 27 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) at column 947.

Skilled Labour

72. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure an improvement in the current shortage of skilled labour within the agriculture industry.

Mr. Curry: It is for the industry to respond to changing circumstances and to assess the levels of skilled labour required to sustain viable enterprises. In so doing full advantage should be taken of the excellent skills training facilities available from the agricultural training board and the agricultural colleges.

Farmland Sales

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy towards the practice of dividing farmland in the south of England into small plots and selling them off separately.

Mr. Maclean: This is not a matter for Government intervention. Owners have a fundamental right to dispose of their property as they see fit.

Research and Development

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on his policy regarding research and development in agriculture.

Mr. Curry: I remain firmly committed to supporting work directed at public good issues such as food safety, environmental protection and animal welfare, and to the underpinning of industry's commercial research base through support for far market strategic research.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out in the Official Report a timetable indicating the anticipated progress, for the various commodities, towards the eventual removal of monetary compensatory amounts arising from green currencies.

Mr. Curry: Following pressure from the United Kingdom Government the Council and the Commission have agreed that monetary gaps, and therefore monetary compensatory amounts, should be removed by the end of 1992. The devaluations that were agreed at the last two price settlements represented steps towards this objective. The Commission is to report shortly on ways of completing the process of dismantlement.

Papain

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce guidelines on the administration of the meat tenderising enzyme papain.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 1 November to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) at column 211.

Oilseed Rape

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the presence of pollen and other airborne material derived from flowering crops of oilseed rape giving the concentration in the atmosphere above the crop and the maximum extent of detectable contamination; and if he will give comparable information for other agricultural crops.

Mr. Curry: My Department has no information on the concentration of airborne material from oilseed rape in the atmosphere above the crop, nor comparable information on other crops. I am aware that some experiments have been carried out by individuals to detect the presence of oilseed rape pollen in the atmosphere in the vicinity of the crop and further afield.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take any steps to encourage the breeding and production of varieties of oilseed rape which minimise the dispersal of pollen and other airborne material into the atmosphere.

Mr. Curry: If it were shown conclusively that existing varieties of oilseed rape caused serious problems for human health we would consider what measures were necessary to tackle the problem. The breeding of varieties with specific properties could be one such measure.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of oilseed rape were harvested in 1989; what tonnage was produced; what was the value of the crop; and what subsidy was paid from public funds for its production or processing.

Mr. Curry: The 1989 oilseed rape production survey of England published a 25 October estimated production at 821,000 tonnes from 284,000 hectares. The value of the 1989 crop in the United Kingdom as a whole is still being assessed. Value estimates will be included in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom" due to be published early in 1990. Production aid under the EC oilseeds scheme is being paid on the 1989 crop; final estimates of the amount paid will not be known until at least the end of the 1989-90 marketing year.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the countries in the European Community where evidence of cattle contracting the disease bovine spongiform encephalopathy has been discovered.

Mr. Gummer: The Republic of Ireland.

Cattle Offal

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations with which he consulted about his proposed ban on the use of cattle offal for human consumption.

Mr. Gummer: The following organisations were consulted:

Agricultural Research Council—Meat Research Institute
Agriculture and Food Research Council
Animal Health Distributors (UK) Ltd
Association of British Abattoir Owners
Association of County Councils
Association of District Councils
Association of London Authorities

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to introduce his ban on the use of cattle offal for human consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 9 November 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell).

Food Safety Directorate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the money allocated for his food safety directorate in (a) 1989-90 and (b) 1990-91.

Mr. Gummer: Not all the areas of the Ministry's work that constitute the new food safety directorate are currently subject to decentralised budgetary control for running costs and capital expenditure. Accordingly, there is no readily available estimate of the budgeted costs for this work in 1989-90. For 1990-91, the directorate as a whole will be subject to decentralised budgetary control for running costs and capital expenditure. Budget allocations for 1990-91 remain to be decided. Subject to the outcome of the current public expenditure survey we are planning significant increases in staffing for a number of areas of the directorate's work.

Dr. David Clarke: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date he expects his food safety directorate to start operating.

Mr. Gummer: The new food safety directorate will be in full operation by 20 November. I am proceeding to establish the new consumer panel as quickly as possible.

EEC Foods

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the foods and the tonnage of surplus EEC foods that have been distributed to pensioners in the United Kingdom during the current year.

Mr. Curry: The information sought by the hon. Member is not available in the form requested. However, under the EC surplus food scheme the United Kingdom has some 3,000 tonnes of butter and 3,000 tonnes of beef available for distribution. All this produce has been released from intervention stores, and I have no reason to believe that most of it will not be distributed before the end of 1989. The timing of distribution is a matter for the designated organisations to decide according to local needs and their own capacity. Those who qualify for assistance under this Scheme are people in receipt of income support or family credit and those of no fixed abode or living in welfare hostels. Pensioners falling into one or other of these categories are, of course, eligible to receive produce.

Landlord and Tenant Survey

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the Country Landowners Association landlord and tenant survey.

Mr. Curry: The Country Landowners Association has, of course, informed my right hon. Friend the Minister and me about the results of its survey but no further representations have been received.

WALES

Health Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report for each year since 1978 the number of (a) private beds in non-National Health Service hospitals by hospital, (b) private beds in National Health Service hospitals by health authority and hospital and (c) amenity beds in National Health Service hospitals by health authority and hospitals.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 2 November 1989]: The information requested is given in the following tables in respect of:

(a) the number of private beds in non National Health Service Hospitals (1982 onwards)—table A;

(b) the number of private beds in National Health Service hospitals by health authority and hospital—table B;

(c) the number of amenity beds in the National Health Service by health authority, (1980 onwards)—table C.

A table showing the distribution of amenity beds in NHS hospitals by hospital could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

(m) One emergency bed for flexible use (at either hospital but not at both).
(n) Maximum of 1,095 bed days with no more than 365 bed days at Morriston.
(p) All figures are as at 31 December except for 1989 which are as at 30 September.
(r) Total number of beds/bed days allocated to health authorities which must not be exceeded at any given time.
(s) 1,825 bed days (see (r)).
(t) 2,920 bed days (see (r)).
[1] Authorisations in terms of bed days (1 bed = 365 bed days).

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Head Teachers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from head teachers of schools in the Bilborough area of Nottingham; and what reply has been made.

Mr. Alan Howarth: None.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the head teacher of Warren Hill school, Nottingham; and what reply has been made.

Mr. Alan Howarth: None.

Professional Association of Teachers

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations about recognition for the Professional Association of Teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Professioal Association of Teachers has represented to my right hon. Friend that some local education authorities still decline to recognise the association. That is a choice which they can make, but the Government recognise the PAT as one of the six schoolteacher unions with whom they deal. Under delegated budgeting schools governors will acquire more extensive responsibilities for employment matters and will be free to recognise unions not recognised by the local education authority.

Teacher Training

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will publish the Government's conclusion on future arrangements for the accreditation of courses of initial teacher training.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department and the Welsh Office are publishing today a joint circular on the approval of initial teacher training courses. The circular takes account of the many comments which we received in reply to the consultation document "Future Arrangements for the Accreditation of Courses of Initial Teacher Training" which was published in May of this year.

The circular provides for the reconstitution of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education from 1 January and for a revised system of local committees and sets out new criteria for course approval together with a commentary of guidance.

A separate circular will be issued in Northern Ireland, where the same new arrangements and criteria will apply to initial teacher training courses. Copies have been placed in the Library.

I have also today reappointed Professor William Taylor, Vice-Chancellor of Hull university, as chairman of CATE until June 1993.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, in granting leave for notice to be served to discontinue the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham schools in Deptford, what decision he has taken in principle on whether to fund one city technology college or a pair of city technology colleges to take the place of the two existing schools in 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: The proposal put forward by the Haberdashers' Company was for one funding agreement to be made with my right hon. Friend. In granting leave to the governors of the existing schools to discontinue them and to establish a CTC in succession, my right hon. Friend has proceeded on the basis that a single institution would be established but that single sex provision would continue. Further discussions are being held with the company to determine the detailed institutional and administrative arrangements necessary to achieve this.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Eye Tests

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether there has been any change in the number of persons seeking eye tests in Northern Ireland since changes were introduced.

Mr. Needham: Reliable information about the effect of the changes introduced from 1 April 1989 on the number of persons seeking eye tests in Northern Ireland is not yet available.

Environmental Research

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his Department's role in the radioactivity, research and environment monitoring committee since its inception.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Northern Ireland interest on the radioactivity research and environmental monitoring committee has been represented since its inception in 1986 by the chief alkali and radiochemical inspector of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, who has played a full part in the committee's work of reviewing and collating the programmes of research and monitoring undertaken by both Government and industry.

Saintfields Road, Castlereagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what complaints he has received from residents at Saintfields road and Ivanhoe avenue in connection with the manhole cover at 590 Saintfields road, Castlereagh, relating to the distress arising from the noise caused by traffic travelling over this cover; what steps he has taken over this matter in 1989; and if he will consider the re-location of the manhole and cover so that it is in the centre of the traffic lane.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We received one complaint. We acted to solve the problem. We are pleased to have received a further letter which ends: "I am most grateful to you for having this complaint attended to so quickly and efficiently". I have passed the praise to those who do the work. It would not be feasible to relocate the manhole as this would involve the realignment of the sewer.

Sheep

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many non maedi-visna tested sheep were accepted to the Department of Agriculture's sheep improvement scheme, in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: We do not know. I will write to the hon. Member about the testing procedure for accreditation.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what requirements must be met before sheep will be accepted on to the Department of Agriculture's Northern Ireland sheep improvement scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The sheep improvement scheme has two main parts: on-farm recording of lambs and performance testing of ram lambs.

To be registered as a recording flock a veterinary surgeon must have certified that all sheep in the flock are free from disease and physical defects. The flock must contain at least 20 ewes, in the case of a flock containing sheep of the blackface breed, and in the case of any other flock, five ewes.

Ram lambs accepted for performance testing must be from fully maedi-visna accredited flocks and have been vaccinated for the main clostridial infections and pasturella pneumonia at least four weeks before the commencement of the test. The Department also assesses ram lambs for weight and size for age, quality and soundness to determine suitability for entry to test.

Schools (Promotional Allowances)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the six secondary schools in Northern Ireland which have promotional allowance values which are higher than that appropriate to their group; and why this is the position.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 6 November 1989]: The six schools are the following junior high schools:

Clounagh, Portadown
Killicomaine, Portadown
Lurgan Boys
Lurgan Girls
St. Mary's Lurgan
Tandragee

The reason these schools have a promotion allowance value higher than that appropriate to their group is to ensure that they are at no disadvantage in terms of promotion opportunities when compared with other secondary schools of similar size.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy there have been in Northern Ireland to date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 7 November 1989]: Twenty-three.

Staff Midwives

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff midwives employed in hospitals throughout Northern Ireland have been given an F grade in the recent clinical grading exercise; and what percentage this represents of the total staff midwives employed.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 November 1989]: At the date of regrading (1 April 1988) the number of whole-time equivalent staff midwives in post in Northern Ireland was 779 and of that number 11 posts were given an F grade in the new clinical grading structure. This represents 1·4 per cent. of the total number of staff midwife posts.

In Northern Ireland the health and personal social services are fully integrated and the above figures include those staff midwife posts in a community setting as these cannot be identified separately at this time.

Beef Exports

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what quantity of beef is exported annually to West Germany from Northern Ireland for human consumption.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 7 November 1989]: Exports of beef from Northern Ireland to West Germany were:

	Beef Exports (tonnes)
1989 (Jan-Sept.)	853
1988	660
1987	1,104
1986	997

Fixed Penalties, Larne

Mr Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many fixed penalty fines of £12 were levied by Larne traffic wardens during 1989 in respect of parking in the unmarked, unrestricted car park area of Narrow Guage road, Larne, adjacent to the entrance to the Larne shopping complex and Larne Guardian prior to proper restrictive road markings being put down; and how many fixed penalty tickets have been issued in respect of the same area since proper markings to prohibit parking were laid down in 1989; (2) whether he will seek powers to arrange for the £12 fixed penalty fines paid in respect of parking in this formerly non-restricted area, prior to road markings being put down to prohibit parking, to be refunded.

Mr. Cope: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

CIVIL SERVICE

Leaded Petrol

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if any vehicles belonging to, or used by, the Civil Service run on leaded petrol.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 8 November 1989]: I cannot answer for the Civil Service as a whole, but in my Department all vehicles which can be adapted to use unleaded petrol have now been adapted.

Environmentally Beneficial Policies

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will give details of any initiatives he has taken in the last year within the Civil Service to adopt environmentally beneficial policies.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 8 November 1989]: It is for each Government Department to decide which environmentally beneficial policies it adopts. In my Department we have initiated the use of unleaded petrol and recycled paper, and adopted a number of energy efficiency measures.

TRANSPORT

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents have occurred in the last year on the M1 motorway in the dark on unlit sections that are within one mile of a lit section.

Mr. Atkins: The road accident report form records the light condition at the scene of an accident. The lighting condition of nearby sections of road are not readily available. In 1988, there were 948 accidents on the M1, with 282 occurring during the hours of darkness. For the accidents in darkness, 193 were on lit sections of road, 86 on unlit sections, and three on sections where light conditions were not recorded.

Emergency Transport Plans

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the main findings of the review of the inland transport organisation conducted by his defence planning and emergencies division.

Mr. Atkins: The inland transport organisation is maintained by the Department to provide a control structure for the surface transport industries, should it be necessary, in a time of international crisis or war. The main changes recommended by the review were:

(a) all levels of the organisation should be activated relatively early in crisis to avoid a change in control arrangements during a war;

(b) requests for transport which could not be obtained, during a crisis or war, by normal commercial means, should be fed into the organisation at the district or equivalent level;

(c) the arrangements for the earmarking of road vehicles in peacetime should be improved;

(d) the initial training in civil defence for members of the organisation should be provided by county (or equivalent) emergency planning officers as part of the training they provide to volunteers generally;

(e) regional seminars should no longer be linked with those of the regional port and shipping organisation, and should last no more than half a day.

These recommendations are now being implemented.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which option has been chosen from those arising out of the DVIOT division feasibility study into location of road vehicles in an emergency; when he expects arrangements for the location of vehicles in an emergency to be in operation; how much the implementation of these proposals will cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The preferred option would allow on-line inquiries of the goods operator licensing database within each traffic area office. It is estimated that development of this option would cost £22,600, with an annual support cost of £14,300 thereafter. No decision has been taken about development.

Air Traffic Controllers

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the number of air traffic controllers (a) recruited in each of the last three years, and (b) who have left the service in the last three years; what are the estimated figures for recruitment and wastage for each of the next three years; and if he will give all these figures for each air traffic control centre in Great Britain.

Mr. McLoughlin: This is a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority and the management of the national air traffic services. I will draw the hon. Member's question to the attention of the authority's chairman.

SS Derbyshire

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make available to the bereaved families of the crew of the SS Derbyshire the draft report on the sinking of this vessel.

Mr. McLoughlin: In January 1989 copies of the typescript report of court were distributed to the solicitors to the parties to the formal investigation into the loss of MV Derbyshire. Copies of the supplemental report and order as to costs were distributed to the solicitors last month. At the formal investigation two firms of solicitors acted for dependants of those lost in the Derbyshire tragedy.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the cost to date and the estimated final cost of British Rail's publicity consultation process both to those along the rail link route and those in the vicinity of Waterloo and King's Cross main line stations.

Mr. Portillo: I do not have this information. This is a matter for British Rail.

Roads (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a further announcement on the implementation of those proposals in the White Paper, "Roads to Prosperity", which apply to roads in the Chelmsford area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend expects to publish a roads report later this year, setting out in a little more detail the schemes in the expanded road programme.

We are pressing ahead with the appointment of design agents for our new schemes and studies. We recently announced details of the appointments made so far of consultants and agent authorities to prepare 53 new road schemes and seven new studies. Further announcements on the remaining schemes, including the new motorway scheme from M25 to Chelmsford and the A12 Chelmsford bypass widening, will be made over the next few months.

DEFENCE

Aircraft (Fluid)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, further to his answer on 6 November, Official Report, column 486, he will make a further statement on the circumstances which led to the discharge of fluid from an aircraft operated by A and AEE Boscombe Down on 25 October.

Mr. Neubert: The aircraft was involved in a routine training exercise during which it was intended to release chemical agent training mixture over troops exercising on the Porton battle run. The agent used was polyethylene glycol 300, which is harmless to humans, plants and animals. The purpose of the exercise was to provide the troops with as realistic as possible a simulation of a chemical attack. Because of technical problems with the aircraft's communications equipment, the pilot was unable to complete the release of the liquid as planned and had to jettison the remaining contents in order to bring the aircraft below the safe maximum landing weight. It was this discharge of liquid which probably caused damage to paintwork on a number of cars in the area.

An investigation is under way into this incident. It will include a review of existing procedures.

As I have already indicated, the Ministry of Defence will consider claims for compensation from those whose property has been damaged.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Dwellings

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was (a) the number of dwellings let by local authorities between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989, (b) the number of local authority dwellings taken out of management during that period and not available for letting, (c) the number of local authority dwellings vacant and available for letting on 31 March 1989 in (i) Greater London, (ii) metropolitan areas outside London, (iii) non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (iv) all non-metropolitan areas and (v) England as a whole;

(2) what was (a) the number of local authority dwellings let to new non-secure tenants, (b) the number of local authority dwellings let to new non-secure tenants who were homeless households between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 in (i) Greater London, (ii) metropolitan areas outside London, (iii) non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (iv) all non-metropolitan areas and (v) England as a whole;

(3) what was (a) the total number of households and (b) the number of homeless households housed by local authorities (i) through NMS or LAMS, (ii) through HALO, (iii) through other mobility schemes, between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 in (i) Greater London, (ii) metropolitan areas outside London, (iii) non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (iv) all non-metropolitan areas and (v) England as a whole;

(4) what was (a) the total number of households and (b) the number of homeless households housed by local authorities through nomination to housing associations between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 in (i) Greater London, (ii) metropolitan areas outside London, (iii) non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (iv) all non-metropolitan areas and (v) England as a whole;

(5) what was the number of dwellings let by local authorities to homeless households referred by other authorities under the Housing Act 1985, section 68, between 1 April 1988 and 31 March 1989 in (a) Greater London, (b) metropolitan areas outside London, (c) non-metropolitan areas in the south-east, (d) all non-metropolitan areas and (e) England as a whole.

Mr. Chope: The information for April 1989 is not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member when it becomes available.

House of Commons Terrace (Guano)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual budget for the cost of removal of guano from the Commons Terrace; and what was the actual cost of this operation in the last complete financial year.

Mr. Chope: There is no separate annual budget for this task, which is carried out as part of the cleansing contract. The actual cost in 1988-89 for removing guano from the entire Terrace was £4,000.

Asylum Seekers (Turkey)

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the outcome of the meeting held at his Department on 9 November with representatives of the Association of London Authorities and certain London boroughs and with hon. Members in response to their requests for financial assistance in respect of the extra expenditure incurred by authorities in 1989-90 as a result of the recent influx of asylum seekers from Turkey.

Mr. David Hunt: At the meeting at which my hon. Friends the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Home Affairs were also present, I announced a scheme of Government grants to help local authorities with substantial unforeseen and unavoidable expenditure incurred this year directly as a result of the influx. Grant will be payable towards eligible expenditure on the basis of claims submitted by local authorities. The scheme will be administered by the Department of the Environment. Proposals for detailed rules will be discussed with the local authority associations.

I also said that that we would look at the boroughs' case for meeting extra housing needs in the context of this year's and future housing investment programme rounds, and that the Housing Corporation had indicated that it would take account of bids from housing associations for schemes for housing asylum seekers when making allocations to associations.

The association was also told that the Government were reviewing current arrangements for receiving unplanned arrivals and would consult the local authority associations as appropriate.

Water Authorities (Criminal Proceedings)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department intends to finance expenditure incurred by the residuary water authorities in relation to any criminal proceedings brought against them.

Mr. Howard: Substantive provision for this new service will be sought in a winter Supplementary Estimate for class x, vote 9. Pending parliamentary approval of the Estimate, urgent expenditure will be met by repayable advances from the Contingency Fund.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Palace of Westminster (Health and Safety)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council on which dates environmental health officers from Westminster City council have carried out health and safety inspections at the Palace of Westminster over the last five years; which areas were inspected; and if he will place copies of each report in the Library.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: At the invitation of the authorities of the House, an environmental health officer from Westminster city council carried out inspections in the House on 12 March, 23 April, 5 and 13 June 1986, 29 January 1987 and June 1988. All inspections were of the Refreshment Department kitchens. A further series of such visits is planned for the end of the year. The reports of environmental health officers are internal management documents but are available to the Catering Sub-Committee.

Library (Public Information Desk)

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make arrangements for the public information desk in the Library to be manned from 9 am on working days.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I will ask the Library Sub-Committee of the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) to consider the opening time of the Library's public information office at its next meeting.

Creche Facilities

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will consider equipping and staffing hospitality rooms A and B for use as a crèche for parliamentary staff and members.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. Planning for a day nursery is being considered in the context of the new parliamentary buildings.

Hospitality Rooms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will list the number of occasions on which the hospitality rooms A and B have been booked by (a) Labour and (b) Conservative Members during the past two years.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: During the past two years Dining Rooms A and B have been reserved on 1,399 occasions by Conservative Members; 167 times by Labour Members; 81 times by Members of other opposition parties; and 57 times by Members of the other place.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will list the numbers of outside groups that have used hospitality rooms A and B in the Commons broken down into (a) commercial organisations, (b) voluntary bodies and charities and (c) other groups during the past two years.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Functions organised in accordance with the banqueting regulations are the responsibility of the sponsoring Member. It is therefore the practice of the Catering Sub-Committe not to divulge the information requested.

PRIME MINISTER

Advisers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what guidance she issues about when advisers (a) should and (b) should not speak in public.

The Prime Minister: All civil servants are subject to rules of conduct which are set out in the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code. Similar rules apply to other advisers. General guidance on the application of those rules to the question of speaking in public is given in chapter 6 of the personnel management handbook, copies of which are available in the House Libraries.

Iraqi Business Men

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister whether she is satisfied that no involvement of Iraqi business men in chemical-defence and communication industries in the United Kingdom exists which compromises national interests.

The Prime Minister: We use all information and legal powers available to us to control illegal or improper procurement activities in this country. The export of chemical, nuclear and defence and other sensitive goods is subject to strict export licensing regimes. In addition, supplies of British defence equipment to Iraq and Iran continue to be governed by the guidelines introduced in 1985.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison staff have been either suspended or disciplined since 1986 for the alleged or actual possession or importation of an unlawful drug into a prison establishment in England or Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Since January 1986 11 members of staff have been prosecuted or subjected to disciplinary proceedings for drug-related offences.

Civil Service Dispersal

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to relocate his Department's offices to the north-west of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: There are already several Home Office establishments in the north-west. I am at present considering the possible relocation from the London area of a number of Home Office functions, but decisions have not yet been reached either in principle or on the areas to which relocation might take place.

Parties

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is proposed to make it a criminal offence to organise a party for over 500 people for which admission is charged without a licence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is already an offence under the London Government Act 1963, the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 or the Private Places of Entertainment (Licensing) Act 1967 to provide music and dancing without a licence if it is for the public entertainment or at a private entertainment promoted for private gain. We are considering whether penalties under these Acts need to be increased; and whether steps should be taken to confiscate profits where an event is in breach of entertainment licensing law.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of inmates who were put on report in prisons in England and Wales during the last 12 months for being in unlawful possession of drugs.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in the form requested. But some 1,974 charges of possession of a controlled drug were dealt with by governors or boards of visitors in prison service establishments in 1988.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of (a) men and (b) women being held as category A prisoners and who are over 65 years of age in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: According to information available centrally, which is approximate, two men and no women aged 65 and over were held in security category A in prison service establishments in England and Wales on 30 September 1989.

Drug Offences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of United Kingdom citizens now living abroad who are wanted by police in the United Kingdom for suspected drug-related offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not available. No separate record is kept of the number of wanted persons thought to be living abroad who are suspected of drug-related offences. The police work closely with their colleagues abroad to identify wanted persons and to take action were possible.

Rule 43 Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women being held on rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 1 November.

Mr. Mellor: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Prisoners held in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales under Prison Rule 43 and Young Offender Institution Rule 46: by type of segregation, age group and sex, 30 June 1989

	Own protection	Good order or discipline
Aged under 21
males	200	40
females	6	2
Adults
males	1,970	189
females	33	6

Prisoners (Drug Addicts)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of registered drug addicts in prisons in England and Wales on 1 November.

Mr. Mellor: There is no system of registration of addicts. The number of addicts in prison service establishments at any one time is not known. During 1988, 1,644 addicts were notified to the chief medical officer at the Home Office by prison medical officers in the United Kingdom. An addict may be notified more than once during a year and counting addicts at their first notification in 1988, 1,311 were first notified by prison medical officers, as shown in table 10a of Home Office Statistical Bulletin Issue 13/89, "Statistics of Drug Addicts Notified to the Home Office, United Kingdom, 1988", a copy of which is in the Library.

Birmingham Pub Bombing

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the replies by the right hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid), Official Report, 26 October at columns 1032-33, from which month in 1986 the period covered by the Assistant Chief Constable of Yorkshire's inquiry commences; and whether the inquiry will look at material collected by the Devon and Cornwall police in the course of their investigations into the conviction of those found guilty of the Birmingham pub bombing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The investigation being carried out by the Assistant Chief Constable from West Yorkshire into the work and practices of the West Midlands serious crime squad will concentrate on the period since 1 January 1986. However, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) indicated in his reply on 26 October, if the inquiry were to give rise to doubt about earlier cases, any convictions which arose from those cases would be examined.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the present work projects being undertaken at Wandsworth prison; and if he will list them and the money that has been allocated for each project.

Mr. Mellor: The following major building projects are in hand at Her Majesty's Prison Wandsworth:

Project	Latest available estimate of cost £
General security upgrade	865,000
Improve drainage	1,690,000
New reception building	2,282,000
Improve perimeter security	220,000

Slopping Out

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of prisons in England and Wales where there is only a slopping-out toilet system for inmates.

Mr. Mellor: There are at present 36 establishments where prisoners have no access to night sanitation and 31 where not all prisoners have such access.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the considerations that led to the decision being taken that the scenarios for the regional civil defence exercises in the United Kingdom should be built around periods of international tension or conventional war.

Mr. John Patten: Regional civil defence exercises are designed to test local authority plans. The local authorities involved have agreed that it would be sensible for the first series of such exercises to concentrate on the initial phase of a possible war crisis, covering a period of international tension. In due course, consideration will be given to whether these exercises should be extended to include a period of possible hostilities.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the reasons for the renaming of the Civil Defence college at Easingwold.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 5 June at columns 514-15.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by region, all the civil defence exercises planned for the remainder of 1989 and for the whole of 1990.

Mr. John Patten: Civil defence exercises are held by a number of organisations, and a comprehensive list is not maintained centrally. In England and Wales, regional civil defence exercises to be held jointly by local authorities and the Home Office are planned for region 3 (East Midlands) and region 4 (Eastern) in November this year, and for region 2 (North East) in 1990.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those items of exercise-related expenditure eligible for civil defence grant from his Department.

Mr. John Patten: All expenditure incurred by local and police authorities in connection with their participation in civil defence exercises is eligible for grant, provided that the conditions of the Civil Defence (Grant) Regulations 1953 (S.I. No. 1953/1777) (as amended) are met.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will update the arrangements his Department has made towards competitive tendering for civil defence in (a) wartime emergencies and (b) peacetime emergencies.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office procurement policy is to place contracts with competent suppliers which represent, as far as possible, the best overall value for money after inviting firms to submit tenders in competition.

Party Conferences (Security)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional resources were made available for policing and security at the 1989 (a) Labour party conference at Brighton, and (b) Conservative party conference at Blackpool; and what were the costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief officers of the forces concerned that the additional costs of policing the 1989 party conferences were estimated as follows:

Conference	Force	Additional cost (£)
Labour	Sussex	4,000
Conservative	Lancashire	1,080,000

The level of resources provided for the policing of party conferences is an operational matter for the chief officer of police in the light of all the circumstances, including an assessment of the threat of terrorist attack and a recognition that there is a serious threat to members of the Government.

The additional costs of policing will be met by the Sussex and Lancashire police authorities. Under the normal funding arrangements, the Government contribute both directly through police grant—which is at 51 per cent. —and indirectly through block grant.

The parties themselves also incur costs on specific security measures at their conferences.

Police (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what requests he has received for increases in the manpower of the South Yorkshire police in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications have been made in the years set out in the following table:

Year	Posts applied for	Posts approved
1980-81	278	120
1983-84	[1]54	—

Hon. Members (Age Limit)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to review the minimum age limit for persons wishing to become hon. Members.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Cyclists (Prosecutions)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of prosecutions of pedal cyclists for riding without proper lights on the cycle in each of the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: Information held centrally for 1986 to 1988 is given in the table.

Persons proceeded against for lighting and reflector offences on pedal cycles[1]

Tote

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions his Department has commissioned an independent inquiry or investigation into the privatisation of the Tote; who conducted the inquiry; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only independent inquiry into the feasibility of privatising the Tote has been conducted by Lloyd's Merchant bank; its conclusions were submitted in confidence to the Government in April and are still under consideration.

Mr. John Kamara

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet received a report from Merseyside police into allegations by Mr. John Kamara of wrongful conviction; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No. Mr. Kamara has submitted further representations about his case which require investigation. Once the inquiries are complete and we have received the report, we will decide whether there are grounds to justify our intervention.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Jamacian citizens were initially refused leave to enter the United Kingdom as not being genuine vistors (a) between January and October 1988, inclusive and (b) between January and October 1989 inclusive;

(2) how many overseas visitors were initially refused leave to enter and were removed from the United Kingdom (a) between January and October 1988, inclusive and (b) between January and October 1989, inclusive; and what were their nationalities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 3 November 1989]: The total numbers of passengers by nationality who were refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom between January and August of 1988 and 1989 are given in the table; figures for September and October 1989 are not yet available. It is not possible from the information available centrally to ascertain how many sought entry as visitors.

Of the 258 Jamaican citizens removed between January and August 1988 and the 561 removed between January and August 1989, 191 and 484 respectively failed to satisfy the immigration officer that they qualified as genuine visitors under paragraph 22 of the rules. Some of the remainder may also have sought entry as visitors and, if so, would have been refused for other reasons.

Duty Solicitor Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by location, for the last 12 months, where the 24-hour duty solicitor scheme has been withdrawn.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

In the last 12 months local 24-hour duty solicitor schemes have ceased in the areas covered by the St. Albans and Tunbridge Wells committees (four police stations in all).

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to review payment to solicitors who carry out the 24-hour duty solicitor arrangement.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to eply,

Payments to solicitors who carry out the 24-hour duty solicitor arrangements are reviewed annually as part of the discussions on legal aid rates between the Lord Chancellor and the Law Society.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Unemployed Persons

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what information he has on the work of the independent agency commissioned to explore the impact of the increased maximum period of disqualification on decisions about leaving or taking work as well as the effects on the circumstances of those who are disqualified;

(2) if he will report on the results of a survey conducted by his Department in the first three months of the current year into the effects of increasing to 26 weeks the maximum period of disqualification for unemployment benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 8 November 1989 at columns 672-73.

Claimants (Stockton)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are receiving benefits from his Department in the parliamentary constituency of Stockton, South; and what is the total cost of such benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Credit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the reduction in spending on family credit in 1989-90 if child benefit was increased in line with inflation.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Estimates based on the current caseload are that family credit spending in 1989-90 will be £16 million more than if child benefit had been increased in April 1989 in line with inflation.

Elderly People

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of elderly persons who are (a) residents of independent sector residential nursing homes and (b) in receipt of benefit and unable to meet the full costs of that accommodation and are being subsidised by relatives to the extent of 0-£10 weekly; £10-£20 weekly and above £20 weekly, and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information in the form requested is not available.

Child Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the cost of increasing child benefit in line with earnings in each of the last two years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The cost (net of savings on other benefits) would have been about £260 million in 1988-89 and a further £320 million in 1989-90.

Offices (Doncaster and Wath-on-Dearne)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people served by the social security offices in (a) Doncaster and (b) Wath-on-Dearne have been refused loans by officers of the social fund since its inception on the grounds that the applicants lacked sufficient income to repay such loans.

Mr. Nicholas Scott: From April 1988 to September 1989, on 58 occasions in the Doncaster East local office area, 146 in the Doncaster West local office area and 27 in the Wath-on-Dearne local office area, the social fund officer refused a loan application giving as a reason the applicants' inability to repay. This represents 0·8 per cent., 2 per cent. and 0·6 per cent. of the applications processed for these areas respectively.

Hardship Allowance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the figures for (a) applications and (b) the take-up of the special hardship allowance for under 18-year-olds with no YTS.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the period 12 September 1988 to 3 November 1989 a total of 17,996 applications were considered for a direction by the Secretary of State under the severe hardship provision. In 11,902 cases (66 per cent.) a direction was given to enable payment of income support to be made.

London Pay Area

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many EOs-LO1s currently work in the London pay area; and how many will be required following the implementation of the operational strategy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In October 1989 there were 3,257 EOs-LO1s employed in the London pay areas.

It is not possible to give an answer as to how many EOs-LO1s will be required after the implementation of the operational strategy.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many higher executive officers in his Department's offices will be surplus to requirements in the London pay area following the changes brought about by the operational strategy.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is not possible to give an answer as to how many, if any, HEOs will be surplus to requirements after the implementation of the operational strategy.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many EOs-LO1s in the London pay area have fitted for promotion markings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: EO-LO1s' fitness for promotion is assessed only if they apply for a promotion exercise. In the most recent competitions for promotion to higher executive officer in the Department's London regions and headquarters, there were 780 applications from EO-LO1s in the London pay area who were assessed by their line managers as being fitted for promotion.

Crisis at Christmas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he is planning to give help to the charity Crisis at Christmas towards the cost of its work for homeless people over the Christmas period; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government are well aware of the valuable work being done by Crisis at Christmas but they have not approached my right hon. Friend for assistance this year.

Pensioners

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Walsall, North on 6 March, Official Report, column 465, what percentage of single pensioners in 1986 had a total income of less than £50 at today's prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A gross income of £50 at April 1989 prices was equivalent to a gross income of £42·79 at 1986 prices. In 1986 9 per cent. of single pensioners had a gross income below £42·79 per week. Source: Family Expenditure Survey.

Disabled People

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the cost of each of the 10 immediate improvements in benefits for disabled people and their carers, announced in his uprating statement on 25 October, Official Report, columns 841 to 854.

Mr. Scott: The costs of each measure in the first full year (1991-92 unless otherwise stated) are set out as follows:

1. Increase in the adult disability premium: £18 million.
2. Alignment of disabled child premium with adult rate: £8 million.
3. Carer's Premium: £15 million.
4. Abolition of Attendance Allowance six month waiting period for the terminally ill: £26 million.
5. Attendance Allowance for children under two years old: £5 million.
6. Extension of Invalid Care Allowance to many carers as a result of 4 and 5 above: £3 million.
7. Extension of Mobility Allowance to the deaf-blind: £5 million.

8 and 9. Increases in the Invalid Care Allowance earnings rule and in the incapacity benefits Therapeutic Earnings Limit together with the extension of Invalidity Benefit to those on Employment Rehabilitation Courses: less than £1 million.

10. Additional funds for the Independent Living Fund (1990-91): £19 million.

Families With Children

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the cost of the extra £70 million he is spending on families with children by each measure announced in his uprating statement on 25 October, Official Report, columns 841 to 854.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The cost of extra measures to help least well-off families with children in the first full year (1991-92) will be as follows:

Addition of 50p to family premium in Income Support —£34 million.

Addition of £1 to adult credit in Family Credit—£16 million.

Addition of £1·10 to lone parent premium in Housing Benefit and Community Charge Benefit—£2 million.

Raising of Housing Benefit disregard on earnings to £25 for lone parents—£11 million.

Raising Social Fund Maternity Grant from £85 to £100 —£3 million.

Two other measures will extend further help to less well off families:

Raising Disabled Child Premium to level of adult Disability Premium—£8 million.

That part of the cost of extending Attendance Allowance for children under 2 which will benefit families in Income Support—£1 million.

Child Benefit

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of (a) families with children and (b) children which would not be brought into income-related benefits if child benefit were increased in line with inflation in 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: The effects of not increasing child benefit should not be viewed in isolation. For example, it is important to have regard to the extra help which will be made available to families with children. However, in very broad terms, the decision not to uprate child benefit this year is expected to increase the family credit caseload by up to 5,000 in 1990-91; by a few thousand for income support; and by an even smaller number for housing benefit. It is estimated that these families may include up to 16,000 children overall.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of uprating child benefit in line with inflation in 1990-91.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To increase the rate of child benefit in line with the increase of 7·6 per cent. in the retail prices index between September 1988 and September 1989 would cost around £250 million net of savings on other benefits.

Social Fund

Ms. Harriet Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the budget for the social fund will be in 1990, broken down into community care grants, budgeting loans and crisis loans, in both gross and net terms.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	Community care grants	Budgeting and crisis loans
Gross	61	144
Net	61	39

Disability

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he expects section 7 of the Disabled Persons Act 1986 to be implemented.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

We have received proposed guidelines from a disability organisation for the implementation of section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. The Government's position on the implementation of section 7 will be made clear in the White Paper on Community Care which will be published shortly.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date he expects to publish the first report to Parliament on the development of community care services under section 11 of the 1986 Disabled Persons Act.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

The first report will be laid before Parliament before the end of this year.

SCOTLAND

Domiciliary Care

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet representatives of Scottish local authorities to discuss the new arrangements regarding Department of Social Security payments to local authorities for domiciliary care, to be introduced in April 1991.

Mr. Lang: I met the social work committee of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities about the Government's proposals for community care on 8 September and agreed that further discussions would be arranged, as appropriate, after publication of the Government's detailed proposals in a White Paper.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy to include in the plans for Scottish Enterprise a body to ensure that no funds from Scottish Enterprise go to businesses or activities which are likely to increase pollution or to endanger the environment;

(2) what requirements will be included in the plans for Scottish Enterprise to ensure that no funds from Scottish Enterprise go to businesses or activities which are likely to increase pollution or to endanger the environment.

Mr. Lang: We intend that Scottish Enterprise will promote economic development and training in lowland Scotland, and further the improvement of the environment. There is already a range of statutory and other safeguards designed to prevent businesses from causing unacceptable pollution or damage to the environment.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the requirement to provide the ages of those included on the poll tax register; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations on this issue.

X-ray Equipment (Roodlands Hospital)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the age and condition of X-ray equipment at Roodlands hospital, Haddington; and what steps are taken to ensure that the equipment complies with required standards for the examination of patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about the equipment at Roodlands hospital is a matter for Lothian health board.

Young People

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the numbers of (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds who stayed on at school, non-advanced further education or higher education in the current year; and what percentage these totals represented of the estimated total population in these age groups in Scotland in 1989.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 9 November 1989]: The information for 1989 and in the form requested is not available.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers and age group percentages of (a) 16-year-olds and (b) 17-year-olds (i) continuing in school education, (ii) entering non-advanced further education, (iii) entering higher education, (iv) entering YTS, (v) entering employment, in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 9 November 1989]: The information requested is not available in the form requested since young people may enter the various categories of education and employment more than once in a year. Information on the educational and economic activity of 16 and 17-year-olds in Scotland at autumn 1986 and 1987 is given in the table.

	1986				1987
	16-year-olds		17-year-olds		16-year-olds		17-year-olds

Total population	82,400	100	83,800	100	79,600	100	82,000	100

Notes:

1. School pupils include some 16-year-olds who were too young to leave school the previous session.
2. Many of the young people on YTS are also participating in part-time non-advanced FE.
3. Because of rounding the columns may not sum to the totals shown.

Note—Similar information for earlier years is not readily available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

House of Fraser Holdings

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of the Department of Trade and Industry report into House of Fraser Holdings which was leaked to Lonrho/The Observer; whether this numbered copy is or was in the possession of the fraud squad; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

Investigations into the leak of the report are continuing and I cannot comment on the matters to which the hon. Member refers.

Car Imports and Exports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what tax is levied on cars imported from Japan; and what tax is levied on British cars exported to Japan.

Mr. Redwood: Cars imported into the United Kingdom from Japan are subject to an import duty of 10 per cent. Like all other cars they are also subject to a car tax of 10 per cent. and, at point of sale, VAT of 15 per cent. No import duty is levied on cars imported into Japan; however, all new cars are subject to consumption tax of 6 per cent. and acquisition tax of 5 per cent. Each time a car is sold secondhand in Japan, it is subject to consumption tax of 3 per cent.

Jaguar plc

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the exact time on the afternoon of Tuesday 31 October at which he informed the board of Jaguar of his decision to relinquish the Government's golden share.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Sir John Egan was informed at 11.45 on the morning of Tuesday 31 October.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is his estimate of the import content of heavy commercial motor vehicles exported from the United Kingdom in 1988 and 1989 to date having regard to their provenance; what was the corresponding figure in 1959, 1972 and 1979; and what effect free trade with the EEC has had on the United Kingdom content and on output and employment in the United Kingdom heavy commercial vehicle industry;

(2) what is his estimate of the import content of motor cars exported from the United Kingdom in 1988 and in 1989 to date having regard to their provenance; what was the corresponding figure in 1959, 1972 and 1979; and what effect free trade with the EEC hs had on the United Kingdom content and on output and employment in the United Kingdom motor car industry;

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 9 November 1989]: The information is not available.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1963, 1968, 1974, 1979, 1984 and 1989 to date the ratio of imports to output of (a) textiles and clothing and (b) chemicals, and man-made fibres, together with the relevant weights in the index of manufacturing output;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1963, 1968, 1974, 1979, 1984 and 1989to date the ratio of imports to output of (i) metals and (ii) rubber and plastics together with the relevant weights in the index of manufacturing output.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 9 November 1989]: The readily available information is:

WALES

Conservation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress on his proposals for changes to the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission in Wales; and if he will publish the date by which he hopes such changes will be operational.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Detailed discussions with the statutory agencies concerned on the practical arrangements for establishing the new Countryside Council for Wales are continuing. Subject to parliamentary approval, the changes will take effect from 1 April 1991.

Health Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) to how many medical units in Wales he expects to award self-governing status in April 1991;

(2) if he will list those medical units in Wales which have expressed an interest in self-governing status.

Mr. Grist: Since to date no applications have been received from health units in Wales seeking self-governing status it is not possible to calculate how many will be agreed by April 1991.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has set a date by which medical units in Wales must express interest in applying for self-governing status.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has not set a deadline for the receipt of applications for self-governing status.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to award self-governing status to medical units in Wales other than acute hospitals with over 250 beds.

Mr. Grist: Whilst self-governing status is likely to be particularly appropriate to major acute hospitals, all hospitals and health units in Wales are potentially eligible.

Porthmadog Bypass

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement of his policy with regard to the construction of a bypass for the town of Porthmadog on the A487 trunk road; and whether a projected route exists for such a bypass.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: As indicated in "Roads in Wales —Progress and Plans for the 1990s" the case for improving the A487 at Porthmadog is under consideration. That is still the position. No route has been projected for a by-pass.

"Action on Litter"

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the additional cost on district councils in Wales which would arise from the full implementation of the proposals in the Government's White Paper entitled "Action on Litter", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have made no specific estimate. We do not think that the cost of the proposals set out in the consultation paper need impose a major burden on local authorities since cleaning and other anti-litter measures are already an important part of their day-to-day activities.

In so far as there might be some additional cost, as with all new duties on local authorities, Ministers will take these into account in their deliberations on the revenue support grant.

Water Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the areas in Wales where domestic water supplies are affected by lead contamination.

Mr. Grist: All areas in Wales should, by the end of next month, comply with the lead standard in the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (80/778/EEC).

The new Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 (S.I. 1989 No. 1147) set a tighter standard for lead in drinking water than the EC directive, reflecting the Government's long-standing policy of reducing exposure to lead in the environment. These regulations provide that where there is a risk that even a single sample might exceed the standard, the water undertaker shall treat the water to remove the risk, if this is practical, or consider replacement of the lead piping. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted an undertaking from Dwr Cymru that all supplies which might potentially breach the new standard will be identified and, where appropriate, remedial measures determined by April 1991. This exercise is in hand.

NHS Spending

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange for the total per capita spending on the National Health Service in Wales to be increased to the same amount as that of Scotland.

Mr. Grist: Both the health care needs of the population and the cost of providing appropriate services depend on many factors, some of which vary significantly between Wales and Scotland. To provide the same standard of health care does not require the same per capita expenditure in each country therefore, planned spending on the National Health Service in Wales in 1989-90 is £1,382·8 million (gross) which includes £10 million to fund the review body pay awards which were announced in February 1989 and £5 million additional provision towards the cost of implementing the NHS review. We are now spending over £37 per week per household on the National Health Service compared with £11 per week per household in 1978-79.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Angola

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will raise within the United Nations the new evidence of the atrocities perpetrated on SWAPO detainees in its prison camps in Angola, and that hundreds of Namibians are being prevented from returning to take part in the current elections under the special arrangements agreed to by the Administrator-General; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We have on a number of occasions raised with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and with the South West African People's Organisation the question of detainees held in Angola. We will continue to support the efforts of the United Nations to trace those missing.

If the United Nations special representative certifies the elections to have been free and fair, it is vital that all sides accept that judgment, whatever the result.

Dr. Sadel Jawed Kadhum

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received as to the activities of Dr. Sadel Jawed Kadhum in relation to Iraqi intelligence matters.

Mr. Maude: None.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any member of his Department has ever communicated to persons outside his Department information concerning the relationship between Dr. Sadel Jawed Kadhum and Iraqi intelligence.

Mr. Maude: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any member of his Department has ever met Dr. Sadel Jawed Kadhum, director of Matrix Churchill, to discuss matters relating to Iraqi intelligence.

Mr. Maude: No.

Kampuchea

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) letters and (b) telephone calls have been received by his Department in the last three months concerning Government policy towards Kampuchea; and how many of these supported the policies of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Maude: We have received more than 3,600 letters and about 40 telephone calls over the last three months about our policy towards Cambodia. The majority of correspondents were critical of what they understood to be our policy.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 6 November.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 6 November.

There was brief discussion, on the basis of a Presidency progress report, of work on the various aspects of Frontiers policy. Like the Presidency, my right hon. Friend stressed the importance of effective action against the drugs menace.

In a brief discussion of economic and monetary issues, the Presidency, member states and the Commission indicated that further work should take account of the United Kingdom paper "An Evolutionary Approach to Economic and Monetary Union".

The Council formally adopted the EC/United States steel voluntary restraint arrangement and discussed various other EC/United States trade issues, including the dispute on hormones in meat.

As a further part of its programme to assist economic reform in Poland and Hungary, the Council agreed to liberalise as from 1 January 1990 all discriminatory import restrictions applied against Poland and Hungary. The Council also agreed in principle to add both countries to the list of countries benefiting from the EC's generalised scheme of preferences.

The Commission reported on progress in the GATT Uruguay round. The Council confirmed the importance it attached to a successful outcome to the round and welcomed the acceptance of the EC's offer of Brussels as a venue for the final meeting.

The Council approved in principle the generalised scheme of preferences for 1990.

The Council discussed follow-up to the audio-visual conference in Paris in October.

In the margins of the Council, I attended a biennial meeting of the EC/Egypt Co-operation Council. Separately, and in advance, my right hon. Friend also had a separate meeting with the Egyptian Foreign Minister.

HEALTH

Salaries

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the salary of (a) a community health council secretary, (b) a hospital secretary and (c) a family practitioner committee administrator, or their equivalent grades for (i) 1974 and (ii) currently.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Community health council secretaries are paid on grades and payscales negotiated in the administrative and clerical staffs Whitley council. It is for employing authorities to grade individual posts according to their particular range of responsibilities and activity. Information is not held centrally on individual posts, but the majority at 1 April 1974 were graded scale 9 (salary range £2,856 to £3,552 per annum) and from 1 April 1989 grade 6 in a new grading system (£11,962-£13,994). Changes in NHS organisation and the introduction of general management mean that the posts of hospital secretary and family practitioner committee administrator have no equivalent in the current structure. I shall write to the hon. Member setting out past information on these posts and the nature of changes affecting them.

Shropshire Health Authority

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he expects the West Midlands regional health authority to allocate funds to the Shropshire health authority on the same basis of calculation applied by his Department to the regional allocation.

Mr. Freeman: Ultimately, district health authorities will be funded on broadly the same basis as regional health authorities, although district allocations may need to take account of additional factors which reflect local circumstances. Regional health authorities will be expected to manage a smooth and careful transition to the new arrangements for funding districts, over a period of several years.

Domiciliary Care (Scotland)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to meet representatives of Scottish local authorities to discuss the new arrangements regarding Department of Social Security payments to local authorities for domiciliary care, to be introduced in April 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I understand that representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities (COSLA) have already met my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office to discuss community care. As part of preparations for implementing the Government's proposals for community care, Department of Health officials are holding a series of meetings with representatives of the local authority associations to discuss, among other matters, the arrangements for transferring to local authorities the resources which the Government would otherwise have provided to finance care through social security payments to people in residential and nursing homes. Representatives of COSLA have taken part in these discussions.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department expects to confirm an indemnity to Yorkshire water authority in connection with the fluoridation of water supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Yorkshire Water has indicated that because of the interconnected nature of the water supply system, it is prepared to consider requests to add fluoride to the water supply in future only provided that requests are received from all district health authorities within its water region boundaries. Such unanimity has not been achieved. A new indemnity has therefore not been requested by Yorkshire Water.

HIV

Mr. Chris Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the interval between a person being infected with HIV and the time when HIV antibodies can be ascertained by testing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is usually an interval of six to 12 weeks from infection with HIV to the development of antibodies detectable by routine screening methods. In some individuals the appearance of antibodies may be delayed, but in 95 per cent. of cases they are detectable within six months.

Women Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women doctors are employed by the Trent regional health authority; how many are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment; and what are the required hours of work in each category.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As at 30 September 1988 Trent regional health authority employed 785 (whole-time equivalent) full-time and 160 (wte) part-time permanent paid female medical staff in the hospital and community health service.

For junior hospital doctors—that is, senior registrars, registrars, senior house officers and house officers—the standard hours are 40 per week. For consultants and other grades the figure is 38·5 hours. Part-time junior hospital staff are contracted for a maximum of 36 hours per week, hospital practitioners for 17·5 hours per week and consultants and others for 31·5 hours. In community medicine full-time clinical staff are contracted for 37 hours per week and part-time staff for a maximum of 30 hours.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the incidence of salmonella Manchester.

Mr. Freeman: The public health laboratory service, division of enteric pathogens confirmed 33 human isolations of salmonella Manchester between 1 January and 3 November this year. Annual totals of human isolations of salmonella Manchester confirmed by the division of enteric pathogens for the period 1981-88 were 2, 0, 34, 9, 4, 28, 0 and 2 respectively.

Rapes (HIV Infection)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women are known to his Department to have tested seropositive for HIV subsequent to their being raped.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally by the communicable disease surveillance centre. One case of HIV infection following rape in the United Kingdom has been reported in the British Medical Journal (16 September 1989).

Social Workers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of social workers per 100,000 head of population in each of the London borough councils.

Mr. Freeman: The number of field social work staff as a rate per 100,000 population is set out in the table for each of the London boroughs and for the City of London.

London borough	Rates per 100,000 population September 1988
Camden (1984)	180·4
Greenwich	99·6
Hackney	99·1
Hammersmith	129·6
Islington	145·8
Kensington	162·7
Lambeth	155·4
Lewisham	132·2
Southwark	127·6
Tower Hamlets (1987)	124·1
Wandsworth	145·9
Westminster	152·2
City of London	527·8
Barking	48·5
Barnet	51·2
Bexley	49·2
Brent	86·7
Bromley	53·4
Croydon	47·2
Ealing	34·0
Enfield	74·5
Haringey	75·0
Harrow	90·7
Havering	45·0
Hillingdon	65·4
Hounslow	73·2
Kingston upon Thames (1978)	63·2
Merton	53·7
Newham	84·5
Redbridge	32·6
Richmond upon Thames	42·0
Sutton	72·7
Waltham Forest	105·0

The staff numbers are in whole-time equivalent terms and relate to returns for 30 September 1988. Where this return is not available, data from the most recent year's return has been used; the year of the return is shown.

Rates per 100,000 population are based on the mid-year population estimates for 1988. Where a previous year's return has been used, the appropriate year's population figure has also been used. Field social work staff includes field social work practitioners, community workers, trainee social workers, and social work (welfare) assistants.

Nineteen-eighty-eight data are provisional and subject to amendment.

Mental Health

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received during the past six months concerning the need to amend section 73 of the Mental Health Act 1983, relating to the discharge of part III patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A number of representations have been received, all originating from the National Union of Townswomen's Guilds, or its local branches.

The effect of an amendment to the legislation such as is proposed would be to turn the clock back to the situation as it was before the 1983 Act. I am not aware of any widely held view that this would be desirable. This particular aspect of the change in the law, promulgated in 1983, followed the judgment given on 5 November 1981 in X v United Kingdom, in which the European Court of Human Rights held that under article 5(4) of the European convention, a detained patient has a right of periodic access to a judicial body to determine the justification for continued detention. A mental health review tribunal, having an advisory power only, did not constitute a judicial body.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many projects for women undergoing post-abortion trauma are funded by his Department.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: One; the joint Royal College of General Practitioners and Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists study into "Attitudes to Pregnancy", which commenced in 1976.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce a requirement for clinics to inform his Department of the fees charged and monies collected for termination of pregnancy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department already approves the general level of fees in the case of registered pregnancy advice bureaux, and nursing homes with more than six beds, or more than 25 per cent. of their total beds, approved for the use of abortion cases. Bureaux and nursing homes are required to issue receipts. Copies of these are examined by officials of the Department on inspection visits.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to require that the unborn child about to undergo abortion should be administered an anaesthetic prior to the operation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is entirely a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor responsible.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to report to the ministries of justice in those countries which have time limits lower than the United Kingdom's the details of abortions which would violate their domestic laws.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Medical treatment of such patients in this country is subject to the usual rules of confidentiality.

Visually Handicapped People

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress his Department has made on the guidance to accompany the new BD8 form; and to what extent that guidance will be based on the recommendations of the working group established in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Work is currently in hand on the guidance to accompany the new form. The guidance will be based on the recommendations in the report "Co-ordinating Services for Visually Handicapped People" published earlier this year.

Pain Relief X-ray, Waltham Forest

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a central Government donation to Dr. Beverly Collett's appeal for a new pain relief X-ray machine in Waltham Forest health district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The distribution of resources to districts is a matter for regional health authorities. It is up to district health authorities to decide how best to allocate the resources available to them in the light of local health care needs and circumstances.

Life-saving Equipment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what bids he has received from Waltham Forest district health authority for provision of essential life-saving equipment at Whipps Cross hospital; what bids have been met; and what consideration he has given to the replacement life of current equipment at that hospital, and its implications for funding.

Mr. Freeman: The level of provision of health care services within a particular area is a matter for the health authority concerned, which is best able to judge the priorities for provision of services and equipment in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Community Care

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if his Department has drawn up any guidelines for the implementation of section 7 of the Disabled Person's (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his Department has received any guidelines drawn up by disability organisations for the implementation of section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

We have received proposed guidelines from a disability organisation for the implementation of section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. The Government's position on the implementation of section 7 will be made clear in the White Paper on Community Care which will be published shortly.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the number of psychiatric patients discharged from hospitals in the Greater London area into community care in each of the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not readily available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the role of community nurse managers and by whom they will be employed under the Government's proposals for care in the community.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Community nurse managers will continue to have central responsibility for the management of the community nursing services. The Government's proposals for community care will not affect their employment position.

Haemophiliacs (AIDS)

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received recent representations from the Haemophilia Society regarding compensation to haemophilia sufferers who contracted AIDS as a result of contaminated blood supplied to them through the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Representations have been received from the Haemophilia Society about compensation for people with haemophilia and HIV infection-AIDS.

Some haemophiliacs are now pursuing compensation through the courts and I am advised that this matter is now sub-judice.

Carl McGoldrick

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the reason for the delay in replying to the letter of 25 August from the hon. Member for Copeland asking for publication of the inquiry report into the death of Carl McGoldrick; when copies of the report will be made available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have written to the hon. Member.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received recent representations from the trade union movement about the ambulance drivers' dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Representations have been received by the Department from trade unions on the staff side of the ambulance Whitley councils. Representations have also been received from the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel, which claims to have within its membership over 20 per cent. of all ambulance personnel but is not represented on the staff side of the Whitley councils. No recent representations have been received from elsewhere in the trade union movement.

Foster Parents

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue instructions to local authority social services departments that their race-matching policy for children needing foster parents shall not be retrospective and that children happily placed with foster parents over a long period shall not be removed solely for racial reasons.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities have a statutory duty to give first consideration to the need to promote and safeguard the welfare of each child in care. A child's racial origin, cultural background and religion are important factors to be taken into account. But any decision made about a child on the basis of generalised and rigidly applied rules would not accord with the authority's duty to the child. It follows that a child should not be removed from a foster placement which is otherwise satisfactory solely because of the foster parents' race. We are considering what further guidance is needed to make this clear.

Medical Research

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to review the legislative control of non-National Health Service medical research practices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 November 1989]: The Government have no general proposals for legislation in this area. However, proposals for dealing with embryo research are set out in the White Paper "Human Fertilisation and Embryology: A Framework for Legislation". We intend to bring forward legislation on this as soon as possible.

Drugs (Development and Prescription)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new safeguards he intends to introduce for the development and the prescribing of drugs that act on the brain's 5HT receptors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 9 November 1989]: Satisfactory controls already exist under the Medicines Act to ensure that newly developed drugs are examined for safety quality and efficacy by the Committee on Safety of Medicines before a product licence is granted. Doctors exercise clinical judgment in deciding whether to prescribe new drugs and in doing so have regard to information from a wide variety of sources including product data sheets. We have no plans at present to introduce any further safeguards.

ENERGY

Sellafield

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from Länder administrations in the Federal Republic of Germany on health and safety standards at BNF Sellafield in relation to contracts with Federal German Utilities to reprocess spent fuel at Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No such representations have been made.

Power Stations (Coal)

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for each year from 1980 to 1988, inclusive, the annual figure for consumption of coal at (a) Cottam, (b) High Marnham and (c) West Burton power stations in Nottinghamshire; how many tons of this coal was supplied from Harworth colliery, Bevercoats colliery, Shireoaks-Steetley colliery and Manton colliery in Nottinghamshire; and how much from other United Kingdom collieries or imports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Arrangements for the delivery of coal from individual collieries to power stations are a matter for the day-to-day management of the Central Electricity Generating Board and British Coal. I am asking the chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Quality Industrial Users Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has carried out on the impact of privatisation of the electricity supply industry on the cost of electricity to large industrial users currently eligible for QUICS.

Mr. Spicer: The terms on which electricity is supplied after privatisation are a matter for negotiation between customers and their suppliers, subject to applicable statutory and licence obligations.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the 12 area boards about the impact on electricity prices of withdrawing Magnox and advanced gas-cooled reactors from the sale of the generating companies after vesting day under the Electricity Act;

(2) what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the 12 area boards about the withdrawal of nuclear power stations from the privatisation of the electricity generators under the terms of the Electricity Act 1989;

(3) what consultations he has had with the 12 area board chairmen in the electricity supply industry on the signing of contracts for nuclear power with the generating boards and companies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have discussions from time to time with area board chairmen on a wide range of issues.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his current estimate of the date for starting negotiations on nuclear power contracts between the Central Electricity Generating Board and its successor generating companies and the area boards;

(2) what is his latest estimate for the completion date of negotiations of nuclear power contracts between the Central Electricity Generating Board or National Power and the area boards;

(3) what is his latest estimate of the length of time required for negotiating nuclear power contracts between the nuclear generating companies and boards and the area boards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Negotiations on nuclear contracts are under way. I hope they will be brought to a conclusion as soon as possible.

Electricity (Sale of Assets)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his latest estimate of the net proceeds of the sale of the assets of the electricity supply industry under the terms of the Electricity Act;

(2) what is his latest estimate of the proceeds from the sale of the electricity supply industry;

(3) what is his current estimate of the Exchequer proceeds from the sale of the 12 area boards under the terms of the Electricity Act 1989, net of flotation and advertising costs;

(4) what is his current estimate of the Exchequer proceeds from the sale of the generating companies under the terms of the Electricity Act 1989 net of all flotation and advertising costs.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The market value of the generating companies and distribution companies will depend on a wide range of factors including the profitability of the companies, their capital structures, their future prospects and the state of the market. It is therefore too early to estimate the likely proceeds for the sale of the companies.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the total cost of decommissioning and nuclear waste management for the advanced gas-cooled reactors in England and Scotland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: These are matters for the CEGB and SSEB. I have asked the chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has for capping the liability of National Power to decommissioning and nuclear waste management costs after vesting day under the terms of the Electricity Act.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that my right hon. Friend made on 9 November at column 1175.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his current estimate for the completion of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry under the terms of the Electricity Act 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our aim remains to privatise the industry within the lifetime of this Parliament.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his current estimate of the date for flotation of the electricity generating companies under the terms of the Electricity Act;

(2) what is his current estimate of the proportion of the total assets of the electricity supply industry of Great Britain that will have been privatised under the terms of the Electricity Act by the end of (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government intend to float the successors to the area boards in the autumn of 1990, and to bring National Power and PowerGen to the market in the first half of 1991.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his current estimate of the date of vesting day under the Electricity Act.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our aim is to vest the new structure of the industry at the end of March 1990.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the level of the non-fossil fuel quota in England and Wales under the terms of the Electricity Act 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy on 9 November.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the level of tax losses to be carried forward in the balance sheets of the Central Electricity Generating Board and its successor generating companies under the terms of the Electricity Act.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The tax position of the CEGB is a matter for the board and the Inland Revenue, and is currently the subject of discussions between the two. The level of tax losses available to the successor companies will be determined in accordance with schedule 11 of the Electricity Act.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate on the level of capital write-offs to be made to the balance sheets of the Central Electricity Generating Board and its succcessor generating companies under the terms of the Electricity Act.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Asset values in the acccounts of the CEGB and its successor companies are a matter for the bodies concerned and their respective auditors.

Electricity Council

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his current estimate of the date for the abolition of the Electricity Council under the terms of the Electricity Act 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There will be certain residual and transitional operations which the Electricity Council will not be able to complete before the transfer date. The Electricity Act 1989 therefore provides for the council's continued existence until such operations are completed, when it will be dissolved by order.

The transitional period between the transfer date and the dissolution of the council is likely to be of several years' duration.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the average level of change in electricity prices in England and Wales for the first quarter of 1990, relative to the 1 April to 31 December 1989 level.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Electricity Council. I shall ask the chairman of the council to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the terms of the bulk supply tariff agreement for the first quarter of 1990 between the area electricity boards and the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I shall ask the Chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member.

EMPLOYMENT

Occupational Therapists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has concluded his inquiry into the future supply of occupational therapists; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 November 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

We will not have the manpower planning advisory groups' report on the future supply of occupational therapists until spring next year. I am aware of the recent publication of the report, "Occupational Therapy, An Emerging Profession In Health Care", by a commission headed by Louis Blom-Cooper QC. This report is one of a number of topics that will be discussed with the College of Occupational Therapists when my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health meets it later this month.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will give (a) the total public expenditure for each year from 1978-79 to 1989-90 showing the cost of each service in real terms and also as a percentage of the total and (b) the percentage growth of each service and of total expenditure in real terms.

Mr. Lamont: A breakdown of the public expenditure planning total by function for the years 1978-79 to 1989-90 in real terms (base year 1987-88), from which percentage changes can be derived, was given in table 21.4.7 of chapter 21 of the 1989 public expenditure White Paper (Cm 621). The proportions of total departmental spending devoted to particular functions was given in table 21.4.8 of the same publication.

The figures in both these tables are based on the definition of the planning total used in the 1988 and earlier public expenditure surveys. As announced in Cm 441, the Government have decided to change the definition of the planning total. The plans to be published in the Autumn Statement will be on the new definition.

Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the percentage rate of growth of business investment for each year from 1979 to 1989 on the assumption that all firms transferred from the public sector to the private sector in the decade had been in the private sector from before 1979;

(2) what is the percentage rate of growth of capital investment for each year from 1979 to 1989 on the assumption that all firms transferred from the public sector to the private sector in the decade had been in the private sector from before 1979;

(3) what is the year by year rate of growth of (a) business investment in the United Kingdom for each year 1979 to 1989, (b) business investment in the United Kingdom for each year 1979 to 1989, excluding all investment by firms transferred from the public sector to the private sector during the decade, (c) capital investment by manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom for each year from 1979 to 1989 and (d) capital investment by manufacturing industry from 1979 to 1989, excluding all firms transferred from the public sector to the private sector during the decade.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 7 November 1989]: For reasons of confidentiality, information of the kind requested relating to the movement of firms between sectors cannot be published. Estimates of total investment in fixed capital of public and private sector investment and of investment by manufacturing industry are given in chapter 13 of the 1989 edition of "United Kingdom National Accounts". Estimates, from 1979, of business investment in total are at current prices. They are given in the table.

Business investment [1] at current market prices, annual per cent. growth rates

	Per cent.
1979	17·6
1980	11·6
1981	−0·3
1982	6·8
1983	5·1
1984	13·4
1985	12·8
1986	3·1
1987	15·8
1988	22·1

[1] Business investment is defined as private sector and public corporations gross domestic fixed capital formation excluding purchases less sales of land and existing buildings and private sector investment in dwellings.

Agricultural Set-aside Schemes

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the costs to the Exchequer of set-aside schemes, showing income received from the EEC expenditure to farmers and the net expenditure saving to the Exchequer.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The expected cost to the Exchequer of payments in the current financial year is about £11 million, of which approximately 42 per cent. is reimbursable from the European guidance and guarantee fund. The net expenditure saving to the Exchequer depends on a number of factors: I will be in a better position to assess this once I have the results of an economic evaluation of the first year of the scheme. This evaluation is currently in progress.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Phytophthora Infestans

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been carried out in his Department into phytophthora infestans and with what result.

Mr. Maclean: Research conducted post-war by the advisory services has demonstrated the relationship between potato blight, caused by the fungus phytophthora infestans, and the economics of yield, and has determined the effects of weather on the proliferation of the disease from primary sources of infection in or near crops. This work has led to the formulation, in collaboration with the Meteorological Office, of weather-based schemes to forecast the initiation of epidemics and the need to begin protective programmes of fungicide sprays to control the disease.

The most recent research has been concerned with the control of potato blight with fungicides representing groups with different modes of action. Recently the main objective has been to monitor the distribution and incidence of strains of p. infestans resistant to the commonly used systemic fungicides and to evaluate the efficacy of proprietary products against natural epidemics in the field.

Since 1986, resistance to phenylamide fungicides has been widespread in England and Wales. In 1988 and 1989, about 80 per cent. of potato blight samples contained p. infestans resistant to phenylamides. Consequently, the phenylamide component of fungicides for the control of potato blight has become unreliable. There have been no observations of resistance developing to other fungicide groups. Research has led to recommendations for the use of fungicides which will control the disease in the presence of phenylamide-resistance.

The effect of the timing of fungicide sprays in relation to irrigation has also been investigated. Applications of the fungicide mancozeb one day before, one day after or five days after irrigation were equally effective in controlling potato blight.

A survey of British potato crops (1986 and 1987) has shown that strains of p. infestans capable of stimulating sexual reproduction have entered the country. The risks of consequent genetic evolution towards more virulent strains of the pathogen, towards the development of insensitivity of fungicides, and towards the ability of such strains to persist in soil as viable spores are being evaluated.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has also funded work, co-ordinated by the National Institute of Agricultural Botany, on the evaluation of new varieties of potatoes. This work includes an assessment of varietal resistance to p. infestans, the results of which are made available in the National Institute of Agricultural Botany farmer's leaflet "Recommended Varieties of Potatoes."

Straw and Stubble Burning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to stop straw and stubble burning by farmers on their land in 1990.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 9 November 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter), Official Report, column 1158.

EC (Guarantees)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the relative proportions of expenditure, in percentage terms, by the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund on (a) guarantee, and (b) guidance sections for each of the last five years, for (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the European Community as a whole.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is as follows:

Percentage of Guarantee/Guidance Expenditure for United Kingdom and European Community as a whole (1984-88)

	Guarantee	Guidance	Total
1984
United Kingdom	94·66	5·34	100

EC (Financial Support)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial support was given to agriculture in each of the member states of the European Economic Community in each of the last three years.

Mr. Maclean: Payments to member states for agricultural support under the common agricultural policy from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund (EAGGF) in each of the last three years were as follows:

EAGGF payments to member states for budget years 1986-88

Nuvan 500

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy in regard to the use of the chemical Nuvan 500 in fish farming.

Mr. Curry: Aquagard sea lice treatment (formerly Nuvan fish 500 EC) is licensed under the Medicines Act 1968 for the treatment of farmed salmon. The terms of the licence include strict conditions which must be observed by the user and are set out in the product labels. These include the need first to obtain a discharge consent from the local water authority. The licence is subject to review in June 1990.

Eggs

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the incidence of release of eggs on to the open market after being found by the port authority to be salmonella contaminated.

Mr. Curry: The arrangements for sampling imported eggs for salmonella contamination were explained in my answer to the hon. Member for East Lothian of 1 November, at column 210. Eggs are not detained and therefore the question of them being released (or not) when the test results become available does not arise.

PCBs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which British coastal waters the greatest contamination of PCBs have been discovered.

Mr. Curry: As a consequence of world-wide PCB use and release PCBs can be detected in most marine species, using sensitive analytical techniques. Within British coastal waters levels are generally highest in the north-east Irish sea/Liverpool bay area.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence of PCB contamination of British coastal waters has been discovered following the analysis of dead cetaceans.

Mr. Curry: Concentrations of PCBs in British coastal waters and cetaceans reflect inputs from world-wide sources. The analyses of dead cetaceans give no grounds for suspicion that PCB concentrations found were caused by a particular local discharge.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 159

SESSION 1988–89

30th October—10th November 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
